Woodland Country Club, Chatsworth, N. J.

Winter Country Club
Camp and Bungalow Colony

A party of congenial business and professional men recently acquired the beautiful property now known as the Woodland Country Club, located on the Jersey Central Railroad, midway between Lakewood and Atlantic City, in the heart of the pine forest area of Southern New Jersey, with a dry tempered pine atmosphere, far superior to Lakewood.

This property comprises over 5,000 acres of land, about nine miles of picturesque river and Lake Shamong. It was improved by its former owners at a cost of over $200,000.00, with commodious and modern club buildings, woodland walks and drives, golf links, tennis courts, etc.

This entire property was "found" and acquired for an amount less than the actual cost of the improvements thereon; the Woodland Country Club was organized in April, 1911, and the clubhouse opened and the property put in first-class condition at an additional expenditure of about $50,000.

The Club is conducted like an old-fashioned Virginia Plantation. Accommodations and all supplies furnished at cost without further charges of any kind to members, their families and guests.

Each member may personally select an acre Bungalow site, which is deeded to him, free and clear, without cost or other obligations. No dues for five years, no assessments of any kind at any time

Upon the opening of the third season the Governing Committee invites to membership a limited number of socially agreeable business and professional men on the original and favorable basis on which this beautiful property was acquired. Total cost $300. Limited Membership $100.

A letter addressed to the Secretary, 430 Marbridge Building, corner Broadway and 34th St., New York City, will bring photographic views, list of members from many States, and full particulars.

★ Servette Serves Your Meals Better Than a Maid

The most welcome Christmas gift for any woman is Servette, because it solves one of her vexing problems—how to serve the meals satisfactorily without the aid of a maid.

Servette is a "serve-self" arrangement, consisting of a revolving plate glass top upon a handsome base. Standing in the centre of your table, it enables the diners to help themselves without disturbing or interrupting others.

It renders a maid's services unnecessary, promotes sociability at meals and saves hundreds of steps. It is not only useful but is ornamental. Liberal Trial Offer.

WRITE TO-DAY FOR CATALOG showing different styles of Servette, so that you can make your selection in time to have it arrive before Christmas. We include handsomely engraved Christmas card with name of giver.

What is Economy in a Refrigerator?

Compared with the ice expense, the first cost shrinks into insignificance. The Refrigerator which is thoroughly efficient with the smallest consumption of ice is unquestionably the least expensive in the end.

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

is enabled by the Syphon System of rapidly circulating pure, dry air, to keep its temperature down to 40°. Naturally ice melts very slowly at only 8° above freezing. Moreover, the insulation of the Bohn Refrigerator is the most effective ever devised for heat resistance. Besides the wood cases and lining, the walls have 7 heat-resisting layers, including two of Flaxlinum, the exclusive Bohn insulating material. It is significant that practically all Refrigerator and Dining Cars in use to-day are equipped with the Bohn System. The Car Builders know!

Model No. 43, Style A, (illustrated above), size 39x21¼x48½ inches, ice capacity 125 pounds, price $48, is an exceptional value. Many other styles and sizes—all reasonably priced—all beautifully made—all with the wonderful Bohn System. Call or write for illustrated catalog.

EXPECTS FOWLER TO REVEAL ALL

Whitman Sends Ultimatum to "Bagman"—To Tell or Go to Prison.

GETS TIME TO CONSIDER

BAGMEN HAD SCHEDULES

State "Sandbaggers," Whitman Learns, Worked Under a System—Where Extortion Lies.

Everett P. Fowler of Kingston, lawyer and member of a distinguished family of Ulster County, who is under indictment for extorting $250 from Seneca P. Hull, a State road contractor of Cortland, N. Y., received yesterday District Attorney Whitman's ultimatum. It was delivered to him by William D. Cunningham, District Attorney of Ulster County, who appeared before Mr. Whitman in his study as Fowler's attorney.

This was the Whitman ultimatum: Tell everything you know about the conspiracy of politicians, legislators, and lawyers to bleed contractors on State work and to loot the State, or go to Sing Sing Prison.

Fowler, after receiving this ultimatum at his hotel, was permitted to return to his family in Kingston for a week-end reflection. He will arrive in the city again at 11:15 o'clock to-morrow morning, and he will have until noon to choose his course. If he has decided by that time to tell what he knows he will be ushered into District Attorney Whitman's office, and a stenographer and several witnesses will hear his story.

If he has decided to stand trial, Mr. Whitman's men will serve a bench warrant, and Fowler, as a prisoner, will be taken before Judge Crain in General Sessions. Under the latter circumstances Mr. Whitman would have no desire whatever to talk with him, and he would be put in the Tombs to stay until bail was provided.

"The chances are ten to one, it was said last night, that Fowler will confess. And the confession, it is expected, will be the most sensational given in the District Attorney's office for many a day. It will lay the foundation, it is believed, for a blanket conspiracy indictment in which nearly a score of politicians will be named and will trace the graft to the men whom District Attorney Whitman has suspected for many years. That is why the indictment of Everett P. Fowler is regarded as of the utmost importance.

Friends Advised Confession.

Supporting the belief that Fowler will confess is the fact that Fowler promised a number of his friends a week ago that he would tell everything to District Attorney Whitman. Information has reached THE NEW YORK TIMES that Fowler, as soon as he heard of the threatened indictment and the subsequent breakdown in the witness chair of George H. McGuire of Syracuse, sought three influential men in Kingston. Fowler told these men, it is said, that he saw trouble ahead for himself. He asked the advice of these men. They told him to rush to Whitman before it was too late. Fowler told those three men that he would follow their advice.

Fowler did come to the city after talking with these friends. He came ostensibly to see Whitman, but he hesitated. Instead of going to Whitman he went to men who were involved with him in the threatening exposure. He sought the counsel of these men and got it. They told him to hold off. He yielded, to his sorrow. He held off too long, for District Attorney Whitman, with the aid of his college classmate, former Assistant District Attorney Edwin Duffy of Cortland County, got Fowler, and got him right.

The belief that Fowler will confess is strengthened by the fact that Fowler knows of some of the evidence Mr. Whitman has against him. Fowler knows that Mr. Whitman has the letters of William H. Kelley, Democratic boss of Onondaga County, arranging for a meeting between Fowler and Contractor Hull. He knows that Hull as a witness would have great weight with a jury. Fowler knows, too, that Mr. Whitman has evidence in reserve. He got an inkling of some of these things from his own counsel, District Attorney Cunningham.

Of most influence in Fowler's case is the honor of the Fowler family. Fowler's father was a Judge in Ulster County. There never has been any intimation that Fowler himself kept any of the money which he collected from State contractors. It is known, in fact, that Fowler always asked for checks and not for cash, and the checks, it is known, were made payable to others. Mr. Whitman, it is said, believes that Fowler received no direct remuneration for his services as one of the Tammany "bagmen." Fowler, it is said, acted the part of the "bagman" because he was politically ambitious. By serving the "big fellows" he thought that he would earn a place for himself in the bigger political machine. He has everything to gain, therefore, it is argued, by a confession, and even has a chance of saving the honor of his family.

Fowler Evades a Detective.

Fowler came to this city yesterday morning. When he boarded the train at Kingston Detective Russo of Mr. Whitman's staff was camping on the Fowler doorstep armed with a bench warrant. Russo had been there since 6 P. M. on Friday. Fowler, it seems, did not spend Friday night at his home. He conferred with his attorney all night, it was said, and was advised by his attorney to surrender. With Fowler and Cunningham came two men whose names were not learned. It was said

FEAR HORSE SHOW ARRESTS

Seated among the officials of the National Horse Show Association at Madison Square Garden last night was Harold Norris of the National Surety Company. He was there ready to give a bond at a moment's notice for any of the officials of the association, as it was rumored that a man whose application to enter horses in the show had been rejected had planned the arrest of one or more of them on a charge of criminal libel.

The man who failed to get permission to show his horses has appeared recently at similar events at Long Branch, Syracuse, and Rochester. Unfavorable rumors regarding him got afloat, and when he sent in his application to the Horse Show an investigation was made, which resulted in its refusal.

When he came to the officials on Friday and the disappointed horseman had declared that he would get revenge by causing the arrest of Secretary James T. Hyde and other officials in criminal libel. Fearing that such an effort might be made at an hour when it would be difficult to obtain bail, A. F. Aldridge, the publicity agent of the association, arranged for the presence last night of Mr. Norris.

It was stated last night, however, that friends who believed the rejected applicant to be a victim of a case of mistaken identity had induced him to give up his plan.

CALLS HER A PICKPOCKET.

When the Culver Line elevated train reached Thirty-sixth Street, Brooklyn, at 6 o'clock last night a man who was standing in one of the cars, clutched the wrist of a girl who was reading a book in a seat in front of him, jerked her to her feet, and accused her of picking his pocket of $22.

He had seen the girl, he declared, take the money out of his pocket as they were boarding the train at Brooklyn Bridge. He had watched her take her seat, and had then placed himself in front of her, intending to follow her off the car and cause her arrest. But when he got to the Thirty-sixth Street station, his regular station, he had determined not to go any further, but to have the girl searched or taken to the station house from there.

The girl cried and protested her innocence. She had no money with her, she said, except her week's salary of $4 from Smith & Scott, packers at 74 Hudson Street. Her accuser wanted to have her searched at once, but the other passengers would not hear of it. Several of them accompanied the two to the Fourth Avenue Station.

Here the man, who said he was Thomas McGowan, an ironworker of 5,712 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, told his story to the Lieutenant, and the girl was searched by the matron of the jail. She reported that the girl was carrying only $4.

McGowan, however, insisted on lodging a charge of grand larceny against her, and she was held for a hearing in the Fourth Avenue Court to-day. The girl gave the name of Rose Belinsky, and said she was 18 years old and lived with her parents and eleven brothers and sisters at 1,256 Thirty-ninth Street, Brooklyn.

KNOX SEEKS GOVERNORSHIP

Anxious to be Nominated in Pennsylvania Primary Next May.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 15.—Philander C. Knox, ex-Secretary of State and ex-United States Senator, will allow his name to be entered in the State-wide primary in May as a candidate for Governor, according to an announcement made to-day.

Mr. Knox is reported by his associates as eager to win the Governorship, a position he sought four years ago and to obtain which he would have resigned as Secretary of State.

Mr. Knox is regarded as a stanch Republican, but those who are urging his candidacy, encouraged by Progressive Republicans in Pittsburgh, are uncertain whether to ask support from the Progressives as well as Republicans.

Influential Progressives are considering the advisability of naming Mr. Knox on their ticket in the hope that he will receive the Republican nomination also. Their plan is to fuse in a natural way on Governor and Congressmen and concentrate their battle in November against Senator Penrose. Whatever the outcome of this plan, it is asserted with positiveness that Mr. Knox will be a candidate for Governor, whether he is backed by Senator Penrose and the organization leaders of not.

$34,311,000 WENT TO CROPS

Missouri and Illinois Took Most of Treasury Fund for Moving Them.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Almost two-thirds of the $50,000,000 the Treasury Department put at the disposal of the banks of the country to aid in the movement of crops has been taken, according to an announcement to-day by Secretary McAdoo. The exact figures are $34,311,000, and probably a few more millions will be taken in the West before the end of the year. No part of the money will be asked for by the Treasury until December.

One of the surprises was the amount taken by the District of Columbia, which contains about forty-two square miles, a large part of the area being in the City of Washington. The District took $528,000, while Texas, which could contain many Districts in its borders, took only $900,000.

Missouri leads with $4,775,000. Illinois is second with $4,000,000, and California and New Mexico are lowest with $50,000 each.

Robert H. Hazzard's Home Burned.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Nov. 15.—The new residence of Robert H. Hazzard, near Johnsons, Orange County, was destroyed by fire to-night, together with a large barn. No one was at home, as the family had gone to New York for the Winter. Mr. Hazzard is teller in the Park Avenue Bank. The loss is put at $15,000.

TYSON & CO. CLIENTS PAY $10,000 EXCESS

200 Opera Subscribers Besiege Bank's Office, but Only 26 Make Second Payment.

TO MEET AND PLAN ACTION

The Metropolitan Trust Company of 49 Wall Street, set up a temporary box office yesterday in the Hotel Manhattan, where it offered to deliver to the subscribers of the theater ticket agency of Tyson & Co., with main offices at 1,122 Broadway, $54,000 worth of Metropolitan Opera tickets, remaining of the $150,000 allotment turned over to the trust company by the ticket agency as collateral for a loan of $100,000. The Metropolitan Trust Company delivered the tickets only to those persons who presented the receipts of Tyson & Co., and who paid, pro rata, the amount for which the tickets were pledged.

Approximately 200 patrons of the ticket agency, whose tickets were tied up, visited the temporary office of the trust company, but at the close of the day, according to an announcement by the Metropolitan Trust Company, only twenty-six of them had procured their season tickets by a second payment amounting to a little less than the face value of the tickets. At the close of the day's business, the legal representative of the bank said $10,000 had been paid in.

Most of the callers were women, and with the twenty-six exceptions, all preferred to wait a while before paying a second time for the tickets they had subscribed for, so that they might consult their attorneys. There were few who went away from the office without threatening some kind of legal action in case they failed to obtain their tickets. There was talk of an injunction to prevent the sale of the tickets to any one else, as well as of an action to replevin those that might be sold. Some of the patrons even threatened to call in the Sheriff and the District Attorney.

In fact, the office of the District Attorney was kept busy all day by angry subscribers of the ticket agency, asking what legal way there might be for them to seek redress in case of the loss of their tickets. They were so insistent in their demands that District Attorney Whitman, last night, said that he had assigned Assistant District Attorney Lockhart to make an investigation and report to him to-morrow.

"I have been in touch with the situation all day," said Mr. Whitman, "and we have been doing all that we can to find out whether a wrong has been done to the patrons of Tyson & Co., and if so, who is responsible. At present, however, I do not know whether there has been a violation of the law."

Trust Company's Defense.

The Metropolitan Trust Company, through a representative of Carter, Ledyard & Milburn of 54 Wall Street, counsel, assured the newspapermen yesterday of the trust company's confidence that it was within its legal rights in conducting delivery of the tickets pledged to it by Tyson & Co.

This question was asked the representative of the attorneys: "On what grounds does the Metropolitan Trust Company justify its demand of a second payment by the subscribers of Tyson & Co. for the tickets given by this agency as collateral for the loan from the Metropolitan Trust Company?"

The reply was: "Our position is that the tickets were delivered by an officer of the Metropolitan Opera Company in the presence of the President of Tyson & Co. to the Metropolitan Trust Company, and that the legal situation is that the possessor of those tickets was not Tyson & Co., and that they never got a clear title to the tickets except subject to the lien of the Metropolitan Trust Company, and, therefore, that there cannot be any title to the subscribers of Tyson & Co., because they have nothing but a right to action against Tyson & Co. They simply have a contract from Tyson & Co. to deliver the seats."

The management of the Metropolitan Opera Company denied yesterday that any member of the management had said that the tickets were to be hypothecated for a loan from the Metropolitan Trust Company. One of the managers explained that when the $150,000 allotment of tickets was delivered to R. J. Hartman, head of Tyson & Company, he offered to pay for the allotment with a check on the Metropolitan Trust Company. Thereupon the tickets were placed in a taxicab, and Earl Lewis of the Metropolitan Opera House box office was sent down with Mr. Hartman and the tickets to the Metropolitan Trust Company to have the check certified. He said it was the understanding of the management of the opera company that the tickets were to be deposited in a safety vault of the Metropolitan Trust Company.

This explanation was made by the management of the Metropolitan Opera Company because they believed that a statement of a representative of the attorneys for the trust company, published in THE TIMES yesterday, implied that the management of the Metropolitan Opera Company was aware that the tickets were obtained for use as collateral on a loan. The statement read:

The Metropolitan Opera tickets, held by the Metropolitan Trust Company, never were in the hands of Tyson & Co. Tyson & Co. had to pay cash for their allotment of tickets to the Metropolitan Opera Company. They borrowed the money from the Metropolitan Trust Company, and the tickets were delivered in the presence of representatives of Tyson & Co. and the Metropolitan Opera Company to the Metropolitan Trust Company.

The only other announcement made by the Metropolitan Opera Company was that it would "honor only the regular tickets issued by the opera company." On Friday the management announced that the Metropolitan Opera Company would make arrangements so that every person holding a "clear title to a seat" would be taken care of. The management decided that a "regular ticket was the only "clear title."

Promise an Adjustment.

Tyson & Co. announced that its patrons were entitled to their tickets from the trust company, and that if further payment was exacted by the trust company from the owners of the tickets, an adjustment would be made by Tyson & Co. with its patrons at the earliest possible moment. At the main offices of Tyson & Co. no one could be found who could explain what provisions had been made by the ticket agency to compensate its subscribers who had been forced to pay twice.

Announcement.

Nov. 15, 1913.

Owing to a change from the practice of former years respecting terms of payment for subscriptions for Metropolitan Opera seats, Tyson & Co. were required to pay

EDNA HARDENBERGH STRANGELY MISSING

With her school books under her arm, sixteen-year-old Edna Hardenbergh set forth on Thursday morning from her home at 31 Lake Street, Gravesend, bound for the school, a mile and a half away, at Avenue P and Homecrest Avenue, beyond the border in Sheepshead Bay. It was her custom to cut the distance by entering the old, abandoned Gravesend race track at the gate, only two blocks from her home, and walk across the track to the hole in the fence that would take her to Ocean Parkway.

Since she entered the race track grounds on Thursday morning, her father, Louis Hardenbergh, and the police of the Coney Island station, have been unable to find any trace of her or to find any one who saw her. From that moment she appears to have dropped completely out of sight.

When the girl did not return as usual after school time inquiries were made at the school, and it was found that she had not been there all day. A hasty canvass was then made of the few chums with whom she might conceivably have gone home, and they all said they had not seen Edna that day. Then, with the co-operation of Principal William Sheehan, the worried father went among all the members of 8A at the school, and this brought no light on her whereabouts.

Mr. Hardenbergh is a reporter for the New York City News Association, of which his brother, J. E. Hardenbergh, is the manager. The father went to work at once on the recognition of three possibilities. He thought she might have been struck by some automobile on Ocean Parkway, just beyond the race track, and carried off to some hospital, injured but alive. Every hospital has been visited, and there has been no trace of her found through them.

He thought she might have been kidnapped by some motor party on the parkway. And as his third possibility, he recognized the fact that she might have been attacked by some one of the loiterers, negroes, or whites, who still hang about the old race track grounds, doing odd jobs and sleeping, if need be, in one of the stables—the possibility that she never reached the Ocean Parkway.

Both Mr. Hardenbergh and the police of the Coney Island Station, who were notified of the disappearance on Friday afternoon, have combed the race track grounds, searching in every building and shack. They have failed to find the slightest trace of the girl there or of any of her belongings.

The negro watchman usually to be found at or near the entrance to the race track, told the father he had seen the girl enter that way on Thursday morning, but whether she headed straight for the opening across the track or whether she reached it he says he did not notice.

In leaving home Thursday morning Edna said nothing and did nothing to indicate that she had the slightest notion of going anywhere except to school. Nor among her things at home was there found anything to hint that she had had any other intention. She left no note and took with her nothing but the clothes she wore—a blue dress with short skirts and a heavy blue white-trimmed overcoat. Her hat was a gray Tam o'Shanter with feathers in it.

The notion that she could have gone away deliberately was scouted at her home, where they knew her for a girl who clung to her home, and who, of late, had stayed close to it most of the time because of her mother's illness. This feeling of confidence has not misled Mr. Hardenbergh into failing to make the most exhaustive inquiries among all the places where she might possibly have gone. These inquiries have been absolutely fruitless.

Edna Hardenbergh was the only child at home, for the other two sisters are married.

The work of the father and the police was supplemented last night by the efforts of the Gravesend Board of Trade. Twenty-five members of this organization were going over the ground and lending their aid in the search for the girl. Every little while the "no news" message was sent to the Hardenbergh home, where the mother had been joined by her two daughters, Miss Ethel Holmes and Mrs. Mary Turner.

There it was said that Edna had only ten cents with her when she left home on Thursday morning. They are placing such hope as they have largely on the girl's bravery, which she had had occasion to show more than once. Only a few weeks ago she was on guard at the Lake Street home when her father was away and burglars came. She chosen them away with a shotgun.

LAKE CO. CAN'T FINISH NEW SUBMARINES

Lack of Funds and Labor Law Cause Famous Company to Drop $2,401,000 Contract.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The Lake Torpedo Boat Company of Bridgeport, Conn., has notified the Navy Department that for want of funds it must abandon its contracts for submarines and has asked the Department to finish the boats it has under way. It is understood that the restriction imposed by Congress in the Navy Appropriation Act of 1912, requiring contractors to observe the eight-hour labor law, accounts for the company's action.

No disposition will be made of the matter until Secretary Daniels's return from a Western trip on which he will start to-morrow.

The Lake Company has contracts for the construction of five submarines. They are known as G-2, G-3, L-5, L-6, and L-7. The contract price of the first is $410,000, of the second $455,000, and of the others $512,000 each, a total of $2,401,000.

According to the Navy Bureau of Construction and Repair, G-2 is 88.3 per cent. finished, G-3 72 per cent., L-5 only 7.3 per cent finished, while the other two boats have not been laid down. G-2 was authorized by Congress in 1908, G-3 in 1909, and the rest were authorized in the Navy act of Aug. 24, 1912.

Rumors current that the failure of the Lake Company to finish these boats involved work on ten or twelve submarines and an amount running up into the millions are not borne out by the statements of navy officials. Secretary Daniels has decided that in view of there being no pressing need of these submarines he will make every effort to enable the Lake Company to get under headway again and carry out its contracts.

Mr. Daniels desires to have these finished, and has no doubt of the security of the Navy Department in the contract. He has said he will first try to help the Lake Company, so that it can go on with its work, and if he fails in that he will look to the bondsmen to finish the boats.

The Government will not take over the work. The navy now has forty-seven submarines built and under contract, and the manoeuvring that has been accomplished by these small craft in recent years has demonstrated fully their remarkable value in actual warfare.

The failure of the Lake Company to make good with its contracts will have no effect whatever on the navy policy of building submarines. There are sixteen submarines under construction besides those contracted for by the Lake Company. They are being built by the Fore River Shipbuilding Company of Fore River, Mass., and the Union Iron Works of San Francisco. The Lake Company was expected to build two of its boats at Long Beach, Cal. These are the two that have not been begun.

WATCHING THE EGG CORNER.

McReynolds May Act Against Interests Keeping Up High Prices.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The Department of Justice is watching the alleged corner in eggs, and may take a hand in compelling combinations to lift the embargo. Investigations have been in progress for several weeks in various parts of the country as to operations that usually begin every Fall to create a dearth of eggs in the market. Attorney General McReynolds has so far adhered to the policy of letting local authorities deal with such combinations, as he believes they are better prepared to do so than the Government.

There is, however, ample authority under the Sherman anti-trust law for the Government to prosecute all combinations for attempting to control the price of food products. In the egg industry especially the Government can act, because the product is one that inevitably must be collected from a wide territory, and the interstate principle applies at once "from the hen to the consumer," as the Attorney General puts it.

WIRELESS SAVES 103 FROM BURNING SHIP

CATCH S O S CALL AT NIGHT

The wireless yesterday flashed the news of another sea horror averted when the Captain of the Cunard liner Pannonia reported having rescued 103 passengers from the Spanish steamship Balmes, which was burning in midocean. The message was relayed by way of Bermuda, and told how the Pannonia had caught the S O S call of the distressed ship last Thursday, had altered her course, and sped 180 miles to the position of the Balmes, stood by her throughout the night, and rescued her passengers at daybreak on Friday morning.

This was the message the Captain of the Pannonia flashed to Bermuda:

Latitude 35, longitude 54, the Spanish steamer Balmes of the Pinillos Line, bound from Havana to Spain, with 103 passengers and a cargo of cotton and rum, signaled for assistance. In reply to the S. O. S. call, "Am on fire, require help," the Pannonia steamed 180 miles south and at 7 P. M., Nov. 13, found the Balmes and accompanied her all night.

On Nov. 14, Friday, at daylight we transferred her 103 passengers to the Pannonia. Captain will not abandon his ship for the present unless compelled to do so. I have arranged to accompany Balmes to Bermuda so as to render it perfectly safe. The Balmes is in a dangerous condition. Our average speed is eight knots. Passengers and crew are all well. At 10 A. M., New York time, ships are two hundred miles east of Bermuda. CAPPER, S. S. Pannonia.

The Balmes is a vessel of about 5,000 gross tonnage which trades between Galveston, New Orleans, Havana, and Spanish ports. She sailed from Galveston on Oct. 26, New Orleans on the 31st, and Havana Nov. 6 with a cargo of cotton, sugar, and rum. She carries a crew of fifty-five men and is commanded by Capt. Ruiz.

The Pannonia is one of the regular Cunard steamers of the smaller class trading between New York and the Mediterranean.

The first news of the Balmes's distress came through a wandering wireless message picked up by the Marconi operator at Cape Race, N. F., which purported to come from the Captain of the Pannonia, but it was thought to be a "freak" message because it was estimated that the Pannonia was nearly 1,000 miles from Cape Race when it was received. This message read:

"The Pannonia reports that she is convoying the steamer Balmes, which is on fire, to Bermuda. Her passengers have been transferred to the Pannonia and are all safe."

The Cunard agents were unable to explain the message. They said the last report they had received from the Pannonia was a message on Wednesday night saying that she was 1,100 miles east of Sandy Hook at 7 o'clock and that the captain expected to arrive in New York at noon to-day. She was coming from the Mediterranean ports and had left Fiume on Oct. 25.

Nothing more was heard of the disaster until 1 o'clock yesterday, when the Cunard line received this cable from Lloyd's agent in Bermuda:

Pannonia reports by wireless escorting to Bermuda Spanish steamer Balmes, cargo cotton and rum, on fire, in critical condition. All Balmes's passengers, 103, on Pannonia, all well. Position about 600 miles east of Bermuda. We will keep you fully posted. JAMES, LLOYDS AGENTS

The officials at the Maritime Exchange, where the bulletins were posted as soon as they were received, took this to mean that the Captain and crew of the Balmes were sticking to their ship, after the passengers had been transferred, in the hope of being able to keep the flames below deck until she reached Bermuda. In case the fire spread all over the ship and she became unsafe the Pannonia, steaming along in company with the Balmes, would be able to take them off. The inflammable nature of the cargo—cotton, sugar, and rum—according to the expert marine insurance brokers, made it doubtful that the crew would manage to keep the fire down for another twenty-four hours.

Capt. E. J. Roberts, Marine Superintendent of the Cunard Line, said last night that the fact of the Balmes having made 400 miles in convoy of the Pannonia since her passengers were transferred on Friday morning, proved that the crew were keeping the fire in hand, and he believed the Balmes had a good chance of reaching Bermuda safely.

The Captain added that the Pannonia would leave Bermuda as soon as possible after the Balmes arrived, and he expected her to reach New York on Tuesday afternoon. The transfer of the passengers must have been favored with fine weather, for there was no mention in any of the messages of any difficulty arising from wind or sea.

Another message was received from Capt. Capper by the Cunard agents at 9 o'clock last night, which said that the ships were steaming along and hoped to make Bermuda this afternoon. The Captain also said he intended to bring the passengers of the Balmes straight to New York.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 15.—The steamer Balmes reported to be burning at sea, carried 15 passengers in the steerage, according to her agents, Sevilla & Vila. They said the steamer carried no first or second class passengers when she left Havana, and that the orders of the owners, Pinillos Izquierdo y Cia of Cadiz were to leave room for steerage passengers only, when loading. These passengers were taken aboard at Havana, and there is no way of getting their names here.

The Balmes was supplied with wireless under the Imperial law compelling all steamers plying to any American port to be equipped with aerial instruments and two operators. She had plenty of lifeboats.

The Balmes left New Orleans on Oct. 25 for Galveston, where she took on board about 5,000 bales of cotton and a general cargo. She sailed for Havana on Oct. 30, where she was scheduled to take on her passengers and some mixed freight. She is reported to have left Havana on Nov. 6.

COLLIER'S CREW OF 42 LOST.

St. Lawrence Wreckage Indicates Fate of Bridgeport and All Aboard.

MONTREAL, Nov. 15.—The steam collier Bridgeport from Sydney, Cape Breton, bound for this port with a crew of forty-two and a cargo of 10,000 tons of coal, has been lost and probably all aboard have perished, according to an official announcement made to-day by the Dominion Coal Company, which chartered the vessel.

Wreckage found on the shores of Bird Rock Island in the St. Lawrence River, according to information received by the Dominion Coal Company, had been identified sufficiently to make reasonably certain the presumption that the lost vessel was the Bridgeport. No word of the crew has been received.

500 AMERICANS IN PERIL.

Unable to Leave Mexican Oil Fields, May Have to Fight for Lives.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 15.—Wireless messages from American warships now in Mexican waters, according to reports received here, state that 500 Americans, unable to leave the district between Tuxpam and Tampico, where there is fierce fighting between the rebels and Federals, may have to fight to save their lives.

The gunboat Wheeling is reported at anchor in Panuco River and has on board several refugees from Tampico.

The Eagle oil plant, belonging to the Pearson Syndicate, and employing about 500 persons, located near Tampico, has been forced to close.

HALDANE'S MEDAL STOLEN.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—A curious incident which occurred in connection with Lord Haldane's address at the University of Edinburgh yesterday has just come to light.

The programme included the presentation to his lordship of a presidential badge, but when the officials went to get it where it had been deposited shortly before the proceedings commenced it could not be found. After a fruitless search the university officials sent hastily to the jeweler's to procure an empty case, so that the presentation ceremony might be gone through. Although Lord Haldane knew the case was empty he received the supposed badge with all due gravity.

Suffragettes were suspected of having purloined the medal, and after the ceremony the students marched to the militant suffragette rooms and partly wrecked them.

DIAZ SHOOTING RE-ENACTED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Nov. 15.—The scene of Gen. Felix Diaz's shooting affray was re-enacted in the male convict ward of the prison hospital this afternoon in the presence of the Judge and of the lawyers for the defense and prosecution. Gen. Diaz was not present, as he is still confined to his room.

Harry Berliner, Diaz's friend, repeated his version of the attack upon Diaz from behind, while the friends of Pedro Guerrero Mendez, who accuses Diaz of shooting him, told opposite stories, declaring that he approached Diaz from the front.

Diaz's blood-stained clothes were exhibited. The coat shows that the knife with which he was stabbed penetrated the coat collar.

IRISH PEER TURNS MOSLEM.

Lord Headley's Conversion Announced to Islamic Society.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—At a meeting of the Islamic Society to-day Imam Kwaja Kiamiluddin announced the conversion to Mohammedism of Lord Headley, an Irish Peer having a seat in the House of Lords.

Lord Headley, the fourth Baron of his house, has been the representative Peer for Ireland since 1883. He was born at Brighton on Dec. 4, 1845, the son of the third Baron and Marie, daughter of the late Maj. D'Arley. He married Miss Bessie Blennerhassett, whose father, the Rev. John Blennerhassett, was rector of Ryme, Dorsetshire, and was educated at the Harrow School and at Oxford University.

Lord Headley was Captain and Commandant of the Light Horse Honorable Artillery Company from 1881 to 1885, and from 1887 to 1892 was Lieutenant Colonel commanding the Fourth Battalion, Royal Munster Fusiliers. He served through the Franco-German war with the staff of Gen. von Gobene of the Eighth Army Corps. He also served in the Carlist wars. His land holdings comprise more than 16,000 acres.

A PHYSICALLY PERFECT MAN

Born in Pittsburgh of Greek Parents and Wants to be a Policeman.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 15.—Medical examiners of the Civil Service Commission of this city have discovered what they say is a physically perfect man, but they decline to divulge his name. The young man took the tests for patrolman. He is a native of Pittsburgh, was educated in the schools here, and is of Greek parentage.

The young man is 22 years old, weighs 170 pounds, is 5 feet 10¼ inches tall, and has a chest expansion of 3½ inches.

DENIAL FROM WHITE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—This statement came from the White House to-day:

"The reported engagement of Miss Margaret Wilson and Dr. Gilbert Horrax is positively denied. Miss Wilson has never seen or met Dr. Horrax."

Gloversville Has $200,000 Fire.

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 15.—The shoe-leather-dressing plant of G. Levor & Co. was totally destroyed by fire to-night, causing a loss estimated at $200,000. The fire produced a rain of sparks practically over the whole city, starting several small blazes. Hundreds of garden hose were used by citizens in protecting their property.

Walter Williams Buys Herron Place

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Nov. 15.—Dr. Talleyrand Herron has sold his estate at Metuchen to Walter Williams for about $175,000. Mr. Williams at present is in Europe. He owns two farms adjoining the Herron estate, and has just erected a fine home there. He intends to develop an estate in the same style as James B. Duke's place at Raritan, N. J.

JUAREZ TAKEN BY REBELS

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 15.—Regardless of rumors of his impending resignation, and despite the insistence of far-seeing friends, including members of the Cabinet, who were closeted with him for several hours to-day, President Huerta appeared to-night to be more determined than at any time during the past week to retain the Presidency and carry out his plans for installing the substitute Congress.

He reiterated to-day that he continued to be the head of the Mexican Government and the fact that he took no steps towards preventing the inauguration of the new Congress as demanded by the United States, was construed at the embassy and the legations as indicative of what might be expected in the future. The representatives of the majority of the foreign Governments appeared to believe that Gen. Huerta had brought affairs to such a point that drastic action might be necessitated.

"Oh, no, I shall not quit," said Gen. Huerta to-night. "I shall continue, just as I have been doing, to put forth my best efforts to bring about the pacification of the country, and thus fulfill the promise I made on taking office."

It was suggested to the President that conditions might become such that foreigners, particularly Americans, would be in imminent danger.

Gen. Huerta calmly agreed that this might be so, but added: "In that case I shall do all I can to protect them."

The President thought a moment and continued: "True, the rabble of the city might rise, but I would not hesitate to apply the severest methods in my power to restore order and punish the guilty. At any rate, I am resolved to continue in the attempt to carry out my programme of pacification."

Proposal from Cabinet Minister.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy, the American Chargé, sent to Washington to-day, at the request of one of the Cabinet members, a new proposal to serve as a basis for the re-opening of the negotiations. The character of the proposal is not known, but it is certain that it does not contain anything sufficiently definite to be in line with Washington's previous declaration.

A message was received yesterday from President Wilson by Mr. O'Shaughnessy which, in effect, constituted a flat refusal to consider anything short of compliance with the demands already made and already rejected by Huerta. The new proposition, it is understood, goes by no means so far.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy has received no instructions regarding the withdrawal of the embassy or any radical action by the United States.

The meeting of the new House of Deputies to-day reflected the chaotic con ister of the Interior, Manuel Garza Aldape, was expected to officiate at the opening of the House, but opposition developed among the newly chosen lawmakers, and Gonzalo Zuniga, Señor Aldape's secretary and himself a Deputy, appeared in his stead. Nominally for a few minutes he presided, but there was little of parliamentary form observed in what followed. One group called for one man, another group for another man, to act as Chairman.

In vain Señor Zuniga called upon the Deputies for order, insisting that they observe legal procedure.

"Don't talk to us of law," cried Salvatore Diaz Miron, editor of Imparcial and an ardent supporter of Gen. Huerta. "What have we to do with law? We are greater than the law. The country is in a delicate position, and it is our duty to proceed in the most expeditious manner."

The controversy was added to by the appointment, without balloting, of Enrique Baz as President of the body, to serve until the day of the formal inauguration, Nov. 20.

Secretaries and a committee to examine credentials were then appointed, and the session adjourned at 6 o'clock.

The roll of Deputies included all the members of President Huerta's staff, the Chief Aid of the Minister of War, the Private Secretary of the President, the Private Secretary of the Minister of War, a large number of men more or less closely identified with other Government officials, and many well-known detectives, who have been employed in the capital.

No disorders attended the preliminary session of the Chamber of Deputies. No troops were to be seen in the streets nor were any stationed in the building. There were some spectators but a considerable force of police and plain clothes men were always in evidence.

Except for the fact that the Washington Administration had said that the Congress must not meet, the action of the Chamber ordinarily would have created no interest, as popular interest is centred only on the formal opening.

Long after hour fixed for the Senate to convene to-day the roll call showed only twenty-one Senators present, nearly all of these being Generals in the army. Twenty-nine are necessary for a quorum.

None of the Catholic Senators was present. This is understood to have been due to an agreement among themselves that the party should not participate in the Senatorial session. These Senators are regarded as influential, and their refusal or failure to attend is regarded as significant of the attitude of the Church Party.

England Warns Subjects in Mexico.

Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister, to-day reflected the support given by Great Britain to the policy of the Administration at Washington by causing a notification to be sent to all British subjects, through the Consuls in all parts of the republic, advising them of the notice served by John Lind on President Huerta and ordering that they be ready at a moment's warning to leave for places of safety. Those in outlying places were advised to gather in the larger centres, from which escape from the country might be more easily accomplished.

Sir Lionel is said to have given Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the American Charge, personal assurances acting on instructions from his Government, of British support of President Wilson's attitude towards Mexico.

"In view of Venustiano Carranza's repudiation of any form of mediation by or alliance with the United States, President Huerta feels that he can no less than join him in his expression of patriotic sentiment and maintain unaltered his dignified attitude toward Washington."

At the National Palace the attitude of the United States is characterized as that of a trafficking people, and to-day many Mexicans have uttered the sentimental declaration that any interference in their affairs by a foreign Government would be met by a united Mexican people.

Early to-day the seriousness of the situation appeared to be realized both by the officials at the Palace and the people in the streets. If there was a time limit fixed by Washington, in which Huerta had to make certain concessions, this was not known to the public, and outwardly at least the situation has not changed from what it was yesterday afternoon.

Urging Huerta to Defiance.

Certain of Gen. Huerta's friends, with due circumspection, continued their efforts to persuade him to give in, but there was another group which was more open in its advice. The members of this group urged the President not to concede any demands, but to proceed with the task of bringing into existence the new Congress—in short, to defy the United States.

The Cabinet members were by no means agreed upon the course which Gen. Huerta should follow. Those who favored his yielding were none too insistent upon their point of view, as the Provisional President has established a reputation for not receiving in the most friendly spirit advice contrary to his own opinion.

Rumors that he intended to prevent Congress from meeting, and even that he was willing to resign immediately without specifying who should be his successor, were current all day, but equally current were rumors of a diametrically opposite character. It was argued by many that Gen. Huerta was not so averse to abandoning his office as he was to leaving the Presidency without a clean bill of health.

Wants His Acts Legalized.

It was pointed out that should he resign without Congress being duly installed, so that it might ratify the acts of his Administration, particularly those since the dissolution of the last Congress, he would place himself practically in the position of a fugitive from justice. Certain acts of the President, if not ratified by some lawmaking body, it was asserted, were of such a nature that they might bring upon him legal prosecution at some future date. This, it is set forth by Huerta's friends, is his reason for opposing the methods for his elimination proposed by the United States.

The tone of the press of the Capital would indicate that all Mexico desired to see Gen. Huerta remain at the head of the Government, and, editorially and in the news columns, the United States is bitterly criticized for the part it has played. Among the people generally there is yet lacking evidence of violent outbursts of an anti-American character. Apathy characterizes the attitude of the Mexican people.

Increased Exodus to Vera Cruz.

The departure of foreign residents, and even of Mexicans, for Vera Cruz was more general to-day, trains being run in sections.

The managers of Lord Cowdray's oil company received orders to send all the women and children, and as many men as desired to go, as well as the more important part of the company's archives, to Vera Cruz. These instructions were based upon information from Vera Cruz. Reports that the rebels were gathering in force around Orizaba and threatening an attack added to the general anxiety and furnished a contributory cause for the increased exodus.

Orizaba is a station on the line of the Mexican Railway, and the capture of this town by the rebels would almost certainly mean interruption of traffic by this road to the coast.

On the Interoceanic Railway, the other line to the port, the rebels have already begun robbing trains, and to the fear of possible drastic action by the United States is added that of isolation of the capital.

WASHINGTON STILL HOPEFUL.

But Huerta's Indorsement of Carranza's Declaration Causes Concern.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The optimism of the Government over the Mexican situation continued to-day, although there was concern in regard to the statement given out at the National Palace in Mexico City, in which President Huerta indorsed the declaration of Gen. Carranza, the Constitutionalist leader, yesterday, rejecting "the interference of any nation to regulate Mexico's interior conditions."

It was intimated late to-night that the rejection of any of the proposals made to President Huerta should be regarded merely as a temporary setback.

Gen. Carranza's critical remarks came at the moment when this Government had received assurances from the City of Mexico that an agreement had been reached to reopen the negotiations between Mexico and the United States on the basis of the elimination of Huerta. There is a disposition here to believe that Huerta seized upon the Carranza statement as a straw and used it as a means of reversing his understood decision to resign from the Presidency when the National Congress should hold its first formal session, probably next Thursday.

If this idea is correct, the negotiations that have been going on between Gen. Carranza, on behalf of the Constitutionalists, and Dr. William Bayard Hale, on behalf of the United States, appear to have been an obstacle instead of a help to the efforts of the Washington Administration to adjust Mexico's troubles by peaceable means.

However, Huerta's statement indorsing that of Carranza is not believed here to be so significant as it seems to be on its face. Officials chose to stand firm on their previous advices that Huerta would resign and that efforts to adjust the differences with Mexico would continue with every hope of success. Secretary Bryan admitted to-day that the negotiations were in progress.

Neither he nor the White House had any communication to make to-day concerning the Mexican diplomatic situation. Secretary Bryan explained his caution by the statement that it seemed

HORSE SHOW DRAWS CROWD TO GARDEN

VANDERBILT BEATS MOORE

Madison Square Garden was filled last night when the twenty-ninth annual exhibition of the National Horse Show Association began, and until next Saturday night it will be the social feature of the week. Despite the Yale-Princeton football game, which kept many at New Haven until late last night, the show attracted a great number of persons of social prominence and ranked in attendance somewhat ahead of the average first night of exhibitions in the past. The horses, however, were in attendance in even greater numbers than last year, which was one of the biggest shows given in the Garden, and indications point to the most successful exhibition of the decade.

The Garden itself was at its best, arranged in its gayest and most splendid colors—a great canopied arena fringed with twinkling masses of brilliant festoons and draperies. Departing from its usual custom the National Horse Show Association went back 2,000 years to give to its patrons a setting which would bear out the importance of the occasion and at the same time offer the patrons of the show something out of common.

The interior represents the amphitheatre of Rome, where chariot races held sway at the Coliseum. It was a pleasing innovation, and the arrangement of the trophies, tablets, and wreaths, with marble and bronze columns epicting scenes of the Appian Way and the temples, together with the elaborate electrical effects, which brought together the ancient and the modern, made the whole surroundings a fitting place to exhibit the aristocratic-bred equines.

Foreign Horses Win.

Two international competitions were decided during the evening session. In the jumping class, in which more than sixty horses were ridden over the brush, the foreign army officers made a clean sweep. Many of the best fencers in the United States were sent into the ring, but they were no match for the foreigners. The other contests were between France, Canada, and Russia, the former country getting the first ribbon, the Dominion the second and third, and Russia the yellow. It was the first real international event of the show, and while considerable disappointment was manifested in the failure of the American entries, there was no lack of applause when the blue ribbon was attached to the head stall of Amazone, ridden and owned by Lieut. Baron de Meison of the First French Cuirassiers. The applause was renewed when the other foreign horses were lined up in front of the judges' box to receive the ribbons, as the first test of the jumping abilities of the American and foreign horses, and the latter easily earned the laurels.

In the preceding class for saddle horses, ridden by women, the premier award also went to a foreign entry, Blue Mouse, owned by Capt. W. T. Rodden of Canada and admirably ridden by Miss Belle Beach Bain. In this event Grey Plover, an English horse, owned by M. F. Goodbody of London, was placed third. With the two important events decided in favor of foreigners, the Americans may make a much better showing in the later jumping events if they expect to keep some of the cups on this side of the water.

The show is really not officially opened until to-morrow. The opening of the gates on Saturday night is intended to obtain a measure of publicity to interest the general public. Society rather tolerates the new arrangement than approves it, and, while there were a goodly number of the "400" present at the night session, society was not present noticeably when "Boots and Saddles" opened the show in Madison Square this afternoon. The horses, however, were there in force, and the Garden seemed brighter and more gorgeous than ever before. Another contributing cause to the absence of the social element in the afternoon was the fact that the programme was almost exclusively confined to novice classes, in which there is very little interest.

Children Enjoy Show.

If society failed to help ont the opening there was a representation of an element of the human race that more than compensated for this lack of interest. The first to arrive and file into the balconies, gaily draped in varicolored bunting were several hundred children from the slums in charge of the Children's Aid Society. Soon after these poured into the building nearly a thousand children from schools or institutions in the crowded sections of the city, all guests of President Alfred G. Vanderbilt, President of the association. A number of cripples were included in the list of invited guests, who showed their appreciation of Mr. Vanderbilt's kindness by cheering incessantly throughout the afternoon. The children were seated in the balcony, which was set apart for them, and in this respect they were an exclusive as the society folks who occupied the arena boxes at $100 a session.

Scarcely had the children reached their seats when the bugle rang out, and in pranced twelve flashing harness horses, each cavorting and rearing and tossing head and neck more proudly than the next, prouder than any society man or woman occuping a box seat. They trotted and high stepped around the arena amid as enthusiastic applause as ever welcomed an initial class, then lined up each with jealous sidelong glances at its neighbor for the judges to look upon and consider.

President Alfred G. Vanderbilt, to whose thoughtfulness the little tots enjoyed their outing, was one of the competitors in this class. He was pointed out by the attendants to the youngsters, who greeted his appearance with applause that must have more than compensated Mr. Vanderbilt for his efforts to provide an afternoon's entertainment for those who have never before witnessed a horse show. While the children were liberal with their applause to their host, they reserved their real outbursts for the pony classes, in which children rode and drove. This appealed to the unfortunates, and the balconies fairly bulged with coveteousness.

Thrills for Spectators.

Thrills came aplenty for the children and, for that matter, for the grown-ups. The expert manner in which the boys and girls, all under 12 years of age, managed the ponies appealed to the children, and as each favorite rider or driver circled the tanbark arena a salvo of cheers greeted the performance. The climax came when the children filed out of the building. Stationed at the exits at the Fourth Avenue end of the building were a dozen men, who gave to each tot passing out of the Garden a toy horse and wagon and a box of candy, and a happier lot of youngsters did not breathe on Manhattan Island.

The principal event of the afternoon, and that which held most sustained interest was the opening jumping class, in which many army officers competed. United States, England, Canada, France, Belgium, Norway, and Russia were represented. Prominent among them were: Col. P. A. Kenna, a Victoria Cross hero of the British Army and his two countrymen, Major M. F. McTaggart, Fifth Lancers, and Capt. R. M. Stewart Richardson, Eleventh Hussars; Capt. Paul Rodzanko, Chevelic Garder, Russia; Hon. Lieut. Clifton Sifton and Lieut. W. P. A. Sifton, Canada; Lieut. De Laussardieres, Ninth French Dragoons; Lieuts. Baron de Meslon and Marquis d'Orgelt, members of crack French cavalry regiments; Lieut. Compt Albert d'Oultremont and Chevelier Edward de Sellers of the Belgium cavalry service, and a number of American army officers. Several of the foreign officers have competed in former Garden horse shows, and the grace and ease with which they cleared the hurdles and bushes made them great favorites with the spectators.

At the Fourth Avenue entrance of the Garden were grouped the traps and vehicles, in charge of the red-coated, white-breached and booted grooms, who flicked at each other's brass buttons with dainty whips, and held in waiting the high bred, valuable horses. Tenderly nurtured horses they were, sleek and silken and nervous, when they emerged from the careful blankets that had completely shrouded them up to their very eyes. Everything startled them and set them prancing, even the cheering applause of the equally tenderly nurtured, but not quite so completely shrouded or blanketed women, who out of a first night's abundance of diamonds, shone down upon them and wished them well.

Officers in Gold Lace.

The addition of the foreign army officers lent a glamor to the surroundings. Booted and spurred, arrayed in an abundance of gold lace, courted and petted by the young society maids, and followed around the ring by an admiring throng, these distinguished visitors are the centre of attraction of the show, and divide honors with the horses, which are supposed to hold sway for the week.

For the first time in several years President Vanderbilt appeared as an exhibitor in the harness horse classes. At one time Mr. Vanderbilt was supreme in this class and his stables at Oakland Farms, Newport, R. I., housed the best high-stepping show horses in the United States. After making practically a clean sweep in this class of competition Mr. Vanderbilt disposed of many of his best horses and devoted his time and attention to four-in-hand driving, competing in these classes, spending his time in England during the Summer months driving daily between London and Brighton. Mr. Vanderbilt lost his first class which was in the novice division, but when he sent his high-stepping pony, The Pippin, in the ring against two of the best ponies in Judge Moore's stable, he came through with flying colors and the followers of high-class show horses look forward to a series of keen competitions during the remainder of the show between the horses of the old-time rival owners.

Horse show circles were agitated over the possibility of the permanent withdrawal of Miss Hopeton D. Atterbury from the list of exhibitors. Miss Atterbury has figured during the past few years as one of the most prominent exhibitors of saddle horses. She has announced the sale under the hammer of her champion saddlers, Nickel Plate, Patricia, and Kildare.

SOCIETY IN GORGEOUS ATTIRE

Mrs. E. B. McLean's Superb String of Pearls—Fashion Novelties.

The Roman background made a splendid picture setting for society yesterday at the Horse Show, both at the afternoon and evening sessions. The promenade, known heretofore as the clothes-walk, has taken on the name this season of the Appian Way.

Many brilliant gowns and wraps were seen, and as this is the first public assembly of society the dressmakers who crowded about the main entrance, with pad and pencil, found much of interest and novelty in the frocks and hats. Everybody, for that matter, seemed to be interested in the fashions. Black and blue velvet costumes and fitch fur, the sort our grandmothers used to wear, predominated at the afternoon performance, and white and black satins and velvets with elaborate ermine wraps and gauzy diaphanous frocks of pastel shades, with much silver embroidery, were observed at the evening session. The aigrette was noticeably absent, probably owing to the rigid ruling of the Custom House.

There were several fashion novelties of note. Mrs. Edward B. McLean of Washington, D. C., the owner of the famous Hope diamond, who occupied Box 51 last night with a party of friends, appeared in a costume of white chiffon with edgings of white fox. Over her hat was made in the Watteau style of the palest pink tulle with pale blue ribbons. This style of hat is rarely seen on this side. She did not wear the Hope diamond, but a superb strand of pearls which are among the famous jewels of the world, and that would attract attention anywhere, when not eclipsed by the famous Hope gem.

Mrs. Elbert H. Gary wore a gorgeous wrap of unspotted ermine with sables. The fad this year seems to allow the cloak to drop off one shoulder, a fashion set by a certain beautiful French actress at Monte Carlo last Spring. Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who had Mrs. Monson Morris with her last night, appeared in a minaret gown of white satin with a double tunic of tulle, edged with sable, and a black velvet hat with jet. Her style of dressing is very much after the English style. Mrs. Morris, whose gown was visible, like Mrs. Vanderbilt's, under a cloak of deep peacock blue velvet, wore white satin meteor with silver embroidery. Paradise plumes topped her black velvet hat.

Mrs. F. Francis Hyde, who had as her guests Mr. and Mrs. Herbert M. Hyde, with Mr. Hyde, in Box 30, wore a costume of wistaria embroidered net and velvet, with sables, and a black velvet hat. Mrs. Herbert M. Hyde was in deepest royal blue with ermine and a black hat topped with ostrich plumes.

Mrs. William du Pont was in brown velvet, and Miss du Pont in gray and blue. Mrs. J. B. Little of Atlanta, Ga., was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Gary. Mrs. Little was in white and black, under an ermine wrap, with a black velvet hat. Mrs. Gary wore a white hat topped with aigrettes.

Mr. and Mrs. Seligman's Guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Seligman, in box 53, had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Alfred E. Cortis and Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Goodhart. Mrs. Seligman was in black and white. A party of young people seen in the arena were the Misses Margaret and Susanne Warren, Priscilla Bull, and Elise Francke, the girls wearing gorgeous wraps over their evening costumes.

With Mr. and Mrs. William M. Fleitmann in Box 54 were Miss Hopeton D. Atterbury, Miss Lida Louise Fleitman, their daughter; Lawrence Atterbury, and Frederick H. Fleitmann, their son, who has just returned from abroad. Mrs. Fleitmann appeared in a dark blue velvet costume, with a hat to match. Both Miss Atterbury and Miss Fleitmann, who rode in the entry of ladies' saddle horses, looked smart and stunning in their riding habits. Miss Fleitmann wore a veil with her silk hat.

With Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim in Box 52 were Senator and Mrs. Simon Guggenheim, and Mr. and Mrs. William Guggenheim. Mr. and Mrs. Berry Wall had Mrs. Wall with them at the evening session.

Mrs. A. G. Vanderbilt in Box 13.

Many well-known society people dropped in during the afternoon session. Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, in a black velvet costume, occupied Box 13, and received and talked with many visitors during the afternoon. Just across the arena, in Box 14, young Miss Cathleen Vanderbilt, daughter of Reginald Vanderbilt, in a fetching costume of peacock blue duvetyn and fitch fur, acted as a hostess, just like the older folks, to a party of young people, and they talked about the entries very seriously and nodded to their young acquaintances passing on the promenade, while Miss Vanderbilt's governess looked on demurely, as chaperons always do.

Strolling about the promenade were Mr. and Mrs. Berry Wall, recently home after a world circling journey; Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Wilkes Cary, who have also just returned from a long absence abroad, and Thomas Hitchcock and his daughter, Miss Celestine Hitchcock. W. Eugene Parsons and his débutante daughter, Miss Le Brun Parsons, were seen, Miss Parsons appearing in a simple, girlish suit of plaid and black, with a wide brimmed black hat. Miss Margaret Andrews, in a black tailor suit, and Miss Marie Taller, the débutante daughter of Mr and Mrs. J. Lee Taller, who wore a brown cloth costume, were among the railbirds for a time, where they were joined by Miss Alice Tinker and Mrs. Walter Watson, who was in black velvet.

Mrs. E. N. Breitung and her daughter, Miss Juliet Breitung, entertained Col. and Mrs. Kenna in Box 59 at the afternoon session. There were parties in the boxes owned by Miss Kate Cary, William H. Moore, James Sumner Draper, Miss Leula Long, James T. Hyde, G. L. Beissevaih, James McKeah, W. W. Willock, William Du Pont, Robert J. Culler, Mrs. E. H. Hartiman, Charles A. Bouddilhe, and F. Ambrose Clark and William Ziegler, Jr.

Among the Spectators.

Others seen during the afternoon and evening were Mrs. Arthur Carroll, in black, Miss Dorothy Webb, James T. Hyde, Albert Maclay, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. McGibbon, Capt. W. H. Rodden, Major H. F. McTaggart, Capt. R. M. Stuart Richardson, J. Edward Martin, C. K. G. Billings, Creighton Webb, Mrs. Charles M. Allaire, Mrs. Edwin Gates Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. Horatio N. Bain, Miss Charlotte A. Barnes, Alfred Bartle, Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Betts, Alden S. Blodget, Lieut. Alfred W. Booraem, John Mcf. Bowman, Col. Oliver B. Bridgman, Edmund Butler, Edgar Clausen, Robert Coane, A. S. Colgate, W. Davis Conrad, Miss Alice A. Dodsworth, Mrs. James Graham Dooley, Reginald Douglas, Mrs. Charles M. Drucker, Miss Marion Du Pont, William Du Pont, Jr., Miss Grace Fleischman, Mrs. John Gerken, Miss Cynthia Kearney, W. Thorn Kissel, Miss Constance S. Regan, Mrs. Edward L. Tinker, Benjamin S. Young, Joseph P. Widener, Foxhall Keene, Mrs. J. E. Smith Hadden, Miss Frances Hadden, and Harry F. Eldridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst-Koch were with Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt at the afternoon session having been Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt's guest at luncheon in the clubrooms of the association, at the Garden, at which Mr. and Mrs. R. P. McGrann of Lancaster, Penn., C. A. Williamson, and G. Mifflin Wharton were also present.

SELLS STOCKS AT HORSE SHOW

H. Content & Co. Opens Branch Office at the Garden.

Patrons of the Horse Show at Madison Square Garden who are interested in the financial market are able to enjoy the exhibition without neglecting their business. In the rear of the association clubroom, which occupies the concert hall, a room has been set apart for members who want to be kept in touch with the stock market. H. Content & Co. have installed a branch office in which a ticker keeps the members and the firm's customers informed as to the fluctuations of stocks and bonds.

This is a new institution in horse shows, and two clerks were kept busy yesterday send ng orders over the phone to the company's head office. Many of the members of the Horse Show Association availed themselves of this opportunity to combine business and pleasure. The office, however, could not be used by the general public, as an association membership card was necessary to secure admission to the clubroom.

DAY WITH THE JUDGES.

From a horseman's standpoint, the show gives every indication of being the most successful of the twenty-nine exhibitions held in the Garden under the auspices of the National Horse Show Association of America. Both quality and quantity are represented in the 1,700 entries and nearly 300 exhibitors. The show will emphasize the almost unassailable standing of the high-stepping, well-trained equine beauties despite the wholesale invasion of the automobile. Horses and ponies of all sizes and colors paraded before the admiring throng, and there was not a dull moment from the call of "Boots and Saddles" which marked the opening until the jumping class was finished, which brought the first day of the show to a successful close.

Horsemen were in their element, and as each succeeding class received the decisions of the judges their comments on the awards were invariably favorable. Everything went along smoothly, and, from a horseman's standpoint, there was little to be desired. The programme showed the results thought and careful arrangements, as the classes were so distributed as to obtain the best result, from a spectator's as well as from an exhibitor's standpoint.

Old-Time Rivals in Ring.

One of the most interesting events was the renewal of rivalry between President A. G. Vanderbilt and Judge William H. Moore for premier honors in the heavy harness classes. With the absence of Senator Clarence W. Watson of Fairmont, West Va., in these classes during the last two years, the failure of Mr. Vanderbilt to exhibit left Judge Moore with practically a clear field. The final clash between these old-time rivals of the tanbark ring came in the evening session, when ten high-class ponies in harness competed for premier honors. Mr. Vanderbilt was represented by Flame, a six-year-old bay gelding, driven by Charles W. Wilson, while Judge Moore sent two chestnut mares, Jessica and Janet, into the ring. It was the liveliest event of the programme, and the contest was unusually keen, Judge Moore drove Janet and was unplaced, while George Chipchase handled the reins over Jessica. The judges went over their alloted time in making their selection, and finally pinned the blue rosette on the headstall of Flame, while Jessica was forced to be content with the third, the red ribbon going to William H. Hanley's Bit o' Fashion.

President A. G. Vanderbilt of the association met with his first defeat in the opening class of the afternoon when his two entries in the class for saddle horses over 14 hands 2 inches and not exceeding 15 hands 1 inch got the gate. Mr. Vanderbilt drove his brown mare, Pireso, while his stable manager, Charles Wilson, handled the reins over the chestnut mare, Queen. Twelve of the fourteen horses entered faced the judges, and after the process of elimination six were left for final judgment. The class was an excellent one for novice horses, and most of the entries showed real equine class. The premier award went to Mrs. Annie Vauclain's chestnut mare, Princess Sheila.

Shetland Ponies Please Tots.

Five pairs of Shetland ponies presented a pretty appearance on the tanbark. The children in the balcony cheered the diminutive specimens of horse flesh, and the children who drove were liberally applauded for their praiseworthy efforts. The smallest pair was Keith and Ruth, which measured less than 30 inches in height. The judges selected King Larego and Pearl, a clever acting black pair driven by H. Heyl, as the winners. Angus and Alert, from the Broodland Farms, captured the second ribbon after a close contest with George A. Heyl's second entry, Silver Tips and Silver Tips II.

The first saddle class was for novices between 14 hands 2 inches and 15 hands 2 inches, and brought out twenty high class saddlers. Many of the entries showed a plenty of quality, and went through their paces in a most approved manner. Walter H. Hanley of Providence, a newcomer in natibnal horse show circles, was represented by the chestnut mare Early Morn, admirably ridden by Miss E. Rasmussen. Early Morn was on his best manners and was entitled to the blue rosette. Lefton Girl, entered by C. Douglas Franks and ridden by Miss Helen Shoemaker, was second, and Miss Claribel Jefferson's chestnut mare Evangeline, with William A. McGibbon in the saddle, third.

The young guests of the association enjoyed the class for ponies under saddle to be ridden by boys or girls, amateurs under fifteen years of age. There was a big representation of ponies, and the added attraction of children riding made the event doubly interesting. As each pony quietest or trotted around the ring it was greeted with salvos of cheers, and when the judges selected Black Eagle, well ridden by Master D. Shea as the winner of the John McE. Bowman Cup, the applause was renewed. James Dooley, Jr., owned and drove Cupid, the red rosette ribbon. Miss Dorothy F. Flynn, who rode the gray mare Donsy, was the favorite with the children, who were disappointed over the failure of the judges to award her a ribbon.

Moore Scores First Win.

Judge William H. Moore scored his first success of the show in the class for pairs of harness horses, over 15 hands 1 inch and not exceeding 15 hands 3 inches. It was one of the best novice harness pair classes seen in the Garden, and George Chipchase, who drove the winning pair, made the most of his entry, Madeline and Manfred. The winners are a splendid pair of bays with plenty of action and style. Miss Leula Long, who drove the bay pair Revelation and Realisation, was handicapped with an injured hand, but succeeded in winning the second prize. The Canadian pair I Wonder and Eye Opener, exhibited by Miss E. Vian and driven by A. Yeager, was a close third.

William H. Hanley scored a second victory in the class for ladies' saddle horses, with the chestnut gelding Iron Trail, ridden by Miss Rasmussen. The conditions called for women to ride on side saddle and manners counted 50 per cent. The winner is a chestnut gelding, 16 hands, well built and possessed of splendid manners. Miss Hopeton D. Atherbury rode her own entry, Quicksilver, and secured the second award. Competition for the second prize was very close, Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's bay gelding Supplement being evenly matched with Quicksilver.

First Blue for Vanderbilt.

The first class in the night session witnessed the victory of President Vanderbilt over Judge Moore. The event was for ponies in harness above 13 hands 2 inches, and one of the best collections of ponies seen in the Garden competed for the ribbons. Mr. Vanderbilt's entry—Flame, a high-stepping bay gelding—was driven by Charles Wilson, while George Chipchase piloted Jessica, a bay mare from Mr. Moore's stable. There were six entries, but the interest was centred in the rivalry between the Vanderbilt and Moore stables. The ponies were sent around the ring repeatedly, and the judges found it a difficult task to select the winner. To the casual observer and railbirds there was little to choose between the entries, but Wilson had complete control of Flame and showed his charge to the best advantage. A burst of applause followed the selection of Flame as the winner, and mild surprise was expressed when Walter H. Hanley's Bit o' Fashion was placed ahead of the Moore entries for the red rosette.

The judges found few to agree with them when they picked W. H. Moore's chestnut gelding Mogul as the winner of the harness horse class for non-winners. Miss Loula Long drove a slashing bay gelding. Action displayed unusual quality, in addition to speed and good manners. Miss Long demonstrated her ability to drive with the best in the Garden, and popular choice would have nominated her for the first prize. The judges thought otherwise, and placed Mogul ahead of Revelation, with Roderick Dhu, another Moore horse, third. The owner of the winner derived but scant satisfaction over his victory, as his stable manager drove Mogul.

France Leads Over Jumps.

International blue ribbon winners competed in the class for tandems not exceeding 15 hands 1 inch. J. Sumner Draper was represented by Baronet and Sabine, while W. H. Moore drove Menella and Phyllis. Five other tandems were entered, but the contest was confined to the Moore and Draper entries. Menella and Phyllis won several prizes at the London Olympic Show, but they did not travel well together, while Baronet and Sabine carried themselves with precision and style. Even under these conditions many thought that Mr. Moore would add to his string of victories. The judges, however, thought otherwise and placed the Draper team in front.

Canada and England scored in the heavyweight saddle class up to carrying 160 pounds. The event was confined to women riders, who had the option of riding side saddle or astride. It was the first international competition, and honors easily went to Capt. W. T. Rodden's mare Blue Mouse, a Canadian horse, ably ridden by Miss Belle Beach Bain. Walter H. Hanley's bay gelding Sir Evelyn was compelled to show his best paces to capture the red rosette from M. F. Goodbody's English entry, Grey Plover. The latter is a splendid saddler, but clearly showed the effects of the long ocean voyages. He should do better later on in the week.

A notable victory was scored in the first international jumping class, in which many of the foreign horses competed. Owing to the number of entries, the class was divided into two sections, one of which was decided during the afternoon session, and the second was placed at the end of the evening programme. In all, more than sixty horses were sent over the jumps. Several of the horses made clean records, while the number of spills were very few, no serious injury resulting. All top ribbons went to foreign entries. Lieut. Baron de Meslon of the French Cuirassiers won the first prize with his brown mare Amazone after a close contest with Capt. W. T. Rodden's Canadian jumper, Sarah Moore. The third prize went to another Canadian entry, Lieut. Clifford Sifton's Elmhurst, while Russia accounted for the fourth with Capt. Paul Rodzanko's Genger. The summary:

KILLS WOMAN WHO CRITICISED A FRIEND

VICTIM TRIED TO ESCAPE

A young woman known as Mrs. Louise White, but who, the police believe, was the wife of Tony Perino, a musician in small moving-picture theatres, was stabbed to death last night in the hall on the second floor of the rooming house run by Alfred Hart, at 128 East 105th Street. William Twist, 25 years old, of 207 Prospect Avenue, the Bronx, a brakeman employed on the Sixth Avenue line of the elevated railway, who was found in the woman's room, was arrested and confessed his guilt. He said that he had committed the crime because Mrs. White made a slurring remark about a well-known actress with whom, he asserted, he was acquainted.

Sergeant Meade of the East 104th Street station first heard of the murder when Hart ran up to him at Lexington Avenue and 116th Street and said that a woman had been killed in his house. They ran to the house and as he was running up the stairs, the Sergeant stumbled over the woman's body, which was lying near the landing on the second floor. Hart pointed to her room and Sergeant Meade pushed open the door. Twist was sitting on a chair and did not attempt to escape.

Twist handed over a long hunting knife with a six-inch blade to the Sergeant. He admitted that he had stabbed the woman in the back as she was leaving the room and had slashed her five times after she fell. Twist said that he had met the woman in front of the Avenal Hotel, formerly the Baltic Hotel, which was run by George A. Sipp, at Lexington Avenue and 123d Street. He had walked her to her home, he said, and it was then that they quarreled about the actress. Twist talked erratically at times, but there was no evidence that he had been drinking. The police offered no opinion about his mental condition and turned him over to Assistant District Attorney Breckenridge of the homocide bureau.

C. G. GATES'S WILL FILED.

Mother and Wife Residuary Legatees—$320,000 in Bequests.

BEAUMONT, Texas, Nov. 15.—The will of Charles G. Gates, who died at Cody, Wyo., on Oct. 28, was filed here to-day for probate. His mother, Mrs. Dellora R. Gates, was named as administratrix, according to a request in the will. After the payment of bequests, largely to relatives, amounting to $320,000, the estate is to be divided equally between Mr. Gates's mother and his widow.

Provision is made in the will to carry out the wish of Mr. Gates's father, John W. Gates, who created a trust fund of $3,000,000 for the erection of the Gates Old People's Home, at West Chicago, Ill.

that they were bondsmen. A dozen bondsmen had offered their services, it was said, and these two had been chosen, by Fowler.

After his arrival at the Grand Central Station Fowler and his party went to a hotel. Fowler's first thought was to call Mr. Whitman on the telephone.

"I am here, do you want to see me?" he is said to have asked the District Attorney.

Mr. Whitman bluntly replied, it was said, that he did not want to see Fowler before he was arraigned in court.

At this point District Attorney Cunningham came into the case. Cunningham is a good firm friend of Mr. Whitman. Cunningham is a leader of the Ulster bar, and although a Republican has been repeatedly elected in a Democratic stronghold. Mr. Whitman took the stump for him in the last campaign. Mr. Whitman invited Mr. Cunningham to call at the Whitman home.

Through Cunningham Mr. Whitman conveyed his ultimatum to Fowler. It was thought that it would be better to allow Fowler to return to his home a free man than to go home on bail. It was desirable to have him talk with his family over Sunday, it was thought, and to give him time to plan his future course. When this decision was reached Judge Crain in General Sessions left his bench for the day. Judge Crain was advised that Fowler would not be arraigned until Monday morning.

Inquiry's Great Progress.

The expected confession of Fowler tomorrow and the confession of George H. McGuire, which it is believed will be made on Wednesday, will show what great progress Mr. Whitman is making in the graft inquiry. The two confessions are expected to dovetail. There will be no possibility of "framing" these confessions for Mr. Whitman already has obtained independent information to which these confessions must conform if they are accepted.

First of all, it is known that Fowler merely collected from road contractors. He had nothing to do with the barge canal contractors and in this respect he was a "little fellow" compared with the bagmen who collected from the holders of million dollar contracts.

Fowler, it was said, was assigned to Syracuse, Rochester, and Buffalo. There he met the road contractors at stated times. Political leaders of these cities, it was said, notified contractors when Fowler would appear.

Fowler, it was said, was one of six or more "big men" who worked throughout the State. Each bagman had his definite schedule. Each worked under instructions. There never was a hitch in the proceedings, for it was a fine business system. Who are these other bagmen? That is what Mr. Whitman wants to know. It is more than certainly he knows already, but he has legal proof against only one of them at present. That one is Fowler. Before another week has passed it is expected he will have them all.

According to the information which has reached Mr. Whitman the threats of the bagmen to prospective victims establish the crime of extortion. This is what happened when a contractor met a bagman, according to what the District Attorney has learned:

"You're on the list for $—," the bagman would say. "If you don't pay the money it will be all up with you. I will ruin you. I will stop your contract. And if it is too late to stop your contract, you will never get all the money that is due you. I'll see to that. And you'll have a hard time getting even some of your money. This is your finish. You'll never get another State contract if you don't come across with the dough."

If a contractor should ask what benefit he would derive by paying the assessment the bagman would say:

"Why, if you pay this assessment everything will be rosy with you. You'll get your money just as soon as you want it, and your jobs will be approved in sections just as they are finished. If you have any trouble with any Inspector just let me know about it, and I'll have the Inspector fired or transferred. You can have everything you ask, and no one will be the wiser if your concrete is a little thinner than it ought to be."

Throughout the testimony of Seneca P. Hull before the Grand Jury, it was said, there appeared the name of C. Gordon Reel, former Superintendent of Highways in the old Department of Highways. Reel was among those present, according to the John A. Hennessy charges, when Fowler was designated as the bagman who should collect in Rochester, Syracuse, and Buffalo.

It was C. Gordon Reel who denied that there had been any waste in the Highway Department while he was at its head. Reel showed hostility to John A. Hennessy's investigation of the highways. He protested that he was being sacrificed as a scapegoat when Sulzer removed him "in the interest of the public service" and just when $10,000,000 in road contracts were to be let.

Harold J. Hinman, minority leader in the Assembly, made an attack on Reel last March. In a speech before the Assembly Mr. Hinman said that it was unwise to trust Reel and his associates with the expenditure of money on the highways.

Kelley's Disavowal of Letters.

In the evidence submitted to the Grand Jury on Friday by Seneca P. Hull, there were two letters signed by William H. Kelley, Democratic boss of Onondaga County. Mr. Kelley, in dispatches from Syracuse, is quoted as saying that he knows nothing about the letters, and that he did not sign them.

It is not likely that Kelley, at present, will have an opportunity of going before the Grand Jury or of testifying in the matter. It is said, however, that Mr. Whitman would like to have Kelley's denial under oath of the authorship of both of these letters. It has not been contended that Kelley wrote the form letter which is known as Exhibit 2 in the Grand Jury evidence. It is contended, however, that he did write the letter marked Exhibit 1, and that the signature to this letter is his own.

In this letter, dated Oct. 27, 1911, Kelley invited Hull to meet him and Fowler in Room 405 of the Kirk Building, in Syracuse, Kelley maintains the permanent headquarters of the Democratic General Committee of Onondaga County in the same building. His room number is 217, and it was to that room that Hull was advised to come in the second letter, dated Oct. 29.

District Attorney Whitman, it was said yester

REVEAL MORE EVILS OF AUBURN PRISON

Women Who Became Voluntary Convicts Found Wretched Food and Bad Air.

SICK NOT TAKEN CARE OF

Miss Madeleine Z. Doty and Miss Elizabeth Watson, the two investigators for the State Commission on Prison Reform, who were locked up in the Women's Prison at Auburn for a week, but who insisted upon being released four days ago, arrived here yesterday and talked a little more about their experiences.

"We wanted to come out on Thursday night," said Miss Doty, "but we could not get into communication with Matron Nettie Leonard, and so we had to wait until Friday morning. The experience was dreadful. Beside the terrors I spoke of yesterday, there were many other things that made life within those prison walls absolutely unendurable. The mixing up of the sick and healthy prisoners is a shame, and ought to be stopped at once. There were six women ill in bed in the Hospital Ward. One of them had tuberculosis and one heart trouble, and others had other diseases, some of them communicable.

"Auburn is no place for the prison. It ought to be in the country where the air would be purer and the surroundings of such a nature as to make an occasional outing possible. The State owns a big piece of land at Wingdale that was bought for prison purposes. The prison could be placed there. It would be much nearer New York, where the majority of the prisoners come from."

"Of course, all of the sick are not in the hospital. A number of the prisoners who are ill circulate about, doing such tasks as they can. About half of the inmates are colored women. The whites and blacks mingle together without any restriction. I don't mean that they are doubled up in cells, for there is no doubling up in the prison."

Miss Doty said that only 19 of the 111 prisoners had criminal records. The others are serving their first terms. She said that the crimes for which they were being punished were mainly larceny, assault, robbery, and manslaughter.

"There is one girl there," said Miss Doty, "who is serving a term of from ten to nineteen years for stealing $19. She is only 25 years old. There seems to be no method for employing the women. I gave my occupation as a stenographer while Miss Watson described herself as a house worker. Yet we were set to work sewing blankets.

"I was greatly impressed with the inadequacy of the kitchen arrangements. The same women work there continuously, and judging from the fare served us the cooking was as bad as it could be."

Asked what the meals consisted of Miss Doty replied:

"First I must tell you about the stuff they call coffee. This is made in the proportion of half a pound of the bean to twenty-four gallons of water. The decoction is served without milk or sugar. It has scarcely any coffee taste at all. For breakfast we received a cup of this fluid, stew, and bread. The midday meal consisted of some more stew and bread. In the evening we got bread and tea. Oh, I forgot to mention the pickles. These were served at the first two meals and seemed to be considered a very necessary and nutritive article of food. I cannot imagine why."

"The matron told me that only 220 pounds of meat were sent to the prison each week. This includes the bone and fat. From it was cut the steaks and roasts for the fifteen matrons, who have meat twice a day. What is left is consumed by the 111 prisoners. I don't believe very much is left. I suppose a butcher could tell us about how much bone there would be in that amount of meat. I am sure though that what the prisoners got did not greatly exceed one pound a week.

"Since Oct. 8 the prisoners are permitted to leave their cells on Sunday but before that they were compelled to remain in them during the long hours from Saturday night until Monday morning, except for the brief period when they were in chapel. Now the prisoners go to the mess hall and are permitted to talk. But the dreadful cells in the place is the silence and the seclusion. Why, they have even covered the windows so that the poor women cannot look out and get a glimpse of the free world.

"I suppose the women who are mothers suffer more acutely from this confinement than men. There is one poor woman in prison who has a child in an institution and she fears that it is to be taken away and so lost to her. We intend to see that the child is not molested. There is another woman who has children by a common law marriage and because of this she is not permitted to communicate with them, I think that is very absurd and very hard."

Miss Doty described the underground path to the "cooler," the grill of water and the bag of straw that these cells are furnished with. She also told of the hard system of fines that make it impossible for any prisoner to earn any money when the earning capacity is limited to one and a half cents a day and punishments involves a fine of about fifty cents a day. Then she told of the strict supervision that was constantly exercised. When visitors come to see prisoners every word they speak is listened to by a matron and no caresses are allowed. Kisses are taboo.

"This supervision," said Miss Doty, "takes in everything. All the letters are expurgated and so are the daily newspapers, as well as the few magazines permitted within the prison walls. Every reference to the impeachment trial of Gov. Sulzer was cut out of the papers. They even cut the political news out of the Youth's Companion."

Miss Doty said that in collaboration with Miss Watson she was at work on a report in which recommendations for improvements will be made. The report will be ready to-day or Monday, she said.

TAFT IS CHAGRINED OVER MORSE PARDON

Recovery of "Dying" Man "Shakes One's Faith in Expert Examinations," He Says.

LECTURES ON PRESIDENCY

Approves Principle of Income Tax and Says Country Should Back Administration's Mexican Policy.

Special to The New York Times.

POTTSTOWN, Penn., Nov. 15.—Speaking before the students of the Hill School to-night in one of the series of lectures being delivered upon the foundation created by Edward Bok, William Howard Taft, ex-President of the United States, alluded to his pardon on Jan. 18, 1912, of Charles W. Morse, the New York banker, from the Federal prison at Atlanta, and intimated that possibly he had been imposed upon. He said:

I had two cases once before me in which it was represented that both the convicts were near death. I instituted an investigation to find out the truth through the Army Medical Corps. Examinations were made, watches were established over the sick men, and it was reported to me that they were both in the last stages of a fatal disease. One of them died soon after he was released from the penitentiary. The other is apparently in excellent health and seeking to re-establish himself in the world in which he committed a penitentiary offense. This shakes one's faith in expert examinations.

The other convict alluded to by Mr. Taft undoubtedly was John R. Walsh, the Chicago banker, who died Oct. 25, 1911, nine days after Mr. Taft had pardoned him from the Leavenworth Penitentiary.

Continuing his address, the ex-President said in part:

Respect for the Presidency.

The functions of the Presidency seem very broad, and certainly they are, but the responsibility is so heavy, the desire of every man who fills the place to deserve the approval of his countrymen is so strong, and the fear of just popular criticism is so controlling that it is difficult for one who has been through four years of it to remember any personal favor that he was able to confer.

Never be guilty of a flippant want of respect for the office the President holds or of himself as its occupant, because it was the American people who chose him, and for the time being he is the personal embodiment and representative of their dignity and majesty.

Mr. Taft reiterated his advocacy of universal civil service, except in the naming of judges of the courts, Ambassadors, and Ministers, members of the President's Cabinet, and general officers of the army. "Under such a system," he said, "the President will not be bothered, as he is now, with having to exercise an arbitrary discretion, enabling him, if he choose, to use the offices for political purposes and involving him in controversies that interfere with his effectiveness as the Chief Executive officer of the nation, and do not help the public weal.

"If popular government is to be a success," Mr. Taft continued, "the success will be measured by the ability of the Government to use the services of experts in carrying it on. I speak whereof I know when I say it injures the dignity and the usefulness of a President to be bothered about the preference to be given to candidates for Post Offices, for Collectors of Customs, and Collectors of Internal Revenue all over this country."

His Views on Current Topics.

Mr. Taft arrived in Philadelphia in the afternoon, and was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bok at their home. With George W. Ochs, editor of The Public Ledger, they boarded the Pottstown train. During a part of the ride Mr. Taft discussed matters of public interest. He spoke freely on the income tax. He did not think that all incomes below $5,000 should be exempt. He approved a graduated tax. His objection to the present measure was that the income tax should not be used as an ordinary source of revenue, but as an extraordinary source. It was his opinion that such a law should be on the statute books, but that the nation should not employ it except in times of emergency. Growth of perjury was to be feared, he believed, and cited the experience of Ohio under a similar law, where, he said, the wealth of the State increased steadily but the returns from the income tax collection grew smaller year after year.

Mr. Taft deprecated free sugar, which he did not believe would result in benefits to the consumer. He said that as he grew older he grew less cocksure, but that it was his belief that the new tariff would not work out in cheaper prices to the consumer.

Mr. Taft was asked his views on the Mexican situation. He replied that the country should stand united in support of the Administration.

Temple Israel Fair.

A fair will be held at the Hotel Astor from Dec. 2 to 6 the proceeds of which will be devoted to the various philanthropic activities associated with the Temple Israel of Harlem, of which the Rev. Dr. Maurice H. Harris is rabbi. The Temple Israel is the only Jewish congregation in upper New York which does not restrict its disbursements to synagogal matters.

Benefit for East Side Children.

An entertainment and Christmas fair for the benefit of the Winifred Wheeler Day Nursery of the East Side House Settlement at Seventy-sixth Street and East River, will be held at the Hotel Plaza on the afternoon of Thursday, Dec. 11. The principal feature of the entertainment will be a thé dansant. There will also be an auction bridge party.

OMAHA'S NEW TAX PLAN.

Would Force Utilities to Furnish Cash for City to Buy Them.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 15.—This city is giving serious consideration to a plan to tax public service corporations—the gas, electric light, street car, and telephone companies—in such a way that in a few years it can purchase those corporations with the very money they will have paid into the treasury. The Economic League is drawing up a resolution which will be submitted under the initiative and referendum laws, providing for an occupation tax of 15 per cent. on the gross receipts of these corporations, the collections to be set aside for the purchase of the companies.

"We will make the public service corporations buy themselves for us," is the way it is expressed by R. B. Howell, General Manager of the Metropolitan Water District. Mr. Howell is one of the committee which is preparing the ordinance for the Economic League. He is one of the principal exponents of municipal ownership in the city, and drew the ordinance under which the City of Omaha obtained the water works plant after a fight of nearly ten years.

"We might as well fight all the public service corporations at the same time as to fight them one at a time," said Robert Smith, Clerk of the District Court to-day. "They help each other out whenever necessary, and a fight for one is a fight for all."

DR. McBURNEY'S WILL FILED

Physicians' Aid Association and Stockbridge Club Remembered.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 15.—The wills of Dr. Charles McBurney and his wife Margaret W. McBurney have been filed in the Berkshire Probate Court by Henry McBurney, a son, and Albert Stickney, of New York, who were named as executors of the will of Dr. McBurney. Dr. McBurney was the executor of the will of his wife, who died last Summer, but he died before qualifying for the office. The will of Dr. McBurney provides for the disposition of his property as follows: To Florence Jackson, an employe, $2,000; to Elizabeth Weston Stickney, a sister-in-law, $1,000 a year; to May Ruth McBurney, a niece, $10,000; to the New York Physicians' Mutual Aid Association, all his rights or claims against it; to the Stockbridge Golf Club, that part of the estate known as the River Lot.

Dr. McBurney left to his son Henry, his daughter Alice Riggs, his son Malcolm and to Dr. Austin Fox Riggs, his son-in-law, certain personal property. All the remainder of the estate is to be divided in equal shares and one share given to each of his children.

Latin-American Conference.

A conference on Latin-America will be held from next Tuesday to Friday at the Clark University, Worcester, Mass., to which the public will be admitted. Dr. Hiram Bingham, Yale Professor of Latin-American History, will speak on "The Panama Canal in Relation to the Future of the West Coast," and on "The Monroe Doctrine," and N. O. Winter, S. W. Reynolds and L. C. Wells will discuss the Mexican situation.

Sale of "Tango" Slippers at $7.50 with brilliant rhinestone garnitures which alone are worth $10 per set!

And the slipper itself would retail at $6.00 per pair, without the garnitures. But in order to introduce this beautiful slipper to a still wider circle of women, we have decided to offer it tomorrow at the remarkably low price of $7.50, with the garnitures attached.

This newest of all "Tango" Slippers is a copy of a $75 Paris model

And among those women who pride themselves on a shapely, well turned foot, the popularity of this exquisite slipper, even in the short period we have shown it to date, has been unprecedented. It is made over a French last, with medium forepart, narrow receding toe, and patent leather vamps. The heels are of graceful Spanish Louis design. And the rich rhinestone garnitures, sixteen in number, make this "Tango" slipper the handsomest that ever danced over a polished floor.

KLINE TO NAME NINE ON EDUCATION BOARD

Churchill Among Those Whose Terms of Office Expire on the First Day of the New Year.

THEIR RECORD OF SERVICE

The nine members of the Board of Education whose terms of office will expire on Jan. 1, 1914, and whose successors Mayor Kline will appoint before Dec. 1, are Thomas W. Churchill, President of the board; Dr. Louis Haupt, Miss Olivia Leventritt, Robert E. McCafferty, Henry P. Morrison, Abraham Stern, Ernest W. Stratmann, Dr. Ira S. Wile, and Gen. George W. Wingate. Miss Leventritt, Messrs. Churchill and Stern, and Drs. Haupt and Wile represent the Borough of Manhattan in the board; Gen. Wingate and Messrs. McCafferty and Stratmann represent Brooklyn, and Mr. Morrison is one of the two Commissioners from Richmond Borough.

Mr. Churchill was appointed by Mayor Gaynor on June 15, 1911, to succeed Hugo Kanzler. He was educated in the public schools and at the City College. He taught in the evening schools, and then became a lawyer. He was Deputy Fire Commissioner in Mayor McClellan's administration. Mayor Gaynor offered him a place in his Cabinet, but Mr. Churchill declined. He also refused the office of Deputy under Fire Commissioner Johnson. At Mayor Gaynor's request he entered the Board of Education. After the retirement of James Creelman, Mr. Churchill was regarded as the special representative of Mayor Gaynor in the board. He introduced a number of radical measures, the most noteworthy of which was the one affecting the standing of teachers holding License No. 1, whose rating, while high enough to put their names on the eligible list for appointment, did not lead to that result as the Board of Examiners put later applicants with higher ratings ahead of them. The number of the holders of License No. 1 thus affected was estimated at from 3,000 to 4,000. Mr. Churchill maintained that they were treated unjustly. City Superintendent Maxwell and Abraham Stern opposed the Churchill measure, but the Corporation Counsel decided against them. Dr. Maxwell took an appeal to the State Superintendent of Education, and the controversy has not been settled.

Gaynor Men Known as "Progressives."

The Gaynor men in the board came to be known as "Progressives." They chose Mr. Churchill as their standard bearer. As such he was a candidate in February, 1912, for the Presidency against Egerton L. Winthrop. Mr. Winthrop won the contest by a small majority. Mr. Winthrop's adherents asserted that Mayor Gaynor had tried to make them vote for Mr. Churchill, and that the Mayor and his proteges were affiliated with Tammany Hall. In February, 1913, Mr. Churchill was chosen President of the board unanimously, Mr. Winthrop having decided not to run for the office again. In his address to the board after his election President Churchill thus outlined his policy:

> The Board of Education is and must be the paramount authority intrusted with the management and control of the public education of this city. The authorities having charge of the finances of the city, however, have a right to the closest scrutiny of the expenditure of school funds. The Board should favor such scrutiny. There was education before there were Commissioners or Superintendents, but there was never a school or schooling without a teacher. The era of criticism through which the Department of Education has passed has brought forth concrete recommendations that must be pondered. This era of criticism should be succeeded by an era of construction.

In making his committee appointments Mr. Churchill gave the Chairmanship of the committee of the Normal College to his late opponent for the Presidency, Mr. Winthrop. He gave the following offices to Mr. Winthrop's former adherents: Chairman of the Committee on Finance, John Greene; Chairman of the Committee on Elementary Schools, Abraham Stern; Chairman of the Committee on High Schools and Training Schools, Arthur S. Somers; Chairman of the Committee on Athletics, Gen. Wingate. Mr. Churchill voted for all the McKee bills, which regulated the salaries of the supervising and teaching staff, invested the Board of Education with power to designate any member of the teaching or supervising staff to investigate and report upon any subject of which the board had cognizance or over which it had legal control; which authorized the Board of Education of its own initiative to adopt and modify courses of study; gave the board the right to appoint three additional District Superintendents, and which authorized it to appoint two additional examiners, thereby increasing the Board of Examiners from four to six. He voted also for the Silverstein bill, which provided that the salaries of male teachers in grades of the seventh and eighth years in the elementary schools appointed previous to Jan. 1, 1912, should be not less than those now paid for any regular teacher in either of those grades.

Mr. Churchill's policy has been to lessen the power of the City Superintendent and increase that of the Board of Education; to make the City Superintendent the servant and not the master of the board; to make the members of the Board of Education "something more than rubber stamps." His latest effort along this line was his letter to Dr. Maxwell requesting him not to attend in office hours an outside conference on the annual budget, which, though presented to, had not been adopted by the Board of Education. He asked the City Superintendent to instruct his subordinates not to attend the conference. Dr. Maxwell replied that he intended to attend the conference and that he would not instruct his subordinates not to do so, as it would violate their right of free speech. Mr. Churchill and a majority of the board passed a resolution censuring Dr. Maxwell for his attitude.

Cast Vote Which Elected Winthrop.

Dr. Louis Haupt was appointed by Mayor Low in 1902 and was reappointed by him in 1904. In 1909 Mayor McClellan reappointed him for five years. Dr. Haupt, although considered one of Mr. Churchill's supporters in the Presidency contest in 1912, voted for Mr. Winthrop. It was his vote which elected Mr. Winthrop. It was said that he understood that the first ballot would be only complimentary and that he intended to vote for Mr. Churchill on the second ballot. He was Chairman of the Committee on Special Schools under the Winthrop administration. He is now without a Chairmanship, but is a member of the Executive Committee and of the Committees on Buildings, on Sites and on Special Schools.

Miss Olivia Leventritt was appointed a member of the board on Nov. 12, 1909, by Mayor McClellan, to fill the unexpired term of Walter Alexander. She opposed the equal pay law, and voted against several of the McKee bills. She is a member of the Committees on Supplies, on High Schools, and Training Schools.

Robert E. McCafferty was appointed by Mayor McClellan for a full term of five years from Jan. 1, 1909. He voted for all except one of the McKee bills and for the Silverstein bill. He supported Mr. Churchill in the measure for the relief of the holders of License No. 1 and in the vote of censure passed upon Dr. Maxwell. He is a member of the Committees on Supplies and on Sites.

Henry P. Morrison was appointed by Mayor Gaynor on Dec. 28, 1911, to succeed Ralph McKee, who resigned after his election to the Legislature. He voted for the McKee and Silverstein bills. He is Chairman of the Committee on Supplies and a member of the Committee on Care of Buildings and the Executive Committee of the Normal College.

Abraham Stern is the oldest member of the board in point of service. He was appointed by Mayor Van Wyck Feb. 25, 1899, on the old School Board of Manhattan. He became a member of the Central Board of Education in 1900. In 1902 Mayor Low appointed him a member of the new Board of Education. He was reappointed in 1904 by Mayor Low, and in 1909 by Mayor McClellan. He opposed at first the equal pay law and then favored it. He opposed Mr. Churchill and Corporation Counsel Watson in the License No. 1 matter. He voted for three of the McKee bills. On two others he did not vote. He was Chairman of the special committee which made a long and searching investigation of the ways and methods of the Board of Examiners. He sided with Mr. Churchill in the vote of censure passed upon Dr. Maxwell. He has been for a long time a member of the Committees on By-laws and Legislation and on the Elementary Schools. He is at present a member of the Executive Committee and the Committee on By-laws and Legislation, and is Chairman of the Committee on Elementary Schools.

Ernest W. Stratmann was appointed by Mayor Gaynor on July 16, 1912, to succeed Frank W. Meyer, resigned. He voted for all the McKee bills. He is a member of the Committees on Finance and Elementary Schools. He voted for the censure of Dr. Maxwell.

Dr. Ira S. Wile was appointed by Mayor Gaynor Oct. 21, 1912, to succeed Richard B. Aldcrofft, Jr., resigned. He voted for the McKee bills and for the censure upon Dr. Maxwell. He is Chairman of the Committee on Studies and Text Books and a member of the Committees on Elementary Schools, High Schools, and Training Schools.

Gen. George W. Wingate at one time was a sachem in Tammany Hall and John Kelly's counsel. From 1898 to 1902 he was a member of the School Board. In 1902 he was appointed on the new Board of Education by Mayor Low and was reappointed by him in 1904. In 1909 he was reappointed by Mayor McClellan. He voted against some of the McKee bills. He has voted most of the time on the side of Dr. Maxwell and was opposed to the vote of censure passed upon the City Superintendent. He is a member of the Executive Committee and Chairman of the Committee on Athletics. He is also a member of the Committee on Lectures and Libraries. He was the leader of the Winthrop forces in the election of 1912, but in 1913 voted for Mr. Churchill.

WANT FIVE WOMEN NAMED.

City Federation of Women's Clubs Presents Candidates for Board of Education.

To urge upon Mayor Kline the advisability of appointing women to five of the nine places on the Board of Education which will be vacant on Jan. 1, seventy-five members of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs called upon the Mayor yesterday at the City Hall. Miss Florence Guernsey, President of the federation, who is a candidate for appointment, was in charge of the delegation. The club women did not ask for the reappointment of Miss Leventritt, who is one of the retiring Commissioners, and their suggestions did not seem to appeal to Miss Grace Strachan, President of the Interborough Teachers' Association, who was present.

The women the members of the federation would like to have appointed to the board are Mrs. Clarence Burns, President of the Little Mothers' Association; Mrs. Simon Baruch, Chairman of the Anti-Suffrage Committee of the federation; Mrs. Belle de Rivera, President of the New York Theatre Club; Miss Florence Guernsey, and Mrs. Cornelius Zabriskie, President of the Brooklyn Women's Union.

After the names of these candidates had been presented to the Mayor, Miss Katherine D. Blake, Chairman of the federation's Committee on Education, said that the delegation had not called to criticise the members of the Board of Education, but rather to urge that women should have a share in the government of the children.

"During the last twelve years," she said, "it seems to have been the studied policy to prevent women in this city from taking the part they should in the educational system."

Miss Strachan said that the women teachers did not care whether the Mayor appointed men or women to the board, so long as he picked out persons who were capable. Then she referred to one case, in which a woman Commissioner was not willing to stand by the teachers. She did not mention this Commissioner's name, but said:

"A woman member of the board once had a proposal before her which would benefit the women teachers. Deliberating over the matter, she said, 'I don't know whether I should vote yes or no, but I want to vote against the women.'"

Miss Strachan also said that women teachers in Brooklyn were in favor of the appointment of Mrs. Frank H. Cothran of that Borough. Mayor Kline said that he would consider the names submitted by the delegation carefully.

To Aid Music School Settlement.

A Pavlowa Carnival will be held at the Metropolitan Opera House on the afternoon of Dec. 19 for the benefit of the Music School Settlement. The date of the Czar's birthday has been chosen as a compliment to the little Russian. Mme. Pavlowa with her Imperial Ballet will devote two and a half hours to a programme of exceptional interest, after which there will be a the dansant in the Metropolitan foyer with Anna Pavlowa's own orchestra under the direction of Theodore Steier to furnish the music. Many well-known young actresses, who will be attired in Russian costumes, have volunteered to sell flowers. Boxes may be reserved by application to Miss Christine V. Baker, 8 West Fifty-seventh Street.

FAVORS RESTRICTING MOTOR BUS SERVICE

CITES LONDON'S TROUBLES

Accidents Multiplied There and the Heavy Vehicles Damaged Macadamized Streets.

The Bureau of Franchises sent its assistant engineer, John A. McCollum, to London and Paris last Summer to gather information on the practical working of motor buses for use in connection with the applications now before the Board of Estimate for increasing the motor bus service in New York. His report has just been published.

It recommends that the city exercise its authority not only as to the routes to be established, but also over the type, size, weight, and capacity of the vehicles to be operated. Mr. McCollum is of the opinion that great attention should be paid to the amount of competition with existing means of transportation that a new motor bus system would set up.

"The motor bus," he says, "should not be permitted on any route unless it will thereby fill a place in the transportation field not already supplied, or if it is, to duplicate the service already furnished unless it will thereby provide a much more complete, efficient, economical, comfortable, or otherwise better facility than that now existing."

He considers that there is no reason why a motor bus line should be permitted on the same street as a trolley line, if it is to do exactly the same kind of work, unless it will serve the public very much more advantageously than the trolley cars. Continuous efficient street car service, he says, can result only from the prosperity of the enterprise, and if the competition of the motor buses cuts into the prosperity of the street railway its efficiency is bound to decrease.

"To say the least," he says, "two lines of motor buses under different control, operating in the same street, would not tend to diminish the number of accidents. With such competitive operation, police regulation would be almost without effect. It is stated by the officials of the London General Company and others that before the amalgamation of the omnibus companies in London many accidents were caused by racing or interference, which does not take place when the omnibuses are under one management."

Quoting the experience of London, Mr. McCollum prophesies that if more than one company in this city receives a motor bus franchise it will not be long before they are consolidated. Considering the effect of motor bus traffic on the surface of the streets, Mr. McCollum says that the motor bus should be excluded from all macadamized streets or should be permitted only on streets with a heavy foundation. "London authorities agree," he says, "that motor bus operation destroys macadam pavement."

The London and Paris companies, according to Mr. McCollum, get off a good deal easier as far as taxes are concerned than do the present Fifth Avenue stages. It is reckoned by the Fifth Avenue Coach Company that the requisite payment to the city of 5 per cent. of its gross earnings and an annual license fee of $20 a bus works out about $500 a year a bus. In England the State gets most of its money from the motor buses by way of the tax on gasoline which, in the case of public vehicles is 3 cents a gallon. This averages about $136 a car, though it has been known in specific cases to run up as high as $210 a year. Police and local taxation licenses bring the annual charge per bus up to about $165 a year, and in addition to this there is a county license, payable whenever a bus is put into service, which amounts to $5. In Paris the motor bus companies have to pay 3½ per cent. of their gross receipts up to $5,770,000 and 4 per cent. over that sum. There is also a city tax on the benzolene fuel brought into the city.

Mr. McCollum reflects severely on the way in which advertisements are displayed on the London buses, and asserts that when bus traffic is heavy the advertisements give "the impression of an almost continuously moving signboard on each side of the street. The effect is anything but pleasing."

So many accidents were caused by motor buses in the streets of London that a Parliamentary Committee was appointed in 1912 to consider the matter. It collected these statistics:

1912	2,908	182	62.6

Harry P. Nichols, chief engineer of the Bureau of Franchises, summarizes the results of Mr. McCollum's studies and points out the effect an increased motor bus service here is likely to have in adding to the congestion of the streets, increasing accidents and cutting down street railway earnings. He concludes:

"Considering these objections there yet seems to be a field where motor bus transportation can be conducted with advantage to the public because of the congestion at certain hours of the day on the existing transportation lines and also because of the lack of facilities in certain local areas and directly between points where traffic might easily be induced."

COLUMBIA BARS FLOWERS.

Rule for Senior Dance May Be Followed by Juniors.

Girls who are invited by the Columbia seniors to their annual dance, which is to be held in the St. Regis on Jan. 7, will have to go without flowers. The committee of the senior class which is arranging for the dance made the announcement in The Spectator yesterday requesting that no flowers be sent to the young women attending the dance. "It is sincerely hoped," says the committee, "that this rule be observed, as any exception might cause unnecessary embarrassment."

This is the first time that a dance committee Columbia has requested the students not to send flowers. It is believed that this year's Junior Promenade Committee will follow the example of the seniors.

Gentlemen— It is several years since the Pianola was brought to my attention, and having been, if I am not mistaken, the first one to endorse this important invention. I have since watched its development with the utmost interest.

From the first the wonderful possibilities of a piano technique immediately available to everyone, which should yet be under the control of the performer, appeared to me as the means to make music an accessible Art,- just as accessible to the great publics as literature, sculpture, and painting.

Your first Pianolas, one of which I myself own, contained this possibility in embryo, & it has remained for you, with gradual development during intervening years, to realize it. Your success with the Pianola is therefore well deserved, and I view the growth of your popularity, both in America, and in Europe, with satisfaction, as a verification of my early opinion as to the future of the Pianola.

Hotel Touraine
Boston

I cannot conceive of any reason why the Pianola should not be in every home. As a pianoforte, when the keyboard is used, it leaves nothing to be desired, while for acquiring a broad musical education, for the development of the understanding of good music, which modern culture demands, it is undoubtedly the most perfect, and really great medium.

There have appeared in recent years a great many mechanical devices for piano-playing. I have heard several of them, and, though not denying their certain qualities, I have to maintain my former opinion:- The Pianola is still the best, unsurpassable, supreme.

Most cordially yours

'IMMORTALS' PLAN HALL OF FAME HERE

BRANDER MATTHEWS'S HINT

New Members Admitted to American Academy of Arts and Letters —Next Meeting in Paris.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15. — America's Immortals are planning a Hall of Fame in which portraits of themselves may be preserved, and where they may hold their future meetings. The home probably will be established in New York. It is highly improbable that women will have any place in the proposed "Mount Olympus."

Five American women are eligible as "Immortals," but they are advised, because of tedious procedure that practically closes the door to them, to start a Hall of Fame of their own. They are Ida M. Tarbell, research; Mary Wilkins Freeman, fiction; Margaret Deland, fiction; Edith Wharton, fiction, and Mary Cassatt, painting. They were named to-day by Brander Matthews, who presided at the joint meeting of the American Academy of Arts and Letters and the National Institute of Art and Letters, in Fullerton Ha.. There are other women who obviously might be eligible, Mr. Matthews added cautiously, but these five came first to mind.

"The subject of admitting women has not come up officially for ten years, since the admission of Julia Ward Howe," said Mr. Matthews. "To be admitted to our 'Immortals' the woman candidate would have to be proposed by three members. The application would then be assigned to that section for example, literature. If three-quarters of the members of the section approved the name would come before the entire body at the next annual meeting."

Mr. Matthews then named the five as quoted above:

"They come to mind," he continued, "as women about whom there could be no question of worthiness; but I believe it would be advisable for them to start an 'Immortals' of their own."

A "Tribute to Chicago," by Meredith Nicholson, brought to a close the session. Previous to his address a paper written by John Burroughs on "Science and Literature" had been read by the Secretary, accompanied by Mr. Burroughs's request that publicity should not be given to it.

The gold medal awarded to Augustus Thomas at the business session of Friday night was given him, and Mr. Thomas accepted it with a graceful address.

Following is the list of those admitted to membership:

DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURE—Ashley Horace Thorndyke of New York, Professor of English at Columbia University and magazine editor and contributor; Francis Barton Gummere, Professor of English at Haverford College, Haverford, Penn., author of textbooks on rhetoric and grammar; Frank Jewett, Mather, Jr., Professor of Art at Princeton University and author of art books; Brand Whitlock, former Mayor of Toledo, Ohio, author and short story writer.

DEPARTMENT OF ARCHITECTURE—Henry Bacon of New York, designer of the Lincoln Memorial at Washington, D. C.; Arnold William Brunner of New York, selected as designer for the new building of the Department of State at Washington.

Paris was chosen as the next meeting place at the joint assembly.

MRS. CLAUSSEN SEEKS AID.

Woman Whose Sanity Is Under Investigation Gets Habeas Corpus Writ

Supreme Court Justice Delany announced yesterday that he would hear argument to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock on a writ of habeas corpus sued out for Mrs. Ida Claussen, who seeks release from the Tombs. Mrs. Claussen was arrested on her arrival from Europe a few weeks ago for writing a threatening letter to Charles Strauss, President of the Board of Water Supply. She was held in $5,000 bail, but though bonds were offered for her in General Sessions Judge Malone declined to accept them, pending an inquiry into her sanity.

Mrs Claussen was once in the Bloomingdale Asylum, but was released. She created some excitement two years ago by depositing in the County Clerk's office some legal papers she had drawn, and which purported to be a summons and complaint in a suit against Col. Roosevelt for $1,000,000. Mrs. Claussen asserted that Col. Roosevelt had prevented her marrying into one of the royal houses of Europe.

FIND DROWNED MAN IS UNLIKE STOVER

NO CLUE TO COMMISSIONER

Absence Worries Friends, Who Have Received No Word—Settlement Engagement Was Ignored.

Friends of Park Commissioner Charles B. Stover, who have been much worried because of his unexplained absence from his home here for three weeks, investigated yesterday the report that the body of a man who resembled him had been taken from the Christiana River at Wilmington, Del. Robbins Gilman of the University Settlement at 184 Eldridge Street, where the President of the Department of Parks has lived for the last five years, and James K. Paulding went to Wilmington and looked at the body. They saw little resemblance to Stover. When Mr. Gilman returned last night he said:

"We did not expect to find that the drowned man was Commissioner Stover, but under the circumstances we thought it best to make a personal investigation of the report from Wilmington. I believe the Park Commissioner is taking a quiet vacation somewhere in Pennsylvania and will return within a few days, or a week at the latest."

Mr. Gilman's reasons for this belief are based on a letter he received from Stover on Nov. 8, written on letter paper of the Department of Parks, and postmarked Philadelphia. In the letter, Mr. Stover said: "If any one asks for me, just say I am taking a vacation." It is regarded as peculiar, in view of the published reports that Mr. Stover has not communicated with any of his friends.

Ira H. Patching, secretary to Commissioner Stover, said yesterday that Mr. Stover told him when he was last at the office in Central Park that he was going away to visit "other cities."

Commissioner Stover, it was said yesterday, never had taken a vacation since he became the head of the department four years ago until he went away three weeks ago. It is the fact that he has not communicated with friends which causes their worry for him. Mr. Stover had made an engagement to deliver some lectures at the University Settlement last week, but he did not appear and sent no word of explanation.

President Stover, who is a bachelor, has a suite of three rooms in the Settlement House. He was one of the founders of the Settlement. Mr. Stover was graduated from Lafayette College, and studied for the ministry in Union Theological Seminary, but was not ordained. He started a boys' club twenty-six years ago where the Settlement now is, the first club of the kind in this country, it was said. So far as his associates are aware he has no relatives here, but it is believed he has a cousin in Doylestown, Penn., where he formerly lived.

50 YEARS WITH R. HOE & CO.

A dinner was given in honor of William Spalckhaver at the Brevoort Hotel last evening to celebrate his fiftieth anniversary with R. Hoe & Co., printing press manufacturers. Officers of the company and his associates joined in well wishes to the guest of honor.

Mr. Spalckhaver has been chief engineer and head of the drafting department most of that time, and has been responsible for many improvements in large printing presses. Many patents also are due to his work.

He was the recipient of many telegrams last night, and the officers of his company and his associates congratulated him heartily.

Robert Hoe, President, in behalf of the attendants at the dinner, gave Mr. Spalckhaver a silver loving cup. He praised the loyalty, genius and energy displayed by Mr. Spalckhaver in his many years of service with the company.

Present at the dinner as guests were Mr. Spalckhaver's three sons, John, George and William Spalckhaver, Jr. Mr. Spalckhaver attended the reunion at Gettysburg with the U. S. Grant Post, of which he has long been a member. He was commissioned Lieutenant in the Fifty-fourth United States Volunteers during the civil war.

Those present at the dinner were:

FIGHTING TO BREAK BUTTERFIELD WILL

Motions by Three Sets of Litigants. Heard by Surrogate Southard at Cold Spring.

BULK OF ESTATE TO Y.M.C.A.

Lawyer Hagar, a Legatee, Accused of Undue Influence — Said to Have Eight Prior Wills.

Special to The New York Times.

Beacon, N. Y., Nov. 15.—The first active steps to break the will of Mrs. Julia Lorillard Butterfield were taken at Cold Spring to-day before Surrogate J. Bennett Southard. The will, which was filed Aug. 14, disposed of an estate valued at $3,000,000, the bulk of which was left to the Army and Navy Branch of the Y. M. C. A. It is understood that if this will should be set aside Albert Francis Hagar, Mrs. Butterfield's lawyer, to whom were bequeathed $100,000 and other property, under the present will, would be in a position to produce a turn eight prior wills, each of which would be subject to attack.

There are three distinct sets of litigants who want the probate set aside, and the contest promises to be long. Daniel Butterfield, 2d, son of the late Theodore Butterfield, has filed an answer alleging undue influence. Another answer has been filed by four grandnieces who were cut off in one of the clauses of the will, while several cousins of Mrs. Butterfield allege that they were not cited and that if the will should be set aside they would be entitled to the property.

The answer of the four grandnieces who are the children of Frederick Joseph Wheeler, alleges that the will was not duly executed; that Mrs. Butterfield was not of sound mind or memory, and that the will was obtained by "fraud and undue influence practiced upon the decedent by one Albert Francis Hagar, a legatee and a devisee named in said paper, or by some other person or persons acting in concert or privy with him."

Mr. Hagar is one of the executors. He was for many years Mrs. Butterfield's attorney.

The hearing to-day was on three motions, which will have to be threshed out before witnesses are called. One motion was to appoint a temporary administrator to handle the estate pending determination of the proceedings. Another motion is to have Attorney Hagar file Mrs. Butterfield's previous wills. The third motion is to admit the cousins who claim they should have been cited. Several of these cousins are represented by William H. Hamilton of 100 Broadway, Manhattan, and it is estimated that all told there are nearly forty cousins.

The case will be complicated because of the three sets of litigants. Each set is against the others, and against the executors. To Daniel Butterfield, 2d, is bequeathed $10,000 under the present will, and it is understood that he is contesting because he believes some of the prior wills left him more than $10,000. The grandnieces want all the wills canceled, as they claim to be the sole heirs at law.

ELKUS SPENT $16,773.

Cost of His Race for Court of Appeals—Contributed $4,986 Himself.

ALBANY, Nov. 15.—Joseph M. Proskauer, campaign agent for Abram I. Elkus, certified to the Secretary of State to-day that he received $15,038.88 and spent $16,773.88 in furtherance of Mr. Elkus's unsuccessful race for Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Elkus contributed $4,986.56.

SHIPPERS TO FIGHT INCREASE OF RATES

Protests from Eastern Trunk-Line Territory Pour In on Commerce Board.

INQUIRY TO BE THOROUGH

Will Last Many Months and Decision May Not Be Rendered Before Next Fall.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—There is every indication that the plea of the railroads throughout the Eastern trunk-line territory which asked for a general advance of 5 per cent. in their interstate freight rates will be fought by shippers and organizations of shippers vigorously enough to prolong the investigation of the case by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The commission has received communications from shippers and manufacturers throughout the territory that would be affected, protesting against the increase and indicating a desire to be heard during the investigation. Many other communications have come to the commission favoring the increase.

Shipping organizations in Chicago and Duluth have an organized movement under way in opposition to so much of the proposed 5 per cent. advance as would affect rail and lake rates. The Chicago Association of Commerce has engaged the services of the firm of Cassoday, Butler, Lamb & Foster to represent it at the hearings scheduled to begin in Washington on Nov. 24. William E. Lamb, a member of this firm, was formerly the chief examiner of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and will probably have charge of the case for that association, in association with H. C. Barlow, traffic director of the Freight Traffic Committee of the organization.

A FIRST DELAY OF FOUR MONTHS.

The rates under investigation were to have become effective to-day throughout the territory east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers. It cost the railroads $250,000 to print the 23,000 tariffs which were filed proposing these advances. They included advances in class rates, commodity rates, rail and lake rates, and embraced also rates which were international because of connections with Canadian railroads. The commission has suspended the operation of these rates until March 12, 1914, holding them up for four months. At the end of that period, if the investigation has not been completed, another order will be issued suspending them according to the length of time which will then be regarded as necessary to complete the case.

Members of the commission asserted to-day that the investigation would be most thorough and that it would also be expedited as much as possible, but they would make no prediction of a definite date as to when the case might be concluded. There is a strong impression around the commission that nearly ten months will elapse before the rates can be made effective, if the commission is going to allow any advance to be made.

It was pointed out that under the law which grants the commission blanket power to suspend all the rates in the 23,000 tariffs affected the going into effect of the rates cannot be postponed for a longer period than ten months. If the commission does not reach a decision within ten months from Nov. 15—to-day—then the rates would go into effect and would only be subject to attack upon complaint and as separate rates instead of en bloc. To-day, however, it was asserted at the offices of the commission that no such contingency was likely to arise, since it was the purpose of the commission to expedite the case, the most important one before it, as much as possible, and there was no danger that the entire ten months' period mentioned in the law would be exceeded by the commission's investigation.

In the advance rate cases of a few years ago about seven months were required for the investigation by the commission and the handing down of its order. At that time the railroads were seeking a general advance of about 10 per cent. in all interstate rates. The commission entered upon that investigation on July 13, 1910. The case was submitted on Jan. 19, 1911, and the order of the commission refusing to allow the proposed advance was issued on Feb. 22, 1911.

Preliminary Hearing Nov. 24.

The preliminary hearing has been set for Monday, Nov. 24. At that time the railroads, which, under the law, have upon them the burden of offering proof as to the reasonableness of and justification for the 5 per cent. rise in all interstate freight rates, will begin to submit their side of the case. They will have their case well prepared, and intend to present a vast amount of statistical and other evidence to show that the railroads should be allowed to raise freight rates 5 per cent. in official classification territory; that their operating expenses have increased; that their net operating income has not correspondingly increased, and that the railroads "need the money" for extension and betterments.

The railroads will be represented at the preliminary hearing by Attorneys George Stuart Patterson of the Pennsylvania Railroad, George F. Brownell of the Erie system, and Hugh L. Bond of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. These attorneys appeared in the advance rate case of several years ago, and will have general charge and direction of the presentation of the railroad side of the case. Shippers will also be on hand through counsel, who will ask to be allowed an opportunity to go over the evidence presented by the railroads, and to submit evidence of their own in rejoinder.

Louis D. Brandeis of Boston has been employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to serve it as special counsel during the investigation. It will be the particular province of Mr. Brandeis, as was explained to-day, to go over the evidence not only of the railroads, but likewise of the shippers, and apply the acid test for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in the situation.

During the consideration of the railroads for higher rates in the advance rate case of several years ago Frank Lyon, then counsel for the commission, served in the rôle which Mr. Brandeis will now fill. Mr. Lyon is no longer employed by the commission, but is an interstate commerce lawyer on his own account. It was learned to-day that Mr. Lyon will appear before the commission, representing the interests of various shippers in the coming hearings.

After the preliminary hearing to be begun Nov. 24 there will be a halt in the presentation of evidence, during which period the evidence presented by the railroads will be carefully studied and analyzed. Should the shippers wish to offer evidence—and it is understood they insist upon being allowed to do so—there will be a resumption of the hearings to receive that evidence, and the railroads will be allowed to combat the evidence of the shippers just as the shippers will be allowed to combat the testimony of the railroads. In this way the commission hopes to be able to reach the facts. Arguments from both sides will then be received and the case taken under advisement.

Decision Before Sept. 15 Next.

The decision will be handed down some time before Sept. 15, 1914. While it cannot now be definitely stated when the rates would go into effect, if the commission were to allow the rise in whole or part, it is believed here that the case will not be disposed of before July, August or September of next year. The docket in the case has already become voluminous and contains hundreds of letters from shippers protesting against the higher rates. There are also letters from bankers and others who feel that the time has come when the level of rates ought to be advanced.

Each member of the commission has received a statement from the Chicago Association of Commerce stating that its Freight Traffic Committee had taken this latter stand toward the proposed increase.

"The committee especially invites the commission's attention to the fact that the movement toward higher transportation charges in official classification territory has, in the past, fallen to an undue and unreasonable extent upon rail and lake rates. If the claims of the carriers be conceded that increased cost of operation, taxes and return upon additional capital justifies some increase in all-rail interstate rates we respectfully submit that such claim can not and does not apply to the rail and lake rates which have been advanced three times since 1900, (a total of approximately 11 per cent.,) without any change in the all-rail rates, which fact not only debars the claim that a fixed relation exists between the all-rail and the rail-and-lake rates that requires them to be similarly changed, but establishes the further fact that traffic moving under these rates has already contributed in full measure to any reasonable advance. We, therefore, are irrevocably opposed to any advance in the present rail-and-lake rates."

PORPOISES SPLASH IN AQUARIUM POOL

SWIM AROUND INCESSANTLY

Nine porpoises were placed yesterday in the big centre pool of the Aquarium, and are the only living porpoises in contiuement. They were caught off Cape Hatteras, N. C., last Wednesday at the one porpoise fishery the American coast boasts, and, in charge of Dr. C. H. Townsend, Director of the Aquarium, arrived yesterday afternoon in the Old Dominion steamship Madison from Norfolk, Va. They were at once taken to the Aquarium, and, after their confinement for three days in narrow crates, they took wildly to the water and raised a regular teapot tempest in the big pool, rolling and spouting and swimming incessantly.

Four times in the past Dr. Townsend has tried to keep a live porpoise in the Aquarium, but none of his captives has lived more than a few months, as each of them died from the effects of injuries received in transit. It has always been found impossible to get the big mammals to the Aquarium in a healthy condition, and so last week Dr. Townsend determined to go himself and superintend the capture and transportation of his new specimens.

Joseph K. Nye of New Bedford, Mass., who owns the fishery at Cape Hatteras, offered to supply him with the porpoises on the beach as soon as they were caught, and the New York Zoological Association paid the expense of getting them to the city. Dr. R. C. Osburn, Assistant Director of the Aquarium, superintended their receipt in their new quarters.

The excitement over the porpoises began early yesterday afternoon in the preparation for their arrival. The big pool in the centre of the building, which is 30 feet in diameter and 5 deet deep, was selected as their home. In it were fifteen large fish, several 300-pound groupers, a number of big drum fish, and one sturgeon six feet long. The Aquarium attendants, with nets, poles, and hooks, spent three thrilling hours catching these fish and transferring them in safety to other pools.

Then the porpoises arrived, two in a crate. The smallest of them is five feet long and the largest, eight feet. In weight they range from 200 to 400 pounds. Thus, although small for porpoises, they are of considerable size, and it was no easy work for a dozen hands to get them from their cates to the pool. They were all finally dumped into the water, however, and as each found himself in swimming room he started round the pool in a clockwise direction and swam with every scrap of his energy.

Swimming, rolling, and rising to spout side by side almost simultaneously, they soon created a splashing and flying of waves and spray that, according to Dr. Osburn, will not stop as long as the porpoises live. If they slept, he said, they slept swimming, for they never rested. For this reason they are the most spectacular exhibit in the Aquarium.

Last Wednesday fishermen made two hauls with a heavy thousand-foot seine, Dr. Townsend explained yesterday, and drew sixty-two porpoises to the beach at Cape Hatteras. From these Dr. Townsend selected ten, which were put two by two in water-tight crates. These were wooden boxes, 10 or 12 feet long and three feet wide. Each was lined with oiled canvas and partially filled with water, so that the porpoises lay half covered with their heads in the air to permit them to breathe, while the water kept them cool.

Being warm-blooded aquatic mammals, Dr. Osburn said, porpoises radiate a great deal of heat, and when shipped out of water their bodies get so warm that large blisters, which later become sores, are raised on their skins. The last porpoise in the Aquarium, one caught last Summer, lived only two months before dying from such sores.

Thus packed in the most scientific fashion, the ten porpoises were taken the hundred miles from Hatteras to Norfolk in the power schooner Hamlet and were then transferred to the Madison. All of them behaved very well on the trip, except one fellow, who constantly pounded the sides of his narrow crate. He died yesterday afternoon just before the Madison docked.

The other nine were in fine condition when they arrived, and they were delivered at the Aquarium within two hours after their landing.

Because it has been so difficult to keep porpoises alive in captivity, scientists have had little opportunity to study their nature and habits, said Dr. Townsend yesterday. It is not even known, for example, how long the average one lives. They grow to be ten feet or more in length and increase in weight until they tip the scales at a thousand pounds.

"The name of these fellows" added Dr. Townsend, "is 'Tursiops Tursio,' the first being the genus and the second the species. They are gregarious and piscivorous. We shall feed them on herring and codfish, and each will consume from twenty to thirty pounds a day.

"If they live, and I believe they will, we shall probably learn a great deal from them. Never before have we had more than one porpoise at a time in the Aquarium, and never one in good health. Now we have nine, all in fine condition, and, as far as I know, the only ones in confinement anywhere."

HOTEL GUESTS ALARMED.

The hundred guests of the Great Eastern Hotel and the forty guests of the South Ferry Hotel were routed from their beds shortly after 6 o'clock yesterday morning by a fire in the six-story building at 2 and 3 South Street, occupied by Charles D. Durkee & Co., ship chandlers.

The fire completely destroyed the building and had gained such headway that the firemen could fight it only from the adjoining roofs and from Whitehall Street and by streams played from three fire boats. They did succeed, however, in keeping the flames from the sub-cellar, which was stocked with gasolene and oakum. The density of the far-spreading smoke blackened the Battery and the flames could be seen far out on the bay and across to Brooklyn. It took two hours to get the fire under control. It did not reach adjoining buildings.

When a small fire was discovered at 3:30 o'clock yesterday morning in the delicatessen store on the ground floor of the thirteen-story apartment house—the Colonial—at 445 Columbus Avenue, the smoke found a chimney in the elevator shaft and swiftly spread through the upper stories, to the alarm of the more than 200 tenants. Most of the tenants accepted the night clerk's word for it that there was no danger and were spared the annoyance of an early morning flight to the streets. The fire did not reach beyond the supplies and equipment of the delicatessen shop.

SENATORS AND PUMPKINS.

The First Will Orate, the Second Decorate a Suffrage Rally

Mammoth pumpkins are to be a feature of the big harvest home festival and Thanksgiving suffrage rally to be given under the auspices of the Woman Suffrage Party on Wednesday evening of this week, with four Senators from as many woman suffrage States to speak. There will be eleven of the great pumpkins, representing the eleven States in which women have been enfranchised, and heaps of others, just a trifle green as yet, represent the States which have not yet given the vote to women—where, in fact, things are not yet quite ripe.

The meeting will be a thanksgiving for the new States, which, with Alaska, have enfranchised their women, and for the good work the women have done since their enfranchisement. There has been a great demand for seats and boxes, and many dinner parties will precede the meeting.

STUDENTS READ THE TIMES.

A census was taken some time ago among pupils of the High School of Commerce to determine which newspaper was most widely read in each class and to which newspaper the pupils tended most as they advanced from year to year in their course and, presumably, in the cultivation of their taste and judgment.

Of the twelve papers selected—morning and evening newspapers of New York—it was found that THE NEW YORK TIMES, though ranking fifth in the number of its readers in the first term of the freshman class and fourth in the second term, jumped to first place in the second term of the sophomore class, with 61 readers of the total of 220, as against 43 readers for the next paper in popularity in that class.

From the sophomore class through the junior and senior classes the leadership of THE TIMES continued in ever increasing ratio, the number of pupils reading it in each class comparing as follows with the number reading the paper that ranked next highest: Junior class, first term, 44 to 29; second term, 12 to 9; senior class, first term, 25 to 18; second term, 31 to 22.

Comparative figures for the various morning newspapers were as follows in the first two years:

	1st Term.	2d Term.	3d Term.	4th Term.
Times	115	90	50	61
World	116	62	49	19
American	62	47	15	20
Sun	41	23	17	14
Press	15	23	10	12
Herald	20	13	13	7
Tribune	8	5	6	9

For the last two years the junior and senior classes figures were as follows:

	1st Term.	2d Term.	3d Term.	4th Term.
Times	44	12	25	31
World	10	4	11	10
American	9	1	8	5
Sun	7	0	8	4
Press	6	1	0	8
Herald	2	3	3	2
Tribune	5	1	3	5

Similar statistics concerning the "newspaper progress" of pupils are being taken in other high schools of this city and Newark by their English departments.

LOOK TO WILSON TO END STRIKE

CROWDS CHEER LONE TRAIN

Sunset Limited, Run by Superintendent, Meets an Ovation as It Speeds Westward.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 15.—There is a strong belief here to-night that the Southern Pacific strike will reach a speedy settlement. The business interests pin their faith to the efforts of the Federal Mediation Board, set in motion by President Wilson, and the strong disposition on both sides to listen to the mediators.

The tremendous damage to business that is sure to follow a prolonged tie up seems to be comprehended by the strikers as well as by the railway officials.

But danger of the strike spreading to other Louisiana and Texas roads was brought out this afternoon at a meeting of union representatives from six other rail lines, who conferred with the strike leaders in Houston. They said that as yet no attempt had been made to divert Southern Pacific business to other lines, but that in the event of any such assistance being extended to the Southern Pacific by other lines their employes would walk out.

The strikers say they have a fund of $4,000,000 in their "war chest."

The company issued a statement this afternoon saying that more trains were being moved than on any day since the strike and promising that service would be improved daily.

In Washington the Federal Board of Mediation and Arbitration went into an all-day conference on the strike. Before the men walked out they refused to place their grievances in the hands of the board, contending that the matter was outside its jurisdiction.

The strike is so seriously regarded in Louisiana that the constitutional convention in session in Baton Rouge passed a resolution this morning urging both the unions and the company to bring it to an end. Copies of the resolution were sent to headquarters of both sides.

More violence to strikebreakers was reported last night when an engineer at Lafayette, La., was beaten and kicked by strike sympathizers. J. C. Simin, Division Superintendent at Lafayette, saved the man's life by driving off the mob with a revolver. Two union men denied that strikers had participated in the assault.

Mr. Semin took the Sunset Limited through to Lafayette on Friday. The trip was an ovation from end to end. At every station crowds gathered to cheer the lone train. Flowers were thrown into the car windows and food was handed in to the train crew.

The train was accompanied by armed guards, and a tourist coach was attached to it to be occupied by the crew and guards.

The Southern Port Cotton Meal mill here to-day shut down on account of the strike. It could not obtain cars to carry on its business.

The Southern Pacific Company has promised that it will handle twelve trains to-morrow, and serious trouble along the line is feared. Many more strikebreakers reached here to-day. The men quartered in New Orleans are heavily guarded.

HOUSTON, Texas, Nov. 15.—One of two peace proposals aimed to settle the Southern Pacific strike was refused by labor leaders here to-day. They rejected Julius Kruttschnitt's offer to confer with the Federated Unions' Board, asserting that it was an evasion. President Wilson's move for mediation remained as the only apparent hope for speedy settlement.

The statement by the Federated Board on Mr. Kruttschnitt's offer read:

"Once more the Southern Pacific officials are evading the issue. Mr. Kruttschnitt proposes the formulation of some plan to adjust future grievances without any regard to those existing. Such being the case, we can, as matters stand, have no reply."

Mr. Kruttschnitt's offer was to discuss with a representative committee of the four labor organizations on strike the question of inaugurating a system of dealing with controversies through a joint committee representing all four organizations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—G. W. W. Hanger, Assistant Commissioner of Mediation, was unable to leave Washington to-day for New Orleans to try to endeavor to adjust the strike of Southern Pacific employes, because of a request that the Government Mediation Board use its good offices to settle the differences between the Queen & Crescent Railroad Company and its locomotive engineers.

The Mediation Board was in session most of the day and made good progress with the Queen & Crescent case. Another meeting will be held to-morrow at which it will be decided whether Mr. Manger of another member of the Mediation Board shall go to Louisiana and Texas in connection with the Southern Pacific strike, or an effort made to settle the matter in Washington.

Judge Knapp of the United States Commerce Court, the Chairman of the board, was called back from Richmond, Va., and Judge Chambers, the Commissioner of Mediation, returned from New York to join with Assistant Commissioner Hanger in the work of arranging the differences between the Southern Pacific and its employes. It was said to-day that they had found a lead which might enable them to adjust the strike from Washington.

WON'T FREE PLOTTERS.

But Counsel Says Law Doesn't Cover Attempt to Release Convicts.

Magistrate Krotel was confronted with a legal problem yesterday in the Morrisania Court, when Mrs. Grace Paul of 424 West 124th Street, Joseph Bennett of 407 Pearl Street, Dominick Gustavano of 691 City Island Avenue, City Island, and Charles Meyers of 17 West 106th Street were arraigned before him on a charge of aiding three prisoners to escape from the City Penitentiary on Hart's Island on Friday. The prisoners were represented in court by Alfred I. Dietlior, a lawyer, with offices at 50 First Street, Manhattan.

Mr. Dietlior moved for the dismissal of the charge against his clients on the ground that there was no section of the Penal code which covered the case. He maintained that the charge preferred by the police was illegal in as much as the prisoners whom the defendants were alleged to have assisted in an attempt to escape were not charged with either a misdemeanor or a felony. Magistrate Krotel advised the complainant, Warden John J. Murtha of Hart's Island Prison, to confer with the District Attorney of Bronx County, in which the prison stands, and with District Attorney Whitman of New York County, in which the three Hart's Island prisoners were convicted. In the meantime the Magistrate postponed further hearing in the case until to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

"This is such a monstrous attempt to defy the law," Magistrate Krotel said, "that I do not intend to permit a legal quibble to defeat the ends of justice if it can be avoided."

Magistrate Krotel expressed the opinion in court yesterday that it was possible that Mrs. Paul and her three companions could be held over a charge of conspiracy. Gustavano attempted to plead in his own behalf that he had been ignorant of the purpose for which his launch had been engaged, but Magistrate Krotel said that such a defense was untenable in view of his efforts to escape from the pursuing tugboat.

AUTO INJURES THREE.

Miss Rosetta Keep, the daughter of John Keep of 651 Glenmore Avenue, Brooklyn, was driving a party of four in her father's automobile through Brownsville early last evening when she found Pitkin Avenue so crowded that she tried to swing into Amboy Street, and in so doing overturned a push cart and struck three people. One of these, Harry Sonas, was the push cart peddler, and he was hurt so seriously that he had to be taken to the Kings County Hospital. Mr. and Mrs. Harris Gorman were the others hurt, but they were only bruised.

The accident caused a commotion in the street and in less than a minute the corner was swarming with idlers, who soon worked themselves up into a threatening frame of mind. Miss Keep and her brother-in-law, George Hazelton of 640 Crescent Street, both got out to be of what assistance they could to the injured people, and they were roughly jostled by the crowd. They were glad enough to get back in the car when two policemen elbowed their way to the rescue. With one patrolman at the wheel and the other on the running board, the car finally got away, but it was speeded by a chorus of threats and a shower of small stones.

With Miss Keep, who is 22 years old, were her brother, John Keep, Jr., and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Hazelton.

Hearings on Pier Alterations.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Secretary Garrison will give a hearing on Dec. 2 or 3 regarding proposed modifications of the United States pier head line on the west side of the Hudson River from Weehawken, N. J., north to Fort Lee, N. J. The Secretary will hold another hearing on Dec. 10 on the Lackawanna pier controversy at Buffalo, N. Y.

FIND PURE FOOD LAW IS NOT ADEQUATE

New Measure Is Demanded by State and Federal Officials in Conference.

LABEL POINT OF ATTACK

Alleged Guarantee Misleading to the Public, It Is Declared—Congress Urged to Act.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—A conference between State Pure Food Commissioners and officials of the Department of Agriculture here to-day decided that the Federal pure food law was inadequate; that it should be repealed and another statute substituted immediately.

The chief point of attack was the section which permits the use of a guarantee label by manufacturers. This was declared misleading to the public, and made it appear that the products were guaranteed by the Government.

After the discussion a committee was appointed to urge Congress to pase a new measure, and also to provide a law to fix standards for all foods and drugs. Another committee will confer with a committee from the American Bar Association looking to the uniformity of Federal and State laws for the enforcement of pure food laws.

That section of the Federal pure food law regarding the use of coloring matter and harmless extracts also was condemned. It was pointed out that this permission was made the cloak for frauds which could not always be reached under the penal sections. In behalf of this section it was declared as necessary because the buying public demanded these harmless compounds. It was finally decided to urge a new section which would closely define what compounds may be used.

Child Pours Burning Liniment in Sleeping Parent's Ear.

Knute Karr is a sea cook whose ship is moored in South Brooklyn. He spent yesterday afternoon sleeping on a sofa at his home at 5,207 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn. He was lying on his right side.

To him, laying in this position, came his five-year-old son, Kunte, Jr., and in his hand he carried a small bottle of strong liniment. The boy watched his sleeping father with interest and then for no reason he poured the liniment into his father's ear.

There was a cry of pain from the father, and the little boy with the empty bottle shrank into the corner unobserved. The pain was so great that Karr ran to the street. Returning to the house a neighbor poured some olive oil in the ear. Then he was taken to the Norwegian Hospital for treatment.

$50,000 FOR HER LOST ARMS

Stenographer Successfully Sues Electric Company for Damages.

Special to The New York Times.

WINSTED, Conn., Nov. 15.—A woman's arms are worth $50,000, according to Judge William S. Case of the Superior Court, who awarded that amount to-day to Miss Gertrude N. Garrity, a stenographer, of Suffield, in her suit against the Southern New Telephone Company and Connecticut Light and Power Company. While turning on an electric light in her home Miss Garrity was so badly burned through a leakage of the current that both her arms had to be amputated below the elbow.

Judge Case said he based his decision on expert figures as to female annuity rates and on the complainant's expectancy of life of 37 years, concluding that her prospective condition was such, taking her station of life into account, as to call for an annual income of between $1,800 and $2,000 to keep her in comfortable circumstances.

TIRED OF DODGING ARREST.

Postal Official Arrested Here Waives Extradition to California.

Charles J. Roberts, who while Assistant Postmaster of Donner, Cal., in February, 1912, disappeared, taking a blank postal order book and a mail key with him, was arraigned yesterday before Commissioner Shields in this city. He was arrested on Friday night by Post Office Inspector Frank A. O'Brien, who found he was employed here as agent for a lumber concern under the name of Charles Rowe.

Roberts admitted his identity, and said that he was tired of playing "hide and seek" with the Post Office authorities. According to Inspector O'Brien, after he disappeared from Donner Roberts traveled through Texas, Oregon, and Washington, cashing worthless money orders as he went. He arrived here on Friday from Washington, and had been rambling through the east side, where he was born and brought up, looking up the scenes of his childhood. In his possession was a check for $175, which, the Inspector said, was forged, and which, it was alleged, Roberts intended to present at the National City Bank yesterday. The defendant waived examination, and consented to return to California.

NO ACTION ON PARTY UNITY.

Glynn Has Not Consulted Mitchel and Malone on Democratic Harmony.

ALBANY, Nov. 15.—Gov. Glynn, when asked to-day concerning a report that he intended to confer with Mayor-elect Mitchel and Dudley Field Malone of New York in an effort to reunite the Democratic Party, said he had taken no steps toward such a conference.

"I have not written to either," he said, "nor have I received communications from them on this subject. I cannot tell now just what my course in the future will be."

CHAMP CLARK GETS 'DEAR TONY' HISTORY

Speaker to Present It to the House When It Has Been Put in Proper Form.

RECALLS SULZER SPEECHES

Florid Denunciation of Zelaya When Spriggs Was Cabling to Frias in Guatemala.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, has received from Joseph J. Darling, a lawyer with an office at 112 Nassau Street, New York City, a forty-page document, consisting almost wholly of the "Dear Tony" letters and telegrams which were printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES on Aug. 24 touching on Latin-American relations with the United States.

These letters and telegrams passed between William Sulzer, then a member of Congress; A. E. Spriggs, a former Governor of Montana, and Señor Don José Antonio Frias, a former Cuban Senator. They related both to a Guatemalan mining concession in which they were interested, as well as Guatemalan and Nicaragua affairs during the régime of Zelaya, Estrada, and Cabrera.

Speaker Clark has not presented the Darling document to the House of Representatives. It is said to be in such form that under the rules of the House it cannot be presented as a memorial or a resolution. Speaker Clark also declines to make it public at present. When it is filed with the House it will become public property.

At Mr. Clark's office it was said that he had written a letter to Mr. Darling, explaining that the language of the document was such, that it could not be filed in the House and that it was being held to await such changes of form as were necessary to permit filing it.

In his interview printed in THE TIMES this morning Mr. Darling was quoted as having said he had filed copies of the document with the President and the Attorney General. The document, if filed with the President would have been referred to the State Department. Inquiries there to-day elicited the response that no one had any definite recollection of the matter other than that some paper had been filed.

At the office of the Attorney General it was said that a two-hour search had failed to discover any communication from Mr. Darling.

The communications in the "Dear Tony" series which mostly interested Gen. Zelaya, ex-President of Nicaragua, who gave an interview to THE TIMES yesterday, were these two cablegrams:

GUATEMALA, Dec. 16, 1909.

Gov. Spriggs, Waldorf, New York.

Leaving Monday. Necessary impress our friends no better man for President Nicaragua than Gen. Juan Estrada, already appointed for revolution. This is central opinion SENATOR.

Request granted. Will favor Estrada, although Guatemala is not appreciating our efforts. SPRIGGS.

In his comment Señor Zelaya said:

"The letters also show one of your American concession hunters cabling a Guatemalan 'request granted' in reply to a cablegram asking on behalf of the President of Guatemala that the United States recognize J. J. Estrada as President of Nicaragua."

This seems to indicate that he regarded the cablegram of Dec. 16, signed "Senator" as having come from a Guatemalan. An analysis of the cablegram shows that ex-Gov. Spriggs was not cabling to 'a Guatemelan,' but to Antonio Frias, a Cuban, who was then in Guatemala City in connection with the concession in which he, Mr. Sulzer and Mr. Spriggs were interested. Antonio Frias once was a Cuban Senator and probably for that reason made use of the signature "Senator."

It is probable that ex-President Zelaya regards the cablegrams of Dec. 16, 1909, between Spriggs and Frias as important because Dec. 16 was the date on which Zelaya resigned as President of Nicaragua. That was just sixteen days after Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State, sent his famous note of Dec. 1, 1909, to Felipe Rodriguez, who was then the Chargé d'Affaires of the Nicaraguan Legation at Washington, handing him his passports as representative of the Zelaya Government in the City of Washington. In his communication Mr. Knox indicated the attitude of the United States toward Zelaya and his government. The communication throws some light on Secretary Bryan's reason for refusing Zelaya's recent request for an audience. Here are some of the things that Secretary Knox said about Señor Zelaya in his note of Dec. 1, 1909:

Since the Washington conventions of 1907 it is notorious that President Zelaya has almost continuously kept Central America in tension or turmoil, that he has repeatedly and flagrantly violated the provisions of the conventions and by a baleful influence upon Honduras, whose neutrality the conventions were to assure, has sought to discredit those sacred international obligations to the great detriment of Costa Rica, San Salvador, Guatemala, whose Governments meanwhile appear to have been able patiently to strive for loyal support of the engagements so solemnly undertaken at Washington under the auspices of the United States and Mexico.

It is equally a matter of common knowledge that under the régime of President Zelaya republican institutions have ceased in Nicaragua to exist except in name; that public opinion and the press have been throttled, and that prison has been the reward of any tendency to real patriotism.

The Knox note clearly shows that the American Government was disgusted with the Zelaya régime and was prepared to break with it long before the Frias cablegram on Dec. 16 recommending Gen. Juan Estrada for President of Nicaragua was sent from Guatemala City to Gov. Spriggs in New York.

The journals of Congress show that during the Winter of 1909 there was considerable interest in the Nicaraguan situation manifested in Congress, and that various resolutions were introduced. William Sulzer offered three of these. On Dec. 6, 1909, ten days before the "Dear Tony" cablegram was sent, Mr. Sulzer offered a resolution to authorize and direct the President to use land and naval forces to restore order, maintain peace, and protect life and property in Nicaragua. On Dec. 17, 1909, Mr. Sulzer offered another resolution to authorize the President to restore order and maintain peace and protect life and property in Nicaragua. This was the day after the Frias cablegram was sent to ex-Gov. Spriggs. On Jan. 10, 1910, Mr. Sulzer offered a resolution to authorize the President to recognize Gen. Juan J. Estrada as President of Nicaragua. The resolutions were all introduced after Secretary Knox had handed to Señor Rodriguez his passports, and two of them were offered after President Zelaya had resigned.

On Jan. 11, 1910, Mr. Sulzer in a speech in the House of Representatives, said in part:

"Thank God, the inhuman Zelaya is gone from that fair land. May he never again return to blight that stricken country. I do not care at this time to express my opinion further regarding his responsibility for the murders, the rapine, the fiendish acts of cruelty and frightful deeds of barbarism perpetrated during his long reign of terror. * * * In my judgment, the only way peace and prosperity, law and order can be restored there is by the Government of the United States promptly recognizing Gen. Juan J. Estrada, the heroic leader and head of the struggling revolutionary forces, as President of the legitimate Government in that unfortunate country. Let President Taft do his duty. Let us show our friendship for these embattled patriots."

Again on May 19, 1910, Mr. Sulzer made a speech in which he said:

"Gen Juan J. Estrada, the heroic leader of the Nicaraguan insurgents, has again appealed to the United States and to the Cartago Court of Justice to take legitimate steps to cause a cessation of the internecine struggle that is decimating his patriotic countrymen. Thus far the United States Government, for reasons of its own, has refused to recognize the Madras Government or the Estrada Government. The President should offer his good offices to the contending forces in Nicaragua to bring about lasting peace, permanent order, and protection of life and property as speedily as possible."

PAN-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Notables to Discuss Latin America at Clark University.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 15.—Clark University has prepared for a four days' conference, beginning next Tuesday, on the question of Latin-America and its relation to the United States. Many persons look forward to the conference as one of the most important gatherings of authorities on the countries to the south of the United States that ever has been brought together in this country.

The conference will be opened by President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University, who will deliver the address of welcome. George H. Blakeslee, Ph. D., Professor of History in Clark University, will deliver the introductory address, and Leopold Grahame, an English journalist, formerly proprietor of The Buenos Aires Herald, will discuss "The Relations of the United States with the Latin-American Republics."

Discussion of the Monroe Doctrine will be one of the most important features of the conference. The rapid development of Argentina, Brazil, and Chile has brought forward in some quarters the idea that this national policy should be modified or placed on a Pan-American basis, and it is this issue which will be discussed and debated by men of national standing on the closing day of the conference.

Some of the speakers will be Charles Lyon Chandler of the American Consular Service; Edwin D. Mead, Chief Director of the World Peace Foundation; George W. Nasmyth, President of the Eighth International Congress of Students; J. P. Santamarine, Civil Engineer of the Argentine Republic; J. C. Branner, President of Stanford University; Señor Don Federico Alfonso Pezet, Minister from Peru; John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union; John Hay, General Director of the Inland-South American Missionary Union; Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart of the Law Department of Harvard; Jacob H. Hollander, Professor of Political Economy, Johns Hopkins University; George G. Sherrill, formerly Minister to the Argentine Republic, and John Hays Hammond.

Give "Stonewall" Jackson's Home.

FAIRMONT, West Va., Nov. 15.—Jackson's Mill, on the West Fork River, near here, where Gen. Thomas J. ("Stonewall") Jackson was born and grew to manhood, has been donated to the West Virginia Daughters of the Confederacy by wealthy citizens of Fairmont. The mill and old Southern house were erected more than 100 years ago by Col. Edward Jackson, a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and grandfather of the Confederate leader.

FOR LOCAL CONTROL OF CITY UTILITIES

National Municipal League Committee on Record Against Exclusively State Regulation.

URGE DOUBLE SAFEGUARDS

Rates and Extensions Under Municipal Control—Indeterminate Franchises Favored.

TORONTO, Nov. 15.—Regulation of street railways, telephones, and electric and gas plants exclusively by the State was condemned in a report submitted to the National Municipal League today by the Committee on Franchises through its Chairman, Dr. Delos F. Wilcox of New York City.

The committee pointed out that public utilities were primarily urban in character and that, on general principles, the control of public functions should be localized as much as possible, in order to secure the interest and effective co-operation of citizens. Moreover, as a practical matter, it was pointed out, the more powerful the corporations became and the more widespread their services, the more important it was that they should be directly answerable to the local communities which they serve.

"It may easily be possible," said the report, "that an appointive State commission will fail more or less completely under the domination of the powerful interests which control the public utilities of the State, and thus the very machinery provided for the regulation of utilities be captured by the interests presumed to be regulated by it. It may be necessary to array against the powerful financial interests of the companies the direct mass interest of the local consumers in order to preserve the vitality of the regulatory function. Public utility corporations exist to serve the people, not to control them.

"However, in most cases regulation cannot be either logical or effective without the active co-operation of both State and local authorities. The jurisdiction of State Public Service Commissions should be general over all public utilities, so that there will be no 'twilight zone' within which the utilities can escape regulation altogether, but every city of enough importance to enjoy home rule in framing its charter should have the right to establish a separate bureau, department, or commission for the supervision of all utilities operating within the city limits.

City and State Jurisdictions.

"The city's jurisdiction should extend to matters affecting the occupation of the streets, the quality of service rendered and the character of the franchise contract entered into for the purpose of facilitating ultimate municipal ownership. The State's jurisdiction should extend to matters relating to competition, stock and bond issues, accounts, and publicity. Rates and extensions should be under municipal control, subject to review by the State commission. The city should also have the right to appear by its local experts before the State commission in regard to all matters affecting local interests."

The committee took the ground that a public utility within a given urban community is a natural monopoly and that one of the first and essential obligations of such a monopoly is to extend its services to meet all the legitimate needs of the community. Accordingly, the municipal authorities ought to have the right to initiate extensions, and the reasonableness of any particular extension should not be determined solely by the prospective profit from its operation as a separate unit, but by its effect upon the profits of the entire system.

The indeterminate franchise, with a maximum time limit, was recommended, on the principle of the recent traction settlement franchises granted in Chicago, Cleveland and New York City. Opposition to the Wisconsin type of indeterminate permit was based on the fear that it would tend to become perpetual, as it could be terminated only by purchase—and purchase would mean payment of the full value in cash in a lump sum at the time of purchase. This, it was said, would tend to make municipalization more difficult as time went on.

The idea of making utilities commence for themselves even under private operation, by means of an amortization fund maintained out of earnings, was favored by the committee. This fund should be large enough at least to wipe out all franchise and other intangible elements of capital value, so that the price at which the city could buy would be kept well within the actual value of the physical property.

Recovery of Perpetual Franchises.

The committee urged the importance of a systematic campaign for the recovery of control over the perpetual and long-term franchises now outstanding. So long as the utilities in the heart of a city continue to be owned and operated under unsatisfactory, out-of-date franchises, the city, it asserted, could have no adequate control of the development of its street railways or other utilities.

The report was signed by Dr. Wilcox as Chairman, and by Robert Treat Paine of Boston, James W. S. Peters of Kansas City, Abraham E. Hinanski of Boston, and Charles Richardson and Clinton Rogers Woodruff of Philadelphia. Prof. Edward W. Bemis, the Chicago public utility expert, another member of the committee, did not sign the report, but signed a memorandum in which he expressed doubt of the wisdom at the present time of giving State commissions any control over capitalization or over rates in the larger cities, especially in States west of New York.

The league concluded its convention to-day. Kansas City is the probable choice for next year's convention. Other cities that have asked for the meeting in 1914 are Galveston, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Denver, Chicago, and New York.

Less Fear of Ohio River Flood.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Nov. 15.—Flood anxiety as to Ohio River conditions was somewhat dispelled at noon to-day when the river, upon reaching a stage of 20.6 feet, remained stationary. The Weather Bureau announced that unless more rain fell there was no danger of the 22-feet flood stage being reached.

THIS SHIP'S MONKEY HAS TWIN TONGUES

Sings Opera with One, Whistles His Own Accompaniment with the Other.

HYLAS'S CREW ADORE HIM

Brought Here for the Bronx Zoo, but They Hope to Keep Him on the Ship's Register.

"It is hard to write a tale of a tailless monkey, for there is such a lack of material."

This bon mot was part of the cargo of the British freight steamship Hylas, and it was unloaded yesterday by Capt. Charles Samuels. He referred to Jim, the slow loris monkey and the universal pet of the crew. Capt. Samuels is from London and possesses a pleasant disposition and a love for animals. The Hylas is a stub-nosed, high-sided, aristocratic freighter, possessing a grate fire place in the captain's room and brass work enough in the chart room to try the patience of any ordinary crew.

The loris is of a rare monkey family, native to Madagascar and Central India. The skipper got Jim in May when the ship was at Rangoon. Jim is now nine months old, about the size of a flying squirrel, mouse colored, and artistically marked by a brown streak up the back. There are brown markings about the eyes that give the appearance of spectacles, and out of these peer wise little eyes of golden hue. Jim is nocturnal, and when darkness comes the way he gets about the ship belies the title "slow."

The Hylas is now rubbing a rusty side against pier 38, South Brooklyn, having just got in from India by the way of Buenos Aires. Jim was to have gone to the Zoological Park in the Bronx. The authorities did not seem anxious to receive him, however, and because of the protest of the crew it is probable that Jim will now remain on shipboard.

Jim has two tongues, one of normal size and the other a white, bird-like tongue just under the normal organ. It is entirely natural for the loris to have two tongues; nevertheless the skipper likes to have Jim at hand when he says so to avoid dispute.

Capt. Samuels is not wont to brag of the accomplishments of his pet, but the second mate said with considerable emphasis that Jim could sing grand opera with one tongue and whistle his own accompaniment with the other. That's what the second mate said, but Jim was not singing grand opera when the reporters saw him yesterday. He was swinging to the Captain's watch chain and humming a jungle lullaby with one tongue, while clucking time with the other. The reporters couldn't make out just what Jim was doing, and they were indebted to the skipper's cabin boy for this explanation of his performance.

Jim was very wild when he first went on board ship, but he soon adapted himself to life on a freighter, and now he sleeps on the top shelf of the closet in the skipper's room, takes his meals upon the shelf below, uses the shelf below that for his parlor, and takes his exercise all over the ship when the weather permits. He sits upon the skipper's head when the latter is shaving or hangs for hours from the skipper's vest pocket like an animated watch charm.

When the Hylas was a week out from Rangoon Jim began to show an interest in his surroundings. He also began to make friends with the men on board.

"Good morning, Sir; how is Jim?" the cook from the galley door, and the deck watch would ask Capt. Samuels when he appeared. Once when Jim did not make his appearance on deck the engine-room force sent a note to the mate asking him to find out what had become of Jim.

Once after hours of watching upon the bridge while the Hylas was bucking a tropical hurricane, the Captain went to his cabin to find his steward walking up and down before the grate fire carrying Jim in his arms.

"Jim's a bit bad, sir," he said. "I think he worries about you when on the bridge."

All Jim needs is a finger hold to climb to the most inaccessable part of the vessel. If the skipper is in the chart room, Jim can be trusted to find him. On fine days he goes aloft spending hours as look-out. As a tight and slack rope walker, he can make any Blondin that ever lived look foolish. He became so venturesome that two of the stokers got fits "nerves," watching him and one member of this crew of animal lovers sent word to the skipper that he really thought Jim should be watched, as he might fall overboard if he persisted in walking the forward rail of the Hylas in bad weather.

Jim is a remarkable clean animal, according to the Captain's testimony, he spends half an hour each morning in the bath room washing himself. When, however, several days out from Buenos Aires, Jim made friends with Jig Sandy, boss of the stokers, he began to explore the coal bunkers with a total disregard of his habits of personal cleanliness.

One morning Jim was reported missing and the ship lost speed because the fire under the boilers was not kept going. The careful stokers were afraid their little playmate was in the coal and by mistake might be shoveled up and hurled into the grate boxes. There was universal relief when, late in the afternoon he was found curled up in a bunk in the fo'cas'le.

Capt. Samuels took Jim over to Flushing yesterday afternoon to show him to some friends. Most of the crew lined up near the gangway to see the ship's pet go ashore.

Hoops Not Put In Jail.

William T. Hoops, the broker, who was arrested on Wednesday by Deputy Sheriff Fitzsimmons on a body execution for failure to pay a $10,000 judgment against him held by Percival L. Marden, editor of a society weekly, is not in the Ludlow Street Jail. Mr. Hoops was not confined at any time in the jail, but gave bonds at once upon being taken to the Sheriff's office. Mr. Marden received the judgment against Mr. Hoops in a suit for the alienation of the affections of Mrs. Marden, who married Mr. Hoops after her divorce.

CALL REPUBLICANS TO MEETING HERE

ANTI-PROGRESSIVE PURPOSE

Barnes Also Wants Their Views for National Conference—Politicians Wonder How Many Will Come.

Republican State Chairman William Barnes sent out letters yesterday to about 600 leading Republicans in this State, asking them to join in a conference to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on Friday, Dec. 5. The letter, which is signed by Senator Elihu Root, by Mr. Barnes as Republican National Committeeman, and by all the Republican members from this State of the House of Representatives, says the purpose of the conference is "to consider the part which the Republican Party in this State is to play in the progress of the national party" and "to try to reach a better understanding of the duties and responsibilities" of the Republicans in this State.

A prominent Republican, cognizant of the purposes of the proposed conference, said yesterday that in all probability ways and means to crush the Progressive Party in this State would be considered when the 600 Republicans summoned by Mr. Barnes met in conference. Just at present there is a great deal of curiosity among the Republican Party leaders to see how many will respond to the invitations.

"The members of our own party," said this prominent Republican, "do not seem to realize the seriousness of the situation. On every hand there is talk about getting together with the Progressives, or getting the Progressives to get together with us. This is a vote-getting proposition, pure and simple, and if nothing more important was involved than getting a lot of patronage for our party as a result of a reunion of the warring elements and a consequent victory at the polls that would be all right. But these well-meaning Republicans of the get-together inclinations seem to forget that if we were to get together with the Progressives we would be compelled to do so at the sacrifice of the principles of conservatism which brought us victory in this State at the recent elections. Is this worth while, from the broader point of view of policy and future prospects of the country?

"The Progressives seem to understand the situation better. They seem to realize that there is nothing in the future except a death struggle between the Progressives who are following the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt, and the Republicans who are remaining steadfast to a party faith inspired by safer and saner leaders."

My dear Sir: The undersigned Republican representatives of the State of New York in Congress and in the National Committee would be glad to confer with their fellow-Republicans at home upon the part which the Republican Party of the State is to play in the progress of the national party.

The Republican victory in the State at the last election presents an opportunity and a responsibility for New York Republicans which all should share, and the best wisdom of all is needed so that the example and influence of the greatest of States may be in the right direction and effective.

For this purpose we are proposing to ask the New York Republicans who hold, or are elected to hold, official positions in the party and in the State Government, and others whose former positions and experience will make their advice especially useful, to meet for conference and discussion.

The object of this meeting is to try to reach a better understanding of duties and responsibilities.

Sincerely yours,
ELIHU ROOT,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
HENRY G. DANFORTH,
THOMAS B. DUNN,
GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD,
C. M. HAMILTON,
EDWIN A. MERRITT, Jr.,
LUTHER W. MOTT,
JAMES S. PARKER,
SERENO E. PAYNE,
EDMUND PLATT,
SAMUEL WALLIN,
WILLIAM BARNES.

The letters have gone out to Republican members of the Legislature, Republican members-elect to the law-making body, Chairmen of Republican County Committees throughout the State, members of the Republican State Committee, Republican editors, and a great number of Republicans prominent in the councils of the party in the localities where they live.

Mr. Barnes said yesterday that the conference was called partly for the purpose of giving him a line on the sentiment in the party in this state preparatory to the meeting of the Republican National Committee which is to be held in Washington next month, and at which he, as representative of this State on the committee, will have to be the spokesman of the New York Republicans. Mr. Barnes is heart and soul for a standpat programme, and has been strengthened in the stand he has taken by the result of the election this Fall.

The purpose of the National Committee meeting in Washington is to discuss the advisability of calling an unofficial National Convention early next year to discuss the future of the party and amending the rules of the National Committee, including the basis of representation in National Conventions. It has the special purpose of making the negro representation from the Southern States less formidable in national party gatherings.

The unofficial convention, according to the views expressed by most of the prominent Republican leaders throughout the country, should be held, and it has been more than intimated that this would be an occasion for the initiation of Presidential booms. The name of Associate Justice Charles E. Hughes has been mentioned prominently as a man to whom the party is likely to turn as the one candidate who could unite the conservative and progressive elements.

If the view of the Hughes enthusiasts should prevail he would come before the party as the favorite son of the State of New York, but whether the incubation of a Hughes Presidential boom is part of the programme for the prospective December conference could not be learned yesterday.

Mr. Barnes announced yesterday that he had called a meeting of the Republican State Committee for the day of the conference. The conference is scheduled to begin at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, the meeting of the State Committee at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. The ostensible purpose of the State Committee meeting is to examine the audits and the accounts of the Treasurer. It is confidently predicted that if the auditing is thorough it will be found that the Republican State organization is greatly in need of funds, and it is not unlikely that the report will be made the basis for a general appeal for financial aid to enable the State Committee to work out the party purposes.

NOME EAGER FOR NEWS.

Has Two Newspapers Which Sell for 25 Cents a Copy.

The two most costly newspapers in the world probably are The Nome Daily Nugget and The Daily Nomo Industrial Worker, published in Nome, Alaska. Each newspaper is of four pages. They are sold at retail at 25 cents each.

"Our papers devote much space to telegraph news, not because there is nothing happening in Nome, but because our population is gathered from the four corners of the world, and there is always an interest in homeland news," said Alfred H. Dunham of Nome, who arrived here several days ago. Dunham is a game warden in Alaska, and one of the pioneers.

Mr. Dunham exhibited a copy of The Nugget, which illustrates the desire for telegraph news. There was "By Nugget Special Service" a story of The New York Times Aerial Derby around Manhattan. There was also an account of the Mavoralty campaign in this city. In addition, there was news from Washington, and dispatches told of happenings in China and Japan.

Dunham went to Alaska in 1907 and was one of the first to go through Chilkoot Pass that year to the gold fields. Dunham a few weeks ago was in Seattle when the great storm came. He owns a two-story frame dwelling there. The waves smashed all of the houses in Main Street except that owned by Dunham.

"I cannot understand," he said, "unless it was because my building had no cellar. When it was discovered there was gold in the beach sand many started in to work the sand. Main Street runs along the beach and many persons obtained permission from owners to dig for gold upon their property. In this way, I believe many of the houses were undermined and fell easily under the pounding of the sea."

BATTLE OPENS FIGHT TO REFORM TAMMANY

Law Partner of Senator O'Gorman Would Drop Name and Depose Unworthy Leaders.

PRESENT SYSTEM OUTWORN

From inside Tammany a suggestion came yesterday that this title as designating the Democratic organization of New York County should be dropped. The proposal was made by George Gordon Battle, law partner of United States Senator James A. O'Gorman. Mr. Battle went further. He called upon all good Democrats, whether they supported McCall or Mitchel, to enroll and begin primary contests to change the leadership in districts where such a change was essential to keep the local party up to the high ideals and practical efficiency which, he said, the party leader, President Wilson, was exemplifying at Washington.

In a statement which he issued yesterday, Mr. Battle said he could not subscribe to the indiscriminate criticism of the Democratic county organization. There were good men and bad men in the organization, he asserted, but he said that in his opinion the good men predominated, and the principal difficulty consisted in too much allegiance to central authority and to outworn political theories.

"There is need for more independence and for the rank and file to assert itself and to make known its views and wishes on economical and political questions," said Mr. Battle.

"Do you favor a primary fight next Fall against the present Tammany leadership?" Mr. Battle was asked.

"I think all good Democrats should interest themselves without waiting for primary day," he replied.

"The legally organized Democratic Party in New York County," said Mr. Battle, "is called generally Tammany Hall. That is a misnomer. It is a relic of the time when a volunteer political association meeting in Tammany Hall and allied with the Columbian Order of Tammany, was called the Tammany Hall Democracy, just as a similar organization meeting at Irving Hall was known as the Irving Hall Democracy. In speaking of changes in Tammany Hall it must be remembered that 'Tammany Hall' is merely a loose expression and that what is sought is a change in the legally organized Democratic Party in the county. That such changes and reforms are desirable, all thinking men must admit. The law of progress is a law of change. Without progress there is stagnation."

Mr. Battle denied that he knew of any movement in Washington to make Senator O'Gorman leader of the reorganized party in the county.

Insurgents in Nineteenth District.

From the Nineteenth Assembly District, on the upper west side, there came last night the report of an uprising against Murphy. Edwin P. Kilroe, a lawyer, who, when he was graduated, read an essay on "St. Tammany"; or, the Organization of the Tammany Society of the Columbian Order," and who is Chairman of the General Committee of Tammany in the Nineteenth Assembly District, was said to have broken away from the leadership of James J. Hines, who, as understudy for Aqueduct Commissioner John F. Galvin, is nominal head of the Tammany organization in the district. Mr. Kilroe is said to intend to form a rival organization. Three hundred members of the Monongahela Club, the regular Tammany organization of the district, are said to have followed Mr. Kilroe, and with him will form the nucleus of an organization in the Nineteenth District which will fight the Tammany leadership there at the primaries.

Bert Hanson, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Anti-Tammany Jeffersonian Alliance, issued a statement last night, in which he said:

"So many Democrats have telephoned and written me since the election asking for information about the Anti-Tammany Jeffersonian Alliance that it seems advisable to make an authoritative statement as to the origin of one of the present movements to organize Democrats in the City of New York and plans which we have in hand. The committee having the work in hand had not intended making any public statement until the preliminary work was further advanced, but there is no reason for secrecy, and we are glad to have the public fully informed, both as to what has been done and as to the way in which our movement is developing. Publicity is the more desirable, because many seem to have gained a wrong impression as to what is being done by the Anti-Tammany Jeffersonian Alliance, and some seem to confuse the work we are moving with the work which is being done by others.

Formation of Jeffersonian Alliance

"Before the selection of candidates by the Citizens' Municipal Committee, there had existed several Democratic organization which had fought the Tammany Hall organization. Among them were the Empire State Democracy, the Democratic Union, Inc., the Home Rule Democracy of Brooklyn, and the Home Rule Democracy of the Bronx. Those organizations had decided to support candidates opposed to Tammany. Had there not been Fusion, an Independent Democratic ticket would have been nominated. After the Committee of 107 made its selections these Democratic organizations decided to support the Fusion ticket. Soon thereafter those organizations decided to form an alliance for the purpose of the campaign, taking in with themselves the Mitchel Democratic League, which, though organized primarily in behalf of Mr. Mitchel, was also supporting the Fusion ticket. It was thought that such a union of organizations would prevent duplication of effort and unnecessary expenditure of money. Thus was formed the Anti-Tammany Jeffersonian Alliance. It was agreed between the federated organizations that each should continue its existence, though during the campaign all were to work together through the alliance.

Plan to Continue Anti-Tammany Fight.

"A couple of days after election the Executive Committee of the Alliance met to receive reports from sub-committees and to wind up the work of the campaign. In view of the fact that probably nearly 30,000 votes had been cast in our column, under the rooster, and in view of the further fact that tens and tens of thousands of Democrats feel that Tammany Hall is not a Democratic organization, it seemed wise for the union of Democrats to be continued and broadened by bringing in elements which had not been represented by the organizations which constituted the Alliance. Accordingly the Executive Committee voted that the organization ought to be continued, and authorized the Sub-committee on Plan and Scope to prepare plans for a wider and broader organization. That sub-committee has met and authorized the Chairman of the Executive Committee to appoint a committee of not less than twenty-five, which shall be charged with the duty of organizing a provisional committee of about 250. The Committee of Two Hundred and Fifty is to be charged with the preparation of a statement of principles and the preparation of plans for the formation of a Democratic organization in sympathy with the Progressive Democracy of the City, State, and Nation.

"The Chairman of the Executive Committee has extended invitations to a number of gentlemen to be members of the first committee. No announcement of the members of that committee will be made until the gentlemen invited have been heard from. But it may be said that the committee will be composed of Democrats of the highest standing in the community. The committee will not be organized to support the interests of any one man or any group of men. Neither will it be composed of men who are known because of their experience as 'practical' politicians. They are selected because of the principles for which they stand. A meeting of that committee will be called next week. While the formation of the provisional committee of two hundred and fifty will rest entirely in the hands of the smaller committee, yet the character of the men on that smaller committee is such as to lead to the belief that the committee of two hundred and fifty will be composed of representative Democrats, who have the intrests of their party at heart.

"But, speaking for myself alone, I believe that the committee will proceed upon the theory that the present Tammany Hall organization is not an organization of Democrats. We all know that Tammany Hall has in the past held and now holds the allegiance of many Democrats. Whether such Democrats will be willing much longer to support that organization remains to be seen. But I am sure that Democrats who are such by principle are not prepared to have a new Democratic movement led on or dominated by men who at the moment are not enthusiastic supporters of Tammany merely because of differences with Mr. Murphy. Instead I believe the new movement should be led on by men who are Democrats on principle."

PLAN NATION-WIDE EUGENICS SOCIETY

Movement Follows Address by Mrs. John Hays Hammond on Infant Mortality.

RACE PURITY IS THE AIM

Dr. H. E. Jordan Would Forbid the Reproduction of the Obviously Unfit—Want Parents Educated.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The study of eugenics was vigorously urged by speakers before the American Association for the Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality to-day.

"More than half the processions of little white coffins in Washington," said Mrs. John Hays Hammond, "are assured before the birth or at the hour of birth of their little occupants. So appalling are these figures that I believe it behooves every mother to inquire, 'Why did my baby die?' and every girl to ask, 'Why cannot all women have rosy, plump, dimpled, healthy babies?' The answer will be found in the science of eugenics and more efficiently trained obstetricians.

"I believe there should be a great national organization for the promotion of practical eugenics. When young women are made to realize that the defects, as well as the excellencies, of their husbands will be reproduced in their children, that men of intemperate and immoral habits are likely to produce defective children, they will refrain from marriage with such men. The old adage, 'Mary a man to reform him,' will lose its force.

"Woman, rather than man, has always been the conserver of race purity. In eugenics she will find an intelligent guide to the selection of a father for her children, to the reduction of three-fourths of all diseases, to the elimination of one-half of the morbidity of children, and to the practical elimination of degeneracy and the useless waste of infant life."

As a result of Mrs. Hammond's suggestion of a national society for the promotion of practical eugenics, a committee was appointed to meet the eugenics committee of the American Breeders' Association and discuss the question.

"Every child born into the world," said Dr. H. E. Jordan of the University of Virginia, "must be saved if possible, but if socially very unfit it should be denied the right of progeny. Two steps first seem clear: (1) Universal infant salvage, with realization of the fact that the possibility is thus afforded for some unfit stock to perpetuate its inferior type. (2) Negative eugenics or prevention of reproduction on the part of the grossly and obviously unfit. Positive eugenics rests, perhaps, as yet upon too small a basis of scientific fact."

The education of parents in practical eugenics was discussed by Dr. Evangeline W. Young, of the School of Eugenics, Boston.

"Education in practical eugenics," she said, "should teach boys a new sex code. The boy must be taught quite as explicitly as the girl the spiritual significance of marriage and the sacredness of the family as an institution of society. He must be taught the falseness of the double standard of morals."

Dr. D. J. Whitridge-Williams, of Baltimore, will be President of the Association for the next year. Homer Folks, of New York, to-day was chosen President-elect, and as such will succeed Dr. Williams at the conclusion of next year's session.

M'CABE PARTISANS FINED.

Punished for Contempt of Court in Holding Interdicted Meeting.

ALBANY, Nov. 15.—A fine of $25 each was assessed to-day by Supreme Court Justice Rudd on John C. Mangan, John Tammany, and John F. Brady for contempt of court. The men participated in a meeting of the Albany County Democratic Committee on Sept. 25 in violation of a court order. They are members of the McCabe faction, and the opposing Dugan faction brought the court action.

Rumors have had it that Gov. Glynn had been asked to settle the McCabe-Dugan controversy, which is, briefly, who shall be leader. The Governor to-day refused to discuss the report.

WIFE TO USE MAIDEN NAME.

Dr. Ingram to Drop Husband's Name, Though Not Divorced.

Supreme Court Justice Delany signed an order yesterday permitting Dr. Loy McAfee Ingram, wife of Dr. William H. Ingram of 548 Riverside Drive, to resume her maiden name of Loy McAfee. She said that she had lived apart from her husband since Jan. 11, 1913, and would not return to him. She said that since July 4, 1904, her husband, also a physician, had contributed nothing to her support and had received funds from her. In addition she said he had run up bills in the name of Dr. Ingram, which was also her professional name, and that these debts interfered with her credit.

She asked that her application be granted as essential to her professional and financial success. The order entered was unusual in view of the fact that no matrimonial action was at issue. The courts have frequently restored maiden names to wives after dissolution of their marriage bonds, but seldom otherwise.

Montefiore Home Dedication.

The dedication of the new buildings of the Montefiore Home will take place on Sunday, Nov. 30, at Gunhill Road, East 210th Street. There will be a reception from 11 to 1 in the morning and from 2 to 5 in the afternoon.

MEDICAL SCIENCE'S FUTURE.

Internal Medicine to Surpass Surgery, Says Dr. Murphy.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—Internal medicine will surpass surgery in value to the human race within the next twenty-five years, was the prediction of Dr. John B. Murphy in the course of his clinic to-day at Mercy Hospital, which was attended by members of the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America.

Dr. Murphy added that if he had to study for the profession again he would unhesitatingly take up internal medicine in preference to surgery. He foresaw a brilliant future for clinical teaching for the medical profession rather than the reading of papers.

Surgeons invited with fellowship of the American College of Surgeons were required to sign the following pledge, the violation of which made members liable to expulsion:

I pledge myself to pursue the practice of surgery with self-restraint and to place the welfare of my patients above all else; to advance constantly in knowledge by the study of surgical literature, the instruction of eminent teachers, interchange of opinion among associates, and attendance at important societies; to regard scrupulously the interests of my professional brothers and seek counsel when in doubt of my own judgment; to render willing help to my colleagues and to give freely my services to the needy.

Moreover, I pledge myself so far as I am able to avoid the sins of selfishness; to shun unwarranted publicity, dishonest money-seeking, and commercialism as disgraceful to our profession; to refuse utterly all secret money trades with consultants and practitioners; to teach the patient his financial duty to the physician, and to urge the practitioner to obtain his reward from the patient openly; to make my fees commensurate with the service rendered and with the patient's rights, and to avoid discrediting my associates by taking unwarranted compensation.

Dr. J. F. Percy of Galesburg, Ill., reported successful results in prolonging life and easing suffering by treating cases of cancer with heat.

Seamen's Institute Reception.

A reception to the subscribers of the new Seamen's Institute will be held on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 19. The reception has been arranged in order that the persons who have contributed to the new building may see its various departments in operation. Until $180,000 needed to complete the building fund is raised, the lunch counter, dining room, and kitchens cannot be opened.

New Dispensary Building.

The New York Dispensary will move into its new building at 34 Spring Street to-morrow. This dispensary was founded in 1790. From 400 to 600 patients receive treatment daily, and to defray the expense of this work the dispensary is dependent almost entirely on the contributions of the public.

Y.M.-Y.W.C.A. TEAMS TAKE NO HOLIDAY

KEEP FIGURES A SECRET

Yesterday was one of the busiest days of the campaign of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations to raise $4,000,000 for new buildings in this city in spite of the fact that no noonday luncheon was held in the campaign headquarters where the leaders of the committees report their collections.

The fact that the thousand volunteer workers, who include many society women and well-known business men of New York, did not have to give up their time to the making of reports gave them further opportunity to make the rounds of the philanthropists whose names they held in order to obtain their signatures to the pledges.

The canvassers were not deterred by the fact that Saturday is only a half day in business offices. In many instances they followed the trail of prospective benefactors to their country homes. The Women's Committee, headed by Mrs. William Fellowes Morgan, and its companion committee of business women, of which Mrs. Florence M. Stowell is Chairman, were especially active. A number of private automobiles had been placed at their disposal, and they scoured the town in search of contributors.

Charles S. Ward, director general of the campaign, spent the day in hearing reports over the telephone. Mrs. James S. Cushman, President of the New York City Y. W. C. A., spent the morning in the home of Mrs. William Fellowes Morgan at 113 East Thirty-eighth Street, where the leaders of the committees under her direction reported to her.

George W. Perkins, Chairman of the Executive Committee, was perhaps the busiest of all the leaders of the campaign. He was at his office, 71 Broadway, at an unusually early hour and spent the morning at the telephone. Mr. Perkins was in communication with many long distance points where prospective contributors spend the week end. He would not say yesterday what the results of his long distance telephonic communications were, but smiled mysteriously and hinted at a big surprise to be announced at the noonday luncheon to-morrow. It was rumored that he had information of several large gifts that were to be made, but he declined absolutely to discuss them.

Women's Day To-morrow.

To-morrow will be Women's Day at the campaign headquarters and it has been planned to make it an exceptionally important occasion. Miss Grace H. Dodge, who has already made several large gifts to the Y. W. C. A. and who was responsible for the solidification of the national organization of which she is the head, will receive special honors. There will be another guest of nation-wide importance, whose identity was not disclosed yesterday.

According to reports made through Mrs. Morgan, the rivalry between the teams of women was keener than ever. The team headed by Mrs. Francis Louis Slade, which includes Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Mrs. J. E. L. Davis, and Mrs. William Ordway Partridge, was busy from morning until late at night. Miss Elizabeth W. Dodge, Captain of Team 22, started her assistants out at an early hour from her home, 90 Park Avenue, and worked herself all day. Mrs. E. R. L. Gould wore an unusually pleased expression toward the close of the afternoon, which was taken by her friends to mean that she would have some important contributions to announce to-morrow.

One of the busiest teams was that of Miss Emily B. Wilson, Team 24, one of the strong details from the Central Branch of the Y. W. C. A., at 7 East Fifteenth Street. Among her assistants are Mrs. Henry G. Sanford, Mrs. Lorence Daniels, Mrs. Carroll J. Post, and Miss Grace Hinds. The team captained by Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick, including Mrs. Harvey E. Fisk, Mrs. Huch de Haven, and Mrs. Julius H. Seymour, gave a good accounting when it reported at its captain's headquarters, 255 West Ninety-fourth Street.

Mrs. Nathaniel B. Potter, Captain of Team 29, expressed herself as delighted with the progress made by Mrs. Francis W. Bird. Miss Grace Howard Potter, Mrs. Clarence C. Pell, and Mrs. William Barclay Parsons.

Work of Other Teams.

Considerable interest was manifested in the work of Team 30, made up entirely of self-supporting women, and captained by Miss Anna Maxwell, Superintendent of the Presbyterian Hospital. Miss Whitman, Miss Golding, Miss Ward, and other members of this team reported a very successful day, as did the members of the team captained by Mrs. Seabury Cone Mastick.

The "débutante" team, headed by Miss Dorothy Perkins, and composed of society girls and young matrons, was among the busiest in search of contributions to the fund. Encouraging reports were made to Miss Perkins by Miss Mildred Dodge, Miss Florence Colgate, Miss Ruth Purves, Miss Constance McKelvey, and Miss Mary Baker.

Scores of would-be contributors telephoned the campaign headquarters yesterday to learn the details of the way the fund is to be spent. They were informed that $3,000,000 of it is to go to the Young Women's Association and the other $1,000,000 to the Young Men's.

Of the $3,000,000 there will be $800,000 spent in building a new Central Branch on the east side, above Twenty-third Street; $500,000 for a new Holland branch; $400,000 for a new Central Club for Nurses; $350,000 for a boarding home for young girls; $100,000 in providing a new home for the colored women's branch; $50,000 in enlarging the west side branch; $150,000 in current expenses for two years, and $50,000 to be retained in an equipment and adjustment fund. A National Board building will also be erected from the $3,000,000.

The Young Men's Christian Associations will use its $1,000,000 for a new Bowery branch, for which $390,000 will be expended; $360,000 for a new Union branch in the Bronx; $150,000 for a new colored men's branch; $40,000 for its Williamsbridge branch; $20,000 to the P. & S. Clubhouse, Intercollegiate branch, and $40,000 to a contingent and adjustment fund.

Robert H. Mackay, auditor general of the New York City Y. M. C. A., who is in charge of the auditing of the Joint campaign, turned in a report last night showing that 1,849 persons had contributed to the fund. The following is a table showing the number of daily contributions made to the fund and the total to date:

Tuesday	224
Wednesday	325
Thursday	497
	1,849

The last official announcement on Friday places the grand total pledged to date as $2,082,195.

Harry L. Rosen, who died on Nov. 3, left bequests of $250 in a will filed for probate yesterday to Mount Sinai Hospital, the Montefiore Home, the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, Beth Israel Hospital, the Deaconess Home for Consumptives, the Jewish Home for Crippled Children, the New York Institution for the Blind, and the United Krakower Charity and Aid Society. He left more than $10,000 to his wife, Fannie Rosen, and more than $1[illegible] his son, Irwin Rosen.

Four times a year—near the end of each season—we make a drastic clearance of the Millinery in our Salons. Tomorrow's event is one of those four occasions which enable women to procure the finest Hats of Paris and of New York—and that means of the world—at prices that are positively unequaled in their lowness.

As many of the Hats have been made during the last fortnight and as a large percentage of them are trimmed with fur, women will find this a very opportune occasion to get Millinery for wear at the Horse Show.

Hats with rare plumages that will soon become priceless in this country have been reduced just as generously as those that are trimmed with fur, ostrich plumes, flowers and other feathers. Of course, the majority of Hats are of fine silk velvets, and the best qualities of plush. Altogether about 500 Hats, including original models by

Exquisite Premet Wrap for $25

In this Wrap Mme. Premet has combined gracefulness, chic and comfort. It has the cape-like shoulder yoke, on which the back is loosely gathered, and as it has sleeves that are curious affairs without any definite armholes, the Wrap looks the Dolman. Lined with Peau de Cygne in gold, old blue and other rich colors.

Typical of London are the Coats of smart and sturdy tweed with large shawl collars of Civet Cat at $25. Ideal for motoring and traveling. Also in to-morrow's Sale,

Black-and-white striped worsted and split boucle Coats, $18.50

Black Broadcloth Coats, in all sizes, $18.50.

Five styles in Seal Plush Coats, including the fish-tail model—many of these are trimmed with fur, $25. Chinchilla and Tweed Coats, trimmed with fur, $25. Third Floor

The New Corset With Only Six Bones

Is Our Latest Model in

"La Markette" Corsets, $7.50

Its sides are of elastic, but its front and back are of Toile—the latter is soft, but it is not quite as flexible as rubber.

"La Markette" Corsets introduce all the models endorsed by Fashion for this season—at $3 to $15.

That's Why Prices Are 25 to 33⅓% Less Than Market Quotations

We plunged on German and Russian Fitch last July, for we had an idea that it would dominate this season. After we visited the Paris dressmakers' openings in August, we realized that we had made very fortunate purchases, for after this charming fur had been endorsed by those couturiers prices increased.

Knowing that Fashion would favor Hudson Seal, Arctic Seal, Caracul and Moleskin, we made tremendous purchases of these Furs.

We guarantee every style to be correct for the Winter season 1913-14—just as we stand back of every Fur. And it may be satisfying to know that

QUEEN MARY RULES THE ROYAL ROOST

BUT SEEMS TO ENJOY IT

Consort's Will Is Law In Social and Family Affairs—Asquith's Effective Protest.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—An Anglo-American woman whose wit and savoir faire made her a great favorite with the late King of England, is credited with a bon mot which is now going the rounds of London society.

"We had a Court of Queen Victoria," she said, "then a Court of King Edward, and now we have a Court of Queen Mary."

Those members of society who fail to see the point of the joke—report has it that there are some—have it pointed out to them that King George occupies much the same position in the royal ménage as that of the Prince Consort, who could not have a dish he liked put in the menu without first consulting his Queenly spouse.

While some allowance must be made for exaggeration in this statement, it is a fact that King George's reliance on his wife is carried to a degree of self-effacement which strikes all members of the Court circle. Prominent and responsible members of the royal establishment are all now so familiar with the reply, "I think you had better consult the Queen," when they seek King George's directions about any matter in connection with the management of the household, that they frequently do so without consulting his Majesty at all. It saves time.

For example, when the details of Prince Arthur's wedding were being settled, all directions were issued to the different officials charged with carrying out the various arrangements by Mr. Wallington, who is Queen Mary's private secretary, and, in most instances, the formula adopted at the beginning of Mr. Wallington's letter was: "... is the Queen's desire."

The lists of persons to be asked to Court functions and entertainments for the first two years of the King's reign were always made out by Lord Stamfordham and sent by him to the Lord Chamberlain's office, whence the invitations were sent out.

Now the invitation lists are made out by Lady Bertha Dawkins and Lady Eva Dugdale at the Queen's direction, and sent to the Lord Chamberlain's office without ever being shown to the King.

Cases have actually occurred of names being sent to the Lord Chamberlain by Lord Stamfordham of persons whom the King desired to have asked to a Court function who, nevertheless, were not invited. For example, the names of Lord and Lady Castlereagh were omitted from the list of invitations issued for the ball at Buckingham Palace during the visit of the French President to London last June.

The names of Lord and Lady Castlereagh were actually given to the Lord Chamberlain by Lord Stamfordham in the list of persons whom the King desired to be asked to the ball. It was probably a matter of indifference to the King whether the Castlereaghs were invited or not, but his Majesty had promised Sir Charles Cust, a member of his household, who is a friend of Lady Castlereagh, that they should be invited, and King George subsequently told Sir Charles that he was sorry the invitation was not sent. His Majesty pleaded as an excuse that he left the arrangement of all these matters in the Queen's hands and never interfered with her decisions.

The predominating influence in bringing up the royal children has, of course, been that of their mother, whose decision in all matters is simply echoed by the father. It was Queen Mary who decided that the Prince of Wales should go to Oxford. It was the Queen who selected the Collingwood as the ship on which Prince Albert should make his début as a middy. It was her Majesty who sent Prince Henry to Eton, and Prince George to St. Peter's Court at Broadstairs.

In connection with the sending of Prince Henry to Eton the following story shows how completely King George leaves the management and control of his children's affairs in the hands of Queen Mary. It was Prince Henry, himself, who first mooted the idea of going to Eton. He mentioned the matter to his father, who rather approved of it and said that he would discuss the matter with the Prince's mother. The idea, however, was promptly vetoed by the Queen. This was early in the Summer. A few weeks later, however, Queen Mary, when at Windsor Castle, went to an afternoon tea with the Rev. Edward Lyttleton, the Head Master of Eton, with whom she discussed the desirability of sending the Prince to Eton, and her Majesty then decided that the Prince was to go there the next term.

King George, who was in London at the time, went a couple of days later to see his son who was then at Broadstairs, and much to his Majesty's surprise, informed him that he was to go to Eton the following term. Her Majesty had advised her son of her intentions, but had not thought

An Oriental Rug Event

A COLLECTION OF 347 SUPERB RUGS gathered during the past year by Mr. Myron J. Bird, known world-wide as one of the most successful, best posted and technically accurate collectors in this country. These Rugs have been personally selected by him. Several hundred fortunate persons who bought the Rugs will remember that we had one of Mr. Bird's collections about this time last year.

Fourth Floor.

Personally Conducted by an Expert.

Mr. Bird has wandered through the famous market places, through the Vilayets of Persia and Turkey, in quest of rare Rugs and Rugs of authentic origin. We have been fortunate in securing his latest collection of antique Orientals. Each Rug has been purchased only because of its rarity, its antiquity, its richness of color and design.

Rich in Coloring; Wonderful Textures.

The mellowness of color, the softness of texture, which are shown in this collection of Rugs have been acquired by natural wear. The artificial devices known to the majority of Oriental Rugs to-day are lacking in these.

Marked at Very Low Prices.

These Rugs have been marked at very low prices, since a majority of them are of great rarity. The sizes, the proportions, the designs, the designs and weaves are so varied that the one who appreciates a thoroughly authentic Rug can gratify his fancy.

Rugs From Kent-Costikyan Co.

In addition to this private collection there are also included many rare and valuable pieces from the well-known firm of Kent-Costikyan Co. This house has just closed out to us certain valuable small lots of Oriental Rugs, which we shall sell at practically import cost.

WIRELESS AND CABLE DISPATCHES TO THE TIMES

MARRIAGE ADVICE AN EMBASSY DUTY

American Diplomatic Corps in London Likewise Provides Guests on Short Notice.

MR. MORGENTHAU A VISITOR

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Col. W. C. Gorgas of the United States Army, whose work in making the Canal Zone sanitary gave him wide fame, spent the week at the Hyde Park Hotel, and sailed to-day on the steamer Britain for the Transvaal as a consulting expert on mining conditions on the invitation of the Johannesburg Chamber of Mines. He expects to be gone four or five months. He paid his respects to Ambassador Page on Monday. He told a NEW YORK TIMES correspondent that he was looking forward with the keenest interest to his new experience.

Henry Morgenthau, the new Ambassador to Turkey, who had been staying at Claridge's, left here on Thursday on his way to Constantinople. He expects to spend five days in Paris, two in Vienna, and two in Budapest. He was glad he did not have to worry about renting a suitable embassy on his arrival, as the Government already owns one in Constantinople. He said he had spent the most of two days with Ambassador Page. He and Mr. Page called on Tewfik Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador at St. James's, Tuesday, and had luncheon, and later called on Hakki Pasha, the special agent of the Turkish Government.

In addition to furnishing wedding guests at the shortest possible notice for American weddings the London embassy is now filling a long-felt want as a matrimonial information bureau.

Every few days some American drops in to explain that he wants to get married. On Wednesday THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent heard an American making anxious inquiries. He was referred to Third Secretary Hallett Johnson, the embassy's matrimonial expert, who produced a copy of the statutes and expounded the English marriage laws. The inquirer seemed a bit crestfallen when he learned that a three weeks' residence was required, and that the banns must be published, "to insure notoriety," as is the statute's quaint phrase.

It is understood that the Ambassador is a bit exercised over the erroneous report, printed in a London paper, that went to Paris last week. The fact was that Myron T. Herrick, the Ambassador to France, who came here from Paris for the Pilgrims' dinner to James Bryce, returned on Saturday.

The paper merely said that the American Ambassador had left for Paris. Embassy attachés have expressed the hope that the erroneous report was not sent to New York, as it would have given a false impression that Mr. Page was not attending strictly to business, whereas he is very much so.

It is said that his predecessors seldom returned to the Embassy in the afternoon, so as to dodge the interminable stream of callers, but the present Ambassador makes it a practice to see practically all comers, and it is sometimes 5 o'clock in the afternoon before he gets a rest.

Some queer visitors drop in, too. The other day a Western man, armed with a letter from his Senator saying that he represented the People's Money League of Chicago, wanted an immediate introduction to David Lloyd George, whom he wished to see on the following day.

One of the Embassy staff told him that it was doubtful whether the interview could be arranged at such short notice, adding that Ambassador Page had been here six months and had not met Mr. Lloyd George yet.

Spencer Eddy, ex-Minister to the Balkans, is at the Ritz, spending considerable time looking about for a country place of several thousand acres. He said that he and Mrs. Eddy had some idea of living in England for two years, but that nothing had been definitely decided as yet. He is going to Paris Tuesday to rejoin Mrs. Eddy. He said that he had been much impressed by the Motor Show at Olympia, which he said was far and away ahead of the Paris automobile show.

Consul General and Mrs. J. L. Griffiths have returned from Caux for the Winter. Mrs. Griffiths, who had been very ill at a hospital in Switzerland, is now convalescing. Mr. Griffiths was a guest at the American Luncheon Club at the Savoy on Wednesday.

The embassy callers this week included George Washington Buckner, the Minister to Liberia; and W. Cameron Forbes, ex-Governor of the Philippines.

At Carlton this week were Mrs. Edwin McLellan, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Chipman and family, and Kenneth Cowan, Ralph H. Thomas, who went to the Continent Tuesday; Clifford B. Harmon, who arrived on Monday and left on Friday; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman and Miss Hilda Altschul, who went to the Continent on Thursday; Mrs. Frank Schoonmaker who arrived on Monday; A. S. Terrill, who came from New York for several weeks' stay, and Mrs. Arthur Claflin and Miss B. Claflin, who arrived from New York on Monday.

From Claridge's Mrs Clarence Moore went to Paris Thursday. Joseph Leiter arrived there from New York on Wednesday. Mrs. Leiter is here and will stay a few days.

John Powell, an American pianist, arrived this week from Vienna, where he had a flattering reception. He was also greatly pleased with his experience in Berlin.

EAST AFRICA FASHIONABLE.

The Latest Winter Resort—A Favorite Place for Honeymoons.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—British East Africa is beginning to compete in the Winter resort business, and it is getting to be quite the fashion to spend a few months at Nairobi. Outgoing steamers are all well filled with persons socially prominent. Americans are beginning to take notice, too.

Managing Director Tritton of the Newland-Carlton Company, who fitted out Col. Roosevelt's African expedition, told THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent that the company was receiving many inquiries from Americans planning the pilgrimage, including numerous sportsmen lured by the infinite possibilities of big game shooting. Stewart Edward White, the novelist, he said, was out there now, getting local color as well as game. He added that East Africa was also getting to be quite popular as a honeymoon resort.

HURL HAMMERS AT JUDGE.

Suffragettes Resent Sentence on a Militant Firebug.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Women hurled hammers at the Judge of the London Sessions Court at the Old Bailey to-day when he sentenced Miss Rachael Peace, a militant suffragette, to eighteen months' imprisonment after she had been found guilty by the jury of setting fire to and badly damaging a mansion at Hampton-on-Thames, near London, on Oct. 4.

A crowd of women had gathered in the courtroom and frequently interrupted the proceedings. On the pronouncement of the sentence they not only threw hammers at the Judge but smashed a number of windows and glass doors.

MR. GERARD SHOWS GREAT DIPLOMACY

EMBASSY STAFF DIVIDED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—The threatened outbreak of civil war between the American colonies of Berlin and Hamburg over which should have the honor of entertaining Ambassador Gerard at Thanksgiving dinner, has been settled by a happy compromise. The Ambassador himself will adhere to his intention of celebrating in Hamburg, while Mrs. Gerard will meet her compatriots in Berlin. The rest of the embassy staff, by the same arrangements, will be equally divided between the Berlin and Hamburg festivities. Capt. Gherardi, the Naval Attaché; Major Langhorne, the Military Attaché, and private secretary Winslow will accompany Ambassador Gerard to Hamburg, while Secretaries Grew, Spencer, and Ruddock will support Consul General Thackara at the feast to be held in the marble banqueting hall of the Zoological Gardens in Berlin.

Ambassador Gerard's presence in Hamburg will make the Thanksgiving dinner there an occasion for bringing together a notable gathering. General Manager Ballin of the Hamburg-American Line, the chief Burgomaster, and the President of the Senate of the Free City will be present. Mr. Gerard will make an address as well as Consul General Skinner, who is organizing the celebration, and one of the Hamburg officials will also respond to a toast.

Meanwhile Mrs. Gerard has left Berlin for another stay with her sister, the Countess Sigray in Hungary, who is anticipating a happy family event this present month. Mrs. Gerard did not go away until the lease of the new embassy building in the Wilhelm Platz had been signed on Tuesday. Mr. Gerard is understood to have an option on the premises until the first of January, 1917, at $15,000 a year. If the United States Government makes a liberal allowance for office purposes as it has done in connection with the present embassy in the Rauchstrasse, Mr. Gerard's personal contribution toward the rental of the Wilhelm Platz establishment may not exceed $7,000 or $8,000.

He has commissioned one of Berlin's furnishing and decorating houses to supply the embassy with an equipment of furniture and other appurtenances of a first-class residence. He expects to send to New York only for some pictures and other decorations from his own home.

The Ambassador has brought from America two riding horses, on one of which he takes a daily canter early in the morning in the Tiergarten. The animals are much admired by local judges of horseflesh.

Major Langhorne, the Military Attaché, by invitation of the German War Office, spent the week at the army cavalry schools of Haderborn and Hanover. The officials provided him with five mounts, and he participated in a number of interesting practice rides. The hospitality of the German cavalry schools is periodically extended to the officers of foreign armies, and several Americans have been there in the past. Capt. Whitehead, U. S. A., is now a "guest" of a Prussian cavalry regiment at Schwedt, near Berlin.

Commodore Morton F. Plant, who has spent the Autumn in Berlin, taking treatment at a sanitarium, left there this week, and is staying a few days at the Hotel Bristol, prior to sailing for New York. The Commodore, while not completely restored to health, has been much benefited.

One of the most interesting guests of this week's meeting of the American Luncheon Club at the Hotel Adlon, at which the Rev. Dr. Crosser, pastor of the American church, presided, was Liang Tun-yen, former Foreign Secretary of China, to whom was recently offered the post of Minister at Washington by President Yuan Shi-kai. Mr. Yen, who is a Yale graduate, knows and likes America, but having just bought a villa on Lake Wannsee, near Berlin, and started his boys in college, he has not yet made up his mind whether or not to return to the diplomatic service.

Allen Hinckley of the Chicago and Philadelphia Grand Opera Company, sailed to-day on the George Washington for the coming season in America. Since he was last there Mr. Hinckley has toured South Africa and Australia, and filled engagements in London and Milan.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Felix Semon of Buffalo, N. Y., have arrived at the Hotel Cumberland with the intention of spending the Winter in Berlin.

It seemed like arrival day at Unter-den-Linden hotels early in the week when a score of Americans, who had taken passage on the Imperator, landed in Berlin. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Bensinger of Chicago, Capt. and Mrs. J. H. Lyman of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Shields of Kansas City, Julius Rothschild of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. John J. O'Leary of Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Lasker and J. S. Croll of New York, all of whom registered at the Adlon.

Señor J. R. Capablanca, the 23-year-old Cuban chess champion, has arrived from Havana to play a series of exhibition matches with German cracks prior to going to St. Petersburg, where he is to become the Cuban Consul General. Señor Capablanca performed a remarkable feat early in the week by defeating thirty competitors simultaneously.

L. Beebi and Mr. and Mrs. A. Roeder of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Frohman of San Francisco are staying at the Hotel Esplanade.

The Hotel Kaiserhof's American guests includ Mr. and Mrs. Edwin A. Potter of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Allen of Rochester, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wilson of New York City.

Grenville Kleiser of New York is spending a few weeks at the Hotel Bristol in the course of a year's trip through England, Germany, Italy, and France.

Recent Berlin arrivals include Edward Gross, E. P. Stoughton, and S. M. Levor of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Grey of Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Mulvey of San Francisco, Clarkson Lindley and David P. Jones of Minneapolis, and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Thomas of Chicago.

Walter McClintock of Pittsburgh has arrived in Berlin to deliver a series of lectures before scientific and anthropological societies on his experiences among the Indians. Mr. McClintock had the privilege of lecturing before the Crown Prince when in Germany in 1909.

RETURNING TO ROME.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

ROME, Nov. 15.—Americans here are looking forward to a gay season, as Ambassador and Mrs. Page are said to be fond of society, and, if they take the big house they are trying to find, they will probably entertain largely.

The usual American hostesses are gradually coming back. The latest arrival is Mrs. Nelson Gay, who is overwhelmed with questions about the Croy-Leishman wedding, as she and her husband were among the guests. The young Duchess is well remembered here where she lived when she was not yet out.

Miss Gail Gardner, the young American soprano, has obtained a four months' engagement at the celebrated San Carlo Opera House in Naples, where she will be a prima donna and sing such varied operas as "Falstaff," "Un Ballo in Maschera," "Les Huguenots" and "Madama Butterfly."

RAPS BRITISH COLLEGES.

Dr. Jordan Tells Them Their Examinations Are a Farce.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of Leland Stanford, Jr., University, California, during a lecture to-day at the Birkbeck Institute under the auspices of the Education Committee of the London County Council, compared American and British university methods greatly to the detriment of the latter.

The British practice of examinations, he said, was a farce, because there was no relation between examinations and higher education. The essence of scholarship was to know what to do in life. Therefore, he argued, the basic idea of American universities was to give man and woman the opportunity of making the most of their powers.

Dr. Jordan denounced the idea prevalent in Europe that university degrees could be purchased in the United States.

PASTEUR INSTITUTE IS 25 YEARS OLD

President Poincare Addresses a Gathering in the Little Amphitheatre of the Building.

SOLEMN, SIMPLE CEREMONY

Institute Desires Funds to Found a Laboratory in West Africa for the Study of Tuberculosis.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—The Pasteur Institute celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation to-day by a solemn but simple programme in the little amphitheatre of the great building in the presence of President Poincaré and other distinguished guests.

M. Poincaré made the principal address. The only other one was by Dr. Pierre Roux, the present Director of the institute, who traced its history since the foundation by a public subscription of $80,000 in 1888 under the auspices of President Sadi Carnot.

Palms and wreaths were placed on the tomb of Pasteur in the crypt. The amphitheatre holds only 300, so only three women were admitted, Mme. Valery Radot, a daughter of Pasteur, Mme. J. B. Pasteur, and a granddaughter of Pasteur.

President Poincaré urged popular support of the new plan of the institute to create a laboratory on the West African Coast, perhaps in Guinea, for the study of tuberculosis. He said that experiments could be conducted there on the great anthropoids under perfect scientific conditions to test the effect of different methods of tuberculosis infection of vaccination and treatment. The funds of the institute have heretofore been insufficient to undertake this work.

The President also reviewed the career of Pasteur from the time he first inoculated dogs, fearing to perform the operation on human beings. Then chance intervened when a boy badly bitten by a mad dog was brought to him and recovered after the first treatment. The public then flocked to his laboratory and great savants, including Metchnikoff, started a fund to erect the present building.

FRAULEIN NOW PROFESSOR.

Rachel Hirsch the First Woman Physician to Gain That Title.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—Unusual honors have been won by Fräulein Rachel Hirsch, who is the first woman physician in Germany to acquire the coveted title of Professor.

Fräulein Hirsch, for the past five years, has been the chief assistant of Prof. Kraus, and has conducted a polyclinic for both men and women patients of the university medical clinic of the Berlin Charity Hospital.

Fräulein Prof. Dr. Hirsch, which will henceforth be her full title, has not only been active in hospital service but has also done superior research work in the fever and bacteriological fields, also in connection with diabetes and kindred diseases.

PARIS COLONY FETES AMERICAN OFFICERS

A. J. DREXEL'S DINNER DANCE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—The Winter social season of the American colony began in earnest this week with a number of large parties, balls, and at-homes, chiefly arranged in honor of the officers of the American squadron now in the Mediterranean, the majority of whom made a flying trip to Paris.

Fifty, from the ships anchored at Marseilles, arrived in the Grand Boulevards late Sunday evening. Their appearance in their natty, unfamiliar uniforms attracted much attention and favorable comment. Most of them were quartered for several days at hotels in the vicinity of the Place Vendôme.

The most important social event was a dinner dance arranged by Anthony J. Drexel, who is now one of the best-known cosmopolitan residents of Paris. It was given in honor of the Grand Duchess Vladimir, the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess Cyril, the Grand Duke Boris, Prince Luis of Spain, and Prince Christopher of Greece. Among the guests were Mrs. William B. Leeds, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Princess Murat, and the Count de Castellane.

Frank H. Mason, the American Consul General, and Mrs. Mason gave a final at-home before going to America, at which nearly all the prominent Americans of the colony were present, among them Rear Admiral Richardson Clover, and a number of naval officers—Capt. Hugh Rodman of the U. S. S. Delaware; Lieuts Archibald Sterling, Long, and Leary of the U. S. S. Utah; Lieuts. Pollock, Cook, and Victorson of the U. S. S. Vermont, and Lieuts. West, Payne, and Cunningham, who arrived from the ships stationed at Villefranche.

Dr. H. De Sales Forgrave, the well-known surgeon, is visiting here for a few days en route for Vienna to visit the hospitals and clinics.

Mrs. and Miss Leeson Tower have arrived from Rome and are remaining till the end of November, when they will go to Russia.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Singer have arrived at the Astoria from Fontainebleau.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen F. Aldis, who have been staying at the Iéna, have taken an apartment in the Avenue des Champs Elysées.

Mrs. William Alexander has gone to Brussels.

Mrs. H. F. Berwind sailed on the Amerika.

Mrs. John J. Waterbury has also arrived at the Astoria from London.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Whitaker are at the Crillon for a few days en route for Nice.

H. Dunlop and his family have gone motoring to Spain.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence L. Butler have arrived at the Iéna.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. King have arrived from New York and are at the Elysée Palace Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Veit have left the Edward VII. for New York.

W. H. Reid has arrived here from Rome.

Mr. and Mrs. William L. Doher, from Philadelphia, have arrived at the Elysée Palace Hotel.

Another large reception this week was given by Mrs. Raymond Palmer (Emma Nevada) and her daughter, Mignon Gloria Nevada, which was the first of a series to be held throughout the Winter. Among the guests were Olive Townsend, Loie Fuller, and Mrs. John W. Mackay.

Prof. Maxime Bocher, the Harvard exchange professor, is to give a series of mathematical lectures at the Sorbonne this Winter under the general title, "The Works of Sturm and Liouville on Differential Equations and Their Modern Developments." He will give several lectures, however, for the benefit of non-mathematicians.

A number of American painters expect to sail for home to give Winter exhibitions as soon as the Autumn Salon is over. Among them are Edgar Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Milton Armington, William McGraw, and Parke C. Dougherty.

FRENCH ART LOVERS ANGRY.

Exportation of Treasures to America Causes Demand for New Law.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—A great outcry is being made in Toulouse over the large number of historical, architectural, and artistic relics sold to Americans and shipped to America.

The correspondent of L'Eclair says that wagonloads of the most valuable relics of Toulouse leave the city and environs every day, that owners of works of art and dealers in antiques show absolutely no conscience, and have established a veritable reign of vandalism. He says:

"There are numerous scalawags who, for a few miserable pieces of silver, deliver to strangers what remains of our ancestral relics, and their carelessness of the rights of the country is only equaled by the rapacity of the dealers in antiques."

There have recently been sold to an American a dozen marble columns of the Roman epoch taken from the old convent of Bonnefont, which has been for many years on the estate of Gen. Lapène near Saint-Gaudens. These columns are of great value, both artistically and historically. The first were sold for a few thousand francs to an antique dealer and then resold at a huge profit to an American.

Last week two huge moving vans filled with marble columns, gargoyles, and ancient sculptures of all kinds left Toulouse for America, while a few days before two sections of the marble balustrade from the roof of an ancient convent disappeared. They had been a familiar sight for many years. It is believed that they also have gone to America.

Prof. J. R. de Brousse, the well-known archaeologist, supported by other patriotic Toulousians, is now seeking to have a law passed forbidding the exportation of all antique works of art from the country.

M. FRANCE QUITS PARIS.

Famous Author Moves to Versailles on Account of City's Noise.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Paris is soon to lose one of her famous west end residents on account of the fact that the anti-noise crusaders have been so active elsewhere that they have either neglected their opportunities or considered the city hopeless.

Anatole France is forsaking his beautiful villa home in Passy, where he has lived for twenty years, filling it to overflowing with lovely and curious things, and establishing himself in the quieter atmosphere of Versailles. When interviewed on the subject of Paris noise he said:

"The place is now intolerable and for no apparent necessity. The instant I stand on the corners I notice the chauffeurs 'honkhonking' their horns apparently for fun. The boulevards are a screaming bedlam. I want a quiet corner in a peaceful town. I would dream away my riper years from which I am about to be released in the little place I have found at Versailles."

Bust of Cardinal O'Connell.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

ROME, Nov. 15.—In the historic Cathedral of San Clemente a bust has been erected representing Cardinal William O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston. Not only does it recall that he is the titular of that church, but informs posterity that it was through him that the work was achieved of constructing a drain which, passing under the Basilica, takes the water which for half a century imperiled its existence to the main drain under the Coliseum.

ANOTHER CUBIST SHOW HERE LIKELY

MONSTROSITIES AT SALON

Efforts of the Committee of the Autumn Exhibition to Keep Futurist Work Out Are a Failure.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—New York is likely to have another Cubist and Futurist exhibition in the coming Winter. THE NEW YORK TIMES learns that Americans are now in negotiation with the management of the Doré Galleries with a view to shipping the entire exhibition to New York.

To this exhibition Londoners are flocking in crowds, from Prime Minister Asquith down. The principal merit of the show is that the pictures are hung in chronological order so that one can trace the whole evolution from mild post-impressionism to the latest neo-Cubist and ultra-Futurist horrors.

The painting creating the greatest interest and discussion here is the Futurist apotheosis of the turkey-trot, called "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee," by C. R. W. Nevinson, which is quite in line with the present craze here for ragtime. An expert will point out to you in perfect good faith the whirling figures of the trotters. When your own head stops whirling from looking at the reeling canvas you can sometimes distinguish a lifted leg here and there.

Severini has two canvases entitled "Polka" and "Valse." THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent heard the following curious comment of a Tango-struck English miss to her mamma:

"Severini may be a Futurist painter, but he is behind the times as a dancer. As if any one polkaed and waltzed nowadays."

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Although Cubism and Futurism have been announced to be officially dead, those freaks in art presented the appearance of very lively corpses at the Autumn Salon, which opened yesterday.

The committee had voted against the reception of freak pictures from painters, outside of the society, but as it was impossible to refuse anything sent by the Sociétaires those members who belong to the new schools got ahead of the committee by practically covering the walls with the most monstrous canvases that their imaginations had ever turned out.

The rooms on the west side of the second floor of the Grand Palais in the Champs Elysées, where the Salon is held this year, form a succession of chambers of horrors. There are occasional oases of sanity, but so few and small as to be almost unnoticeable in the aggregation.

Moans of pity and cries of pain from the anguished spectators filled the halls on Varnishing Day, while the general opinion expressed was that the death struggle of the Cubists and Futurists was the most awful scene ever witnessed on a human battlefield.

It is acknowledged that this year they have outdone their worst of the past.

Veteran German Odd Fellow Dead.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—The death occurred in Berlin this week of the veteran German-American Odd Fellow, Simon Spiro, who served in the Union Army in the civil war and attained the rank of Captain. He was 78 years old. On returning from the United States he founded the first Odd Fellow lodge organized in Germany and became Past Master of the lodge, which gave him an imposing funeral.

THE TANGO CRAZE HITS LONDON HARD

END OF CRAZE PREDICTED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—London this week might be supposed to have been in the height of the season, judging by the congestion of traffic in the West End, and the aspect of the hotels and restaurants.

The Motor Show at Olympia is chiefly responsible, having attracted thousands of visitors from the country and even from the Continent, for the fame of the exhibition spread far and wide and several good judges described it as being greatly superior to the Parisian show held recently.

The American exhibits have attracted a good share of public attention, judging by the way in which representatives of American firms have booked orders for a well-known, distinctive type of transatlantic car soon to become an even more familiar sight on English roads than it has been in the past, which is saying much.

The hotels, restaurants, and theatres have done a rushing business this week. For example, in one hotel alone,, the Savoy, 600 tables were booked for supper on Wednesday night. Not only were the restaurants and foyer full, but the Winter garden was occupied just as it is during the height of the American Summer invasion. The special attraction in this case was the Tango, danced by two experts from Paris, who paced and gyrated throughout the length of the foyer and restaurant in the narrow spaces between the supper tables.

The Ritz, Berkeley, Hyde Park, and Carlton Hotels still bar the Tango from their public rooms, but at the last named one of the smaller salons, usually reserved for special parties, is given over to the members of a Tango tea club two afternoons a week. Tango teas and suppers, however, are in vogue at a multitude of other restaurants.

Even certain well-known houses which, regardless of the smart sections of London society, have paid good interest to stockholders by catering for the well-to-do middle classes, have added the exotic dance to their programmes. Several of the tea shops, which are found in numbers in the neighborhood of Bond and Regent Streets and in Piccadilly, also offer their patrons the opportunity of dancing for digestive or other purposes.

Even when half an hour after midnight the excise laws of London force the Tango dancers to cease their dancing in public places many continue to disport themselves in haunts from which the police are excluded by virtue of special privileges extended to clubs.

With the spread of the Tango craze, dancing clubs in London have multiplied to an extraordinary degree. The latest important addition to the list is known as The Four Hundred Club. It opened under distinguished patronage and in elegant and well-ventilated premises, characteristics hitherto lacking in most specimens of this new mushroom growth. Two more, seeking to outdo The Four Hundred in elegance of appointments and notability of membership, will be opened shortly.

Some persons are already beginning to predict that the craze will be short-lived and that the night clubs particularly will fail to establish themselves as regular institutions in the respectable life of London.

At present the select night clubs, where, it is asserted, the membership is more or less carefully scrutinized, are tolerably dull affairs. A member of The Four Hundred in describing the club in The Daily Mail, says:

"Though the traditional British view is that early hours are not mentioned in polite society, and those who patronize them are outside its pale unless all four walls be decorated with chaperons, I can say with perfect assurance that the night dancing clubs of London err, if anything, on the side of reserve and that the patrons are models of propriety."

A well-known London hostess, a Countess with an Irish title, took a supper party to one of these clubs the other night. The party included a Duke, whose American wife is at present in Ireland; the daughter of another Duke, whose Bohemian tastes have given her celebrity; a diplomatist who was a special favorite of King Edward, and a dozen others.

The party arrived after the theatre, partook of a light supper, watched some dancing, and went sedately away at 1 o'clock—half an hour later than they would have had to leave a hotel restaurant. Exhilaration was not the note of the evening's entertainment. When the novelty has worn off, it is predicted that society will cease to patronize the night clubs.

Meanwhile, stories are current that some highly-placed feminine members of society are making a good thing out of their patronage and advertisement of these ventures.

New Rulers of Brunswick Entering Capital in State

Duke Ernest Augustus, son of the Duke of Cumberland, and his wife, the daughter of the Emperor William, entered Brunswick on Nov. 3 and were received with enthusiasm by great crowds.

Hanged Over Five Hundred Persons.

The late James Berry, the ex-English Hangman, who resigned on learning that he had executed two innocent prisoners.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—James Berry, ex-hangman, is dead at Bradford. In the course of his career he was policeman, boot salesman, hangman, lecturer, farmer, and evangelist in turn.

Berry obtained the post of hangman after the death of Marwood from among more than 1,000 applicants. His first "commission" was in Edinburgh, where he hanged Innes and Vickers, the Gorebridge murderers, in Calton Jail. His own view was that they should merely have been imprisoned, but he carried out the executions, the first out of some 500.

Berry's resignation, he said, was due to his discovery that two persons whom he had executed were innocent. As soon as he heard of it he went to London and told the Judge who had passed the sentence. "Well," said the Judge, "what matter if you hang twenty in their innocence? You are not to blame." "Take and hang them yourself, then," said Berry. He never hanged another man.

MANCHESTER, Oct. 31.—A curious letter is contributed to The Manchester Guardian, which is regarded as one of the most powerful Liberal papers in the country, by Dr. Albert Wilson, a well-known London physician.

Dr. Wilson says that, having always been doubtful in regard to the value of capital punishment, about four years ago he asked Berry, the ex-hangman, to come and see him. "I found him," says Dr. Wilson, "an interesting man with a pleasing, kindly face, stout and hearty."

Dr. Wilson goes on to say: "He assisted Marwood on several occasions, and described his method, (the knot under the chin,) as cruel and clumsy. Berry placed the slip-knot under the left ear. He told me that he gave up his office because the execution by him of two innocent persons got on his nerves.

"The first case was that of a farm boy, aged about eighteen, accused of shooting a policeman, I think, in Gloucestershire or Somerset. Before the drop fell he said: 'Mr. Berry, you will live to see that I am innocent.' Some time after this Berry hanged the two Netherby Hall murderers. The first, while being pinioned, asked Berry if he had hanged this youth, adding that his confederate shot the policeman in his presence. The confederate confirmed this.

"The next case was that of Mary Leffley in Lincolnshire. She was accused of poisoning her husband with arsenic. Some years after, a farmer dying of cancer confessed to the crime. He had had a quarrel with John Leffley, and when both Mary and John were out he entered their cottage and put arsenic in a milk pudding baking for John's dinner.

"I have heard," continues Dr. Wilson, "that the present method of execution is again the knot under the chin, and it is doubtful if this fractures the vertebrae. It causes death by throttling, which is rather slow. In the 80s a Royal Commission took evidence in some forty cases of hanging and found that in nine of the cases the neck was neither broken nor dislocated. These persons were strangled."

Dr. Wilson concludes with a plea for a humaner method of punishment.

EDWARD VII.'S BIOGRAPHY.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Harold Cox, the editor of the Edinburgh Review, is mentioned as the probable official biographer of King Edward VII.

The question of the late monarch's official biography is greatly exercising the mind of King George and Queen Mary and their more intimate advisers. They think that the work should not be unduly delayed, even if a good deal of the political and diplomatic material, which only time can make available, has to be left out or be given only in a general fashion.

There are two ways in which the memoirs might be done: either as a selection from King Edward's correspondence, which was the course adopted by Lord Esher, and A. C. Benson with their books on Queen Victoria, or as a personal biography with a certain amount of correspondence introduced.

The feeling at Court is understood to favor following the Victorian precedent, but it is also felt that King Edward was such a sympathetic and gifted personality that he would be an especially fitting subject for an individual biography.

The choice of a biographer may affect the form of the book. Nothing has as yet been decided, although Mr. Cox's chances of being selected are thought high, as he was specially summoned to visit King George at Balmoral last month.

The names of three of King Edward's most intimate friends, Lord Rosebery, Viscount Knollys, and Lord Esher are also mentioned as possible joint biographers, but it is more likely that they will serve as an advisory committee to whomever may be chosen. Sir Edward Cook, whose fine life of Florence Nightingale appeared recently, is also named.

BARS ULTRA-VIOLET RAYS.

New Lens Invented to Meet Modern Lighting Conditions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—A London firm has invented a new optical glass, fulfilling the desire of specialists for a glass, which will absorb or cut out the harmful or irritant ultra-violet rays, but will, at the same time, allow the ordinary visual rays to pass through unhindered.

Hitherto the only lens, employed for this purpose, has been made of dark, smoked, or colored glass, but this glass not only absorbs the visual rays to a large extent but also fails to cut out entirely the ultra-violet rays.

The new glass is green in color and made in six distinct tints, the first so light as to be practically unnoticeable. This is used for reading, especially by artificial light. The other tints may be used as occasion requires, the deepest only in severe cases of ophthalmia, trachoma, snow blindness, &c.

Few persons, it is pointed out, recognize the harm done to the eyes by ultra-violet light, which is present in bright electric illumination, and on snow sufraces at great elevations, when the absorption of the atmosphere is reduced. Snow blindness is due to this cause.

By the newly invented glass all the ultra-violet light is stopped while that in the central portion of the spectrum owed to pass.

VOSSISCHE ZEITUNG SOLD.

Ullstein & Co. Pay $1,875,000 for Berlin Paper Founded in 1704.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—Important developments have just taken place in the Berlin newspaper field where a concentration of the great publishing interests in a few hands seems to be the order of the day as it is in America and England.

The firm of Ullstein & Co., the largest publishing house in Germany, has acquired the venerable Vossische Zeitung, which was founded in 1704, for $1,875,000 from the banking group comprising the Lazard, Speyer and Ellisen interests. The latter bought "Aunt Voss," as the old Liberal journal is called, in 1908, but made no money out of it.

The Ullstein firm, which consists of five hustling brothers, now owns four Berlin dailies, the most popular illustrated weekly, and the biggest circulating library and book publishing business in the country.

August Scherl's Lokal-Anzeiger, hitherto Berlin's most popular daily, has, it is understood, passed into the hands of a capitalists' syndicate, which has acquired the control on behalf of the Imperial Government.

ASSAILED HER CHARACTER

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—Fräulein Frieda Hempel of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, won to-day her suit for criminal libel against the editor of Kleine Journal, a sensational weekly, which insinuated that her decoration of the Leopold Order was conferred upon her by the late King of the Belgians following her participation in an orgy at Leopold's Summer palace at Ostend.

Fräulein Hempel filed suit against the proprietor of the offending newspaper in December, 1912, just before sailing for America to appear at the Metropolitan Opera House. The incident narrated in the paper was alleged to have occurred at the Ostend Villa of the Baroness Vaughan, the morganatic wife of the late King Leopold.

Fräulein Hempel's testimony was given by deposition as she was not able to appear personally on account of her engagements to sing in America. She denied that after the King had departed from the soirée "champagne corks popped like shots from a rapid-fire gun," and that the affair became "a Bacchanalian feast" wherein some daring dances figured. She said that she went to the villa to sing just as if it had been a regular professional engagement and that she went home as soon as the concert was over.

The publication of the insinuations about her, she maintained in her complaint, would tend to injure her in the eyes of Americans, especially as she was about to begin a three years' engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House.

The court heard testimony from other singers who participated in the concert, from Baroness Vaughan, and from King Leopold's valet.

CHAMBERLAINS CELEBRATE.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain spent their silver wedding anniversary to-day in their London residence in Prince's Gardens.

From the moment when she gave her hand to the British statesman and left her country to make her home in his, Mrs. Chamberlain, (née Endicott of Salem, Mass.) completely merged her personality in that of her husband and made his health and welfare her absorbing thought. Through all the long months and years of his illness and seclusion she has been her husband's constant companion and unwearying nurse.

"She has sustained me by her courage and cheered me by her gracious companionship and I have found her my best and truest counsellor," Mr. Chamberlain once said. In public Mrs. Chamberlain has been rarely seen anywhere except by her husband's side. She was a favorite of Queen Victoria and the only woman recipient, outside of royal circles, of the Diamond Jubilee gold commemoration medal.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Congratulations were showered to-day from all parts of the world on Joseph Chamberlain, the British statesman, and his wife on the occasion of their silver wedding.

The popularity of the aged statesman, who is in remarkably good health, was evidenced by the gathering of a great crowd who cheered outside the house.

DENMARK-CANADA WIRELESS

Station to Connect the Two Countries to be Erected Near Greenland.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 15.—Engineer Erik Degn, with Hans Egede, has returned to Copenhagen from Greenland, where they were sent by the Poulsen syndicate to find a place for a wireless station by means of which Denmark can communicate with Canada by wireless telegraphy.

Degn reports that he found an admirable place on Kitsigsut Island, some miles south of the Greenland coast. A station is to be erected there next year, and the service will be in operation soon after its completion.

NEW FORM OF HEROISM.

Offer Yourself as Ideal Food if Your Friend is Anaemic.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Dean Hugounenq of the Faculty of Medicine of Lyons, after long studies of food, declares that if we are unwell it is entirely because our food is not proper and that the perfect food for human beings is human flesh. He says:

"It is that which reduces the work of the digestive apparatus to the minimum. This is because the organism absorbs readily cellules like its own."

Le Matin thus comments: "It would be indiscreet and idle to ask by what means the learned professor was able to find this out, but we suppose he did not use the experimental method.

"Beef and mutton are heating, veal fails in nutrition, pork is indigestible, vegetarianism is productive of anaemia and is also unsatisfactory to most persons. Therefore, he says, anthropophagy is the last word in the science of hygiene.

"If the theory propagates itself, if it is proved that the doctor is right, some day, perhaps, there will be a new form of heroism—men sacrificing themselves in the form of steaks to nourish their neighbors. We suggest that the doctor be the first so to devote himself."

BREST, FRANCE'S SALVATION

M. Casimir-Perier Urges Government to Make It a Great Port.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—France may have a new transatlantic port as a result of the new conditions of interoceanic traffic which will be inaugurated with the opening of the Panama Canal.

Claude Casimir-Perier made a report to the Government this week in which he declared that only by utilizing Brest as the chief transatlantic port will France be able to hold her own in the international trade contest which is sure to take place. The report indicates that the Government purposes to encourage building gigantic ships, even exceeding in tonnage the new German Leviathans.

After mentioning the requirements such a port should have, M. Casimir-Perier declares that Brest alone measures up to the ideal because she has a sufficient depth of water for the "gigantic ships which will compose the new French commercial fleet."

She would also provide a natural shelter in rough weather with plenty of harbor space and dry docks.

ELECTIONS PLEASE POPE.

Results in the United States Are Very Gratifying to Him.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

ROME, Nov. 15.—The Pope has received a detailed report of the elections in America and has learned with great satisfaction of the successes attained by a number of Catholic candidates. He is especially pleased that the Governors of half a dozen important States are Catholics.

Pius X. considers this not only a mark of progress on the part of Catholicism, but a tangible proof of the broadmindedness and tolerance of the American nation, as Catholic candidates must have received the votes of Protestant electors, who have thus shown how the prejudices still existing in certain countries have died out in America.

FEAR DARKER DAYS FOR RUSSIAN JEWS

German-Jewish Leaders Apprehensive of What Will Follow the Kieff Trial.

STATEMENT BY DR. NATHAN

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Germany, Nov. 15.—The Jewish leaders who, in the realm of philanthropy on behalf of their oppressed co-religionists everywhere in Europe and the Orient, act and speak for the Jews of America, are convinced of the inconclusive result of the Kieff "ritual murder" trial and that it means blacker days still to come for the Jews in Russia.

Dr. Paul Nathan, President of the Central Jewish Federation of Germany, who ranks as the greatest authority on Jewish conditions in this hemisphere, has furnished to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent the following statement:

"From the criminological standpoint the Beiliss trial was utterly uninteresting. The persons who actually committed the crime are known in Kieff, and the police officials and the examining Magistrate only had the task of conducting the proceedings in such a manner as to shield the real culprits.

"They succeeded in doing so; but it must be said, to the honor of Russian officialdom, that it was, nevertheless, not entirely easy to accomplish this end. Several police officials had to be put out of the way because they had been so incautious and ruthless as to wish to elicit the truth, and the examining Magistrate had to be changed for the same reason.

"Then recourse was had to medico-scientific expert testimony, which, as soon as it became known, was shattered with ridicule by the first authorities of Germany, England, France, Austria, and Switzerland.

"Finally a theological expert was discovered in a wretched Roman Catholic priest, who was to testify to the occurrence of Jewish ritual murders. This priest, Pranaitis, a few years ago, wrote an unimportant book called 'Ritual Murder Among the Jews.' It was an inferior compilation of anti-Semitic polemical essays, which had long since been effectually contradicted.

"Pranaitis owed his summons as an expert wholly to the authorship of that book. One of his confrères in Tachkent made some extremely interesting revelation in regard to Pranaitis's rôle as a theological expert, which exposed the secret influences at the back of the Beiliss prosecution.

"According to these revelations the All-Russian League of Nobles disinterred Pranaitis's forgotten and almost unknown book, and on the League's initiative, despite Pranaitis's own disinclination, he was finally induced to appear at Kieff as an expert. Pranaitis knew that he was unequal to the emergency. He therefore cut murder a sorry and ridiculous figure in the witness box.

"He was, perhaps, especially ill at ease on account of the fact that he had previously been transferred to remote Tashkent on account of a very shady blackmailing affair in a St. Petersburg criminal court.

"Thus the Kieff prosecution from both the judicial and the medico-theological standpoints was untenable.

"Beiliss's acquittal was, however, ascribable only to the fact that the Kieff jurymen were honorable men. One may object that they should have negatived both questions submitted to them. But it cannot be demanded that every juryman, besides being an honorable man, should be a hero. It must be regarded as praiseworthy in the highest degree that the jurymen found Beiliss not guilty, even if, in consequence of the extraordinary pressure brought to bear on them, they theoretically and technically admitted the possibility of the murder having been committed out of religious fanaticism. They were, of course, impelled to admit this possibility without a scrap of evidence to show that the crime had been committed from a religious motive.

"The Kieff trial was not a criminal trial in any sense of the word. It was a political prosecution, staged by the powerful All-Russian League of Nobles, which is an organized, influential party of reaction and is supported by various leaders of the Russian bureaucracy for their own ends.

In the struggle between the reactionary and progressive powers in Russia the Beiliss trial is only an interlude. The attack attempted by reaction has failed this time, but it has had the result of rousing not only the progressive but also all the enlightened and respectable elements in Russia. The civilized world, on both sides of the Atlantic, without regard to denomination or faith, has been a breathless spectator of the combat.

"Russian reaction is most certainly not defeated. One must fear, indeed, that it will not for long refrain from fresh assaults, either against the Jews in Russia or the Russian intelligent classes.

"That is the mournful prospect. New catastrophes can only be avoided by Russia if she bring herself to establish a government made up of men of will and of sufficient force of character to hold reactionary and revolutionary anarchists in check.

"For the present, unfortunately, there is no indication that men with such qualities, who are to be found in Russia, will be the recipients of the Czar's confidence."

Hermann Struck, the celebrated German etcher and portrait painter, who was recently in New York, has taken an active interest in the German protest against the Kieff trial and sends to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent the following incisive view:

"The deliberately involved and semi-contradictory nature of the verdict, from both a legal and a logical standpoint, is nothing but a devilish monstrosity.

"In my opinion not Beiliss but the Jewish race of the whole world was the prisoner in the dock at Kieff. Mendel Beiliss was acquitted, but Jewry, in its entirety, continues to be under the insane indictment of ritual murder."

BACTERIZED PEAT A GREAT FERTILIZER

DR. BOTTOMLEY'S DISCOVERY

Professor of Botany at King's College Believes Process Will Also Make Barren Land Productive.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—Experiments recently conducted are said to give promise of a time when agricultural England will be covered with crops of Gargantuan dimensions, with vegetables double the size they are now, and when there will be far less barren land in the kingdom.

Dr. W. B. Bottomley, Professor of Botany at King's College, London, who has been experimenting for over seven years to find a scientific manure that will increase the growth of crops, vegetables, and plants, and make it possible to cultivate land now held to be barren, believes that he has found in peat the long desired substance.

Prof. Bottomley has found that by inoculating ordinary peat with nitrogen-fixing bacteria and using it as manure he is able to increase the growth of plants and vegetables in some cases as much as 150 per cent. At King's College yesterday he showed some specimens of plants grown under his process, side by side with similar plants grown in ordinary soil. In every case the treated plants were almost double the size of the ordinary ones. He also exhibited some tomatoes which he has succeeded in growing in pure sand with the aid of his germ-inoculated peat.

"Plants and vegetables," said the professor, "grown in the open under bacterized peat at Eton School gardens and the Chelsea Physic Garden have been very successful. At Eton the results obtained have been particularly striking. One plot was manured with bacterized peat and another with ordinary farmyard manure. In the case of the bacterized plot only 1 1-5 tons per acre of the peat was used, but on the other plot eighty tons of farmyard manure was used to the acre. Nevetheless, the yield of crops from the bacterized plot was considerably in excess of the ordinary manured plot.

"Perhaps even more gratifying is the result of the cultivation of radishes with bacterized peat at the Chelsea Physic Garden. The radishes were only watered once with an extract of the peat, but they gave an increase of 54 per cent. over plants left untreated.

"I am hopeful that my discovery will prove equally successful when applied to the cultivation of barren land. If the experiments prove as successful when conducted on a large scale as they have been up to the present, I see no reason why bacterized peat should not produce crops on hard or even rocky soil, for peat is humus.

"At present it takes from four to five months to inoculate the peat, and during that time it has to be kept at a certain fixed temperature. I hope to be able to reduce this time, but if this does not prove practicable five months will be no obstacle to the general adoption of the manure, for it will be possible to prepare huge quantities at a time.

"When the experiments are conducted on a large scale next Spring particular attention will be paid to the cultivation of wheat."

$10 CUFF BUTTONS CAUSE A GREAT ROW

Beveridge Putnam of San Francisco Has a Lively Time with the French Officials.

LIKE OUR AIGRETTE LAW

Act Under Which the Links Were Nearly Destroyed Just as Incomprehensible to the Foreigner.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—America has an aigrette law which has caused much heart-burning among the French, but France also has a customs law the workings of which seem no less incomprehensible to Americans. Beveridge Putnam of San Francisco has just had a seance lasting three days with the French customs officials over a pair of cuff buttons eight years old and valued at $10 in the course of which the buttons narrowly escaped destruction at the Paris Mint.

Mr. Putnam had been in London, where he broke one of the buttons and took it to a jeweler to have it mended. He came to Paris before the button was ready and asked a friend to forward it by mail. The button was sent to Paris by registered mail and insured for $15. The Paris Post Office opened the package, saw the gold links, and sent them to the Customs, which notified Mr. Putnam to call at the Custom House the next morning.

The Customs first required Mr. Putnam to fill out and swear to a formidable set of papers in duplicate giving his age, name, and address, whether he was married or unmarried, his wife's name, age, and address, the names of his father and mother, his own and his wife's residence in Paris, his permanent residence, occupation, income, and nationality.

In the course of filling out the papers, Mr. Putnam was led into three separate rooms, paid fourteen cents in fees and was then told that the buttons must go to the mint to be valued and that he was to go to the mint the next day at 2 o'clock to learn the result.

At the mint the next day the officials weighed the buttons, while Mr. Putnam watched: then he weighed while they watched; then the officials said that the buttons were worth only $10 and, as the insurance papers gave their value as $16 while their real value was $10, the buttons would have to be destroyed.

Mr. Putnam expostulated, but the officials were inexorable and told Mr. Putnam to return next morning to get the pieces.

The next day at 10 o'clock Mr. Putnam was on hand. He found that the buttons had not yet been destroyed and told a long, sad story. He said that the buttons were the gift eight years ago from a friend now dead and valuable only as a souvenir. He promised not to sell or attempt to sell them in France and made oath to that effect. He paid a round of visits and eight cents in fees and was told to return at 2 o'clock to learn the final decision.

At 2 o'clock Mr. Putnam was back at the mint. He found a committee sitting on his case. An hour and a half later the committee permitted him to take the buttons, but charged 25 cents duty.

HELMETS FOR PARIS COPS.

The Kepi, They Said, Gave Neither Dignity Nor Protection.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—M. Hennion, the new Prefect of Police, who is already famous for his reforms in the prefecture, this week made a big hit with the force.

The pride of the Parisian policeman in his personal appearance has achieved a signal victory in the return to the dignified and impressive helmet, which replaces the insignificant képi, which he has worn for ten years.

Ever since the introduction of the képi the police have complained that they had no head protection against heavy missiles, and also that its appearance robbed them of all dignified and military character.

Bolivian Charges Halted.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—In reference to the letter of Adolfo Ballivian published in THE NEW YORK TIMES a few days ago relative to alleged atrocities in Bolivia, THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent is in a position to state that the official publication of the charges by the Aborigines Protection Society, which brought them to the notice of the British Foreign Office, is delayed for diplomatic reasons.

PARIS MAY LOSE TAXES.

If M. Delanney's Scheme Goes Through Smuggling Will Be Easier.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—A new point intimately concerned with the revenue of the city has just come up in connection with Prefect of the Seine Delanney's plan to tear down the old fortifications and make a greater Paris, thus inducing the people to live in the suburbs instead of congregating in the centre of the city.

One of the greatest sources of revenue of Paris at the present time is the customs duties collected at the gates, and with the fortifications standing, as now, smuggling is very difficult on account of the fact that practically the only access to Paris is by the regular roads, and these are effectively barred by gates at the line of the fortifications. But, with the fortifications torn down and the streets carried beyond their present boundaries into the open country, there would be a thousand ways to enter the city for every one that now exists, and the collection of customs and the prevention of smuggling would become a much more serious and expensive problem, with the result of a great reduction in the revenue from this source.

Even under the present conditions smuggling is constantly attempted, and the officials are always on the watch to discover new and ingenious methods invented to bring tobacco, spirits, matches, and petrol into the city without paying duty.

Two of the latest ways have been found in funeral and bridal parties. Formerly both funerals and bridal parties passed the gates unquestioned, while the customs officials stood at the salute; but recently it was found that more than half the funerals were bogus, the hearse really carrying a coffin filled with contraband goods.

Now all funerals are stopped. The officials are very polite, but firmly insist on running their swords into the coffin to make sure about what it contains.

PARIS THEATRES DULL.

Bad Season So Far, Due to Revivals and Cautiousness of Managers.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—The cry of a bad theatrical season, so frequently heard lately in New York and London, is now resounding in Paris.

Although the season is scarcely under way, it is evident that the public seems to be reserving itself. The closing of the Théâtre Champs-Elysées, which stood for a New Theatre in France, brought a disturbing uneasiness to the dramatic industry.

The explanation appears to be quite identical with that given elsewhere—the lack of good new plays. Revivals more than anything else have held the boards recently at the principal theatres. But the public apparently has enough of revivals and is now demanding new material.

Quite a number of authors had announced four or five new plays, none of which have been produced on account of the managers' fear that their plots tell the "same old story."

Panama Extends Period in Which to Obey Registration Law.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PANAMA, Nov. 15.—The Panama Government reopened negotiations tonight with representatives of the Chinese here, and withdrew the ultimatum which expired to-day requiring all Chinese to register with the Government or leave the country. Secretary Lefevre of the Panama Government granted another period of ten days to permit of further consideration.

It is thought that the matter will be satisfactorily settled before the expiration of the ten days, although the Government insists that force will be used unless the Chinese conform to the registration law, which requires payment of $250 for each registration certificate.

STUART RELIC FOR FRANCE.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Mary Stuart's house at Roscoff, a little village on the coast of Finistère, has been purchased for the French nation by the Ministry of Fine Arts.

It was built as a chapel, marking the spot where Mary Queen of Scots landed, in 1548 to marry the Dauphin.

In the chapel, which is named Saint-Ninian, a curious custom has grown up among the Roscoff women. They gather the dust from the floor and carefully blow it in the opposite direction from where their husbands and sweethearts are out fishing. This, they believe, will assure a fair wind home.

ROMANTIC HISTORY OF PANAMA ROAD

Sixty-five Years Since Three Far-Sighted Americans First Sought Concession.

STORM THAT BROUGHT LUCK

California Gold Helped to Make the Little Line the Bonanza That It Is.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PANAMA, Nov. 2.—Sixty-five years ago three Americans secured a concession from the Colombian Government for a railroad across the Isthmus. In 1847, a Frenchman had succeeded in getting a concession, but he could not raise the money to even make a survey, and when he dropped his rights the Americans went after them and in December, 1848, Colombia granted permission for the road to William H. Aspinwall, John L. Stephens and Henry Chauncey.

The three Americans had in view the handling of the immigrants bound for the recently opened California country, and Aspinwall already had started a steamship line between Panama and San Francisco. The discovery of gold in California paved the way for the raising of the necessary money for a start.

But railroad building in 1850 was far from what it is to-day, and constructing fifty miles across a country which had the reputation of being the most unhealthy in the world was no easy task. After a year's work when the line had been run only seven miles inland to Gatun, the money gave out altogether and the promoters did not know which way to turn.

Then a bad wind and good luck came to the enterprise. A sailing ship, bound for the mouth of the Chagres River, where it was customary to land passengers for a canoe trip up the river to within eighteen miles of the Pacific, was unable, on account of storms, to put in there and instead landed its cargo and human freight at Colon, the starting point of the railroad.

The seven miles of railroad became popular at once and one may be sure that the rates charged were high enough to suit even a railroad rate-maker of to-day. But, despite the high rates, the seven-mile road was so much better and faster than the Chagres River route to the same point that the company prospered and money poured in again. From that day to this the Panama Railroad never has passed a dividend, and has paid from 3 to 61 per cent. yearly.

It was in 1850 that the work was begun on the road, and five years later, on Jan. 28, the first railroad train was run across the continent. The road was a trifle over forty-seven miles long and reached a height of 263 feet.

European trade for the Orient went by way of the Isthmus, and Panama was once more a land of plenty. The roadbed followed exactly the trail of the olden Spanish mule trains; but now, instead of carting treasure in the shape of looted gold and jewels, the treasure train carried manufactured goods for far-away countries.

In 1869 the first railroad across the United States was completed, and much of the freight trade and most of the passengers were diverted from the Panama route, but still the road continued to make money.

In 1881 the French Canal Company, preparing to start work on the waterway, needed the railroad. The Frenchmen found it absolutely necessary, in fact, to carry out their plans, and so they purchased 68,887 of the 70,000 shares of stock for $291 a share and assumed charge of the road.

In 1904, when the United States bought over all the rights to the Canal, it obtained this stock and also bought up by private purchase the remaining shares, so that to-day the Panama Railroad is owned by the United States as is the steamship branch of the service.

The road is to-day one of the most complete in the world. The old rails have been replaced with eighty-pound ones, and it is double tracked most of the way. One-hundred-ton oil burning locomotives are used, and the passenger and freight cars are the best made.

As the Panama Canal, like the railroad, is following the original trails of the first adventurers, it has been necessary to relocate some of the line, so that to-day it is running partly through a new country.

This first railroad owned by the United States pays dividends, and is run strictly on business principles. Col. George W. Goethals, the canal builder, is the President, and there never has been a suspicion of any of the graft or the playing of political favorites that every one said would mark a Government-owned system.

BRANGWYN'S BIG PICTURE.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The fact that there has just been completed here the largest picture ever painted in London for shipment abroad seems to interest the local critics less than the fact that the artist, Frank Brangwyn, has a reputation for declining honors. He has declined a dinner at the Mansion House, and two years ago he declined an invitation to one given by the City of Venice. For the last year he has been at work here on a mural painting for the new Court House at Cleveland, Ohio. It is a canvas 50 feet long and 15 feet high, and represents King John signing the Magna Charta at Runnimede in 1215.

The King, seated with parchment in hand and in the act of signing, is seen in a group comprising the Earl of Pembroke, Pandulph, the Papal Legate; two Bishops, Robert Fitzwalter, kneeling and closely watching John as he signs, and Stephen Langton, whose robe of rich orange red gives the keynote of color to the panel.

The last named is standing in a persuasive attitude, obviously completing arguments in favor of the King's unwilling act. Near him are Church dignitaries in their ecclesiastical robes. Attendants and nobles in armor, boatmen, and men bearing their masters' shields form a picturesque crowd. A notable feature of the work is its balance and strength and its masterly color harmony.

Some idea of the magnitude of the task may be gathered from the fact that Mr. Brangwyn had to take one of the largest studios in London for the work. The canvas was built on a large timber frame, and the artist had to use a movable scaffold to reach some parts of the picture.

Only the purest oil colors were employed, and to remove the high lights of the ordinary oil painting, which would make it difficult to see the details of the panel at the height at which it is being fixed, the artist mixed the oils with wax—an unusual medium, but one which should retain all the beauty and quality of the picture for at least 300 years. Six men were needed to pack the canvas.

Missing Servian Patriarch Who Is Believed to Have Fled to This Country.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BELGRADE, Nov. 1.—The mystery of the disappearance of the Servian Patriarch Lukean Bogodanovitch is still unelucidated. The finding of his mantle and cap does not satisfy most persons that he has been drowned in the River Ach. Until his body is recovered the story will be credited of his voluntary flight to America. His solitary walks in the forests around the beautiful watering place of Gastein are now said to have been taken with the object of accustoming his friends to long absences.

Lukean was a strikingly handsome man with clear-cut features set off by a dark beard. He was 45 years of age and his tall stature, elegant dress, and distinguished bearing made him a conspicuous figure in the fashionable crowd at Bad Gastein. He was a favorite at the Austo-Hungarian Court and, therefore, not popular with his flock, the Servian subjects of Emperor Francis Joseph. They did not forget his cold attitude toward the victorious combatants in the Balkan wars. Lukean seems to have believed with other Austrian dignitaries that the Servians would be defeated, and strongly dissuaded the Servian volunteers of Hungary from joining their brethren across the Save. He was, therefore, denounced as a traitor to the Servian cause. This preyed on his mind, and is said to have caused the attitude of reserve and melancholy remarked by all before his unexplained disappearance.

Various romantic rumors are current of the revival of a youthful love affair that may have taken him hot foot across Europe bound for New York, but these have so far remained without confirmation. Most people here, however, believe his address is now the United States.

It immediately necessary to inform the King of them.

King George is apparently quite unconscious of being what one member of the royal entourage has called him, one of the most henpecked men in his kingdom. Anyway, if his Majesty be aware of it he accepts the fact with complacent indifference and possibly rather congratulates himself that, so far as the conduct of the affairs at Court is concerned, his Consort relieves him of the performance of duties in which he takes not the least interest.

However, if King George is willing to let the Queen be King, there are those about him who are not at all disposed to do so, and of late his Majesty has received one or two rather pointed reminders of this fact.

For instance, in the last few months the Queen was present at certain official interviews between King George and some of the Cabinet. These interviews take place in the King's writing room in his personal apartments, which Queen Mary, also of late, has taken to using as her writing room, with the result that she has sometimes been in the room on the arrival of a Minister and has remained there during the interview.

At last representations were made by Premier Asquith to Lord Stamfordham that some of his colleagues objected to the presence of the Queen during their interviews with the Sovereign on state affairs, and Lord Stamfordham, who by no means approves of the authority Queen Mary exercises in the royal household, readily enough undertook to convey the Prime Minister's message to both their Majesties, with the result that Ministerial audiences with the Sovereign are now no longer attended by his Consort.

More recently still, Queen Mary received a respectful but plain reminder from the Lord Chamberlain that she was taking upon herself authority that properly belonged only to the King. This was when Queen Mary notified the Lord Chamberlain, through Mr. Wallington, of her desire to have some alterations made in the hours of the delivery of letters at Buckingham Palace. The alterations were made, but the instructions had to come directly from the King before they were carried out.

Some ladies in the royal entourage have also, from time to time, broken out against the exercise over them by Queen Mary of what they regard as tyrannical authority, and the atmosphere of the English Court is continually charged with electricity, as there are always rumors of pending resignations. Only one so far has actually taken place, that of Lady Shaftesbury; but others would have been heard of if Queen Mary had not had the wisdom to climb down from the too lofty position she had assumed.

The Queen is, in fact, attempting to do what Lord Knollys warned her, after King George came to the throne, not to try to do—boss the Court.

"Outside your private apartments let King George be King," was the old courtier's advice to her Majesty.

It is said that she has never forgiven him for offering it and has never showed any signs of following it. Even those who most resent the Queen ruling the royal roost admit that King George not only bears up well under her domestic tyranny, but actually seems to like it.

ANTI-SLAVERY LAW PASSES.

MANILA, Nov. 15. — An anti-slavery law was passed to-day by the Philippine National Assembly after a heated debate. The measure, which was framed by William H. Phipps, the Insular Auditor, reaffirms the old Spanish statutes against slavery, and incorporates the American laws. The vote in opposition to the enactment of the measure was small, in spite of the warmth of the discussion.

Clarence B. Miller, Congressman from Minnesota, left for the United States to-day. In an interview, he declared he was in favor of an elective senate for the Philippines, and said he believed the Filipinos had made more progress in the last fifteen years than any other nation in the world.

NAVAL COLLIER ON A REEF.

MANILA, Nov. 15.—The naval collier Ajax went aground to-day on a reef at Guam.

YEATS BELIEVES IN GHOSTS.

Poet Tells of Conversations with the Dead In Five Languages.

DUBLIN, Nov. 2.—W. B. Yeats, the well-known Irish poet, has given a remarkable lecture here on the question of the survival of the human individuality after death.

Dealing with the old idea that spirits are subject to man, Mr. Yeats said that years ago an Irish stable boy met the ghost of his dead master and told it to go away and haunt an outhouse. The ghost obeyed, but the widow dismissed the stable boy for sending the spirit of her husband to such an inclement place!

"That there are ghosts is not a mere tradition, but a fact," Mr. Yeats continued. His conviction, he said, was based upon facts which he could not put before this audience. He had had the most amazing experiences, and had communicated in Greek, English, Irish, Welsh, and Latin with persons long dead, through a medium, who was not a professional, but a personal friend.

STARTED BY A PARAGRAPH

Report That a "Woman" Left $85,000 for a Dog Angers a Warwick "Lady" and Controversy Begins.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The following letter appeared in The Daily Mail a few days ago:

Surely a lady who can leave £17,000 should not be put down in a paper such as The Daily Mail as "a woman."

An ordinary reader might think she was a tramp, and as her relatives have held a good position in Stratford-on-Avon I expect they will feel much aggrieved at such a derogatory account. I happen to be the late Miss Lapworth's first cousin, and I do think that an apology in The Daily Mail by the person who sent in that account is due to our family. The Lapworths have always been in good social position, honored, and respected.

(Miss) MARIA A. LAPWORTH.
Sudeley Villa, 10 Emscote Road, Warwick.

The Daily Mail headed this communication "A Lady." Such a caption is invariably bound to arouse interest in this country, just as the controversy in regard to the qualities of a "gentleman" can be revived during any "Silly Season" with perfect confidence that the British public will respond with many letters to the editor. The first fruits of the "Lady" letter were the following:

We all recognize when a woman is not a lady; can you tell us what a lady is when she is not a women? EDITH HIGELOW, Orchard House, Great Austins, Farnham.

Various anecdotes were then sent to the editor of The Daily Mail, some new, some good but ancient, and some neither good nor new.

Some years ago, wrote one correspondent, a curate in one of the most "fragrant areas" of Birmingham became interested in a street row and asked what was the matter. The victor proudly anewered: "'Er said I warn't no lydy, but I soon 'ad 'er down in the mud and showed 'er who was a lydy."

Mistress—Are you sure she was a lady, Jane?

Maid—Certain, mum, she was covered with looiry and smelt of sherry!

Mr. Thorowgood of the Royal Naval Barracks at Chatham propounded this question: "If the sum of £17,000 entitles a woman to the right of being described as a lady, may I ask what is the least sum which will give the owner this delightful privilege?"

The next communications received by The Daily Mail were some rather painfully bromidic echoes from the humor of a quarter of a century ago, such as this:

"A woman went to a doctor with a bad wound in the hand. On being asked what animal had bitten her, she replied, 'Please, Sir, it weren't an animal; it were another lydy.'"

Another correspondent referred to an anecdote about Queen Victoria. The Queen was taking a walk with two of her ladies-in-waiting in the Park. A crowd collected, and one man, in his eagerness to get a better view of the Queen, slightly pushed up against one of the ladies-in-waiting, with a "Get out of the way, woman!" The lady was so indignant at being thus addressed that she appealed to the Queen, who calmly replied: "And, pray, what are you but a woman?"

The Daily Mail, evidently realizing that there are two sides to every question, afterward printed letters from a different point of view. "An Inquiring Female" wrote as follows:

As a woman and a lady, I should feel much indebted if some of those men and woman who favor your paper with their intellectual and charming stories of the "lydy" of Costerland would kindly inform me by what epithet a cultured woman is now to be distinguished from a charwoman. I am sure many will be greatly interested to know what particular expression will convey to these higher critics the difference between a cultured woman and a washerwoman. Our language must, indeed, be degenerating if we are only allowed one expression to represent all the shades of womankind.

A resident of James Street was overheard to say about a neighbor: "Yus, she's a lydy; when she gits drunk she can take a cab 'ome!"

Operation on Princess's Slayer.

GENOA, Nov. 15.—Baron Paterno, the murderer of Princess Giulia di Trigana, a lady-in-waiting to Queen Helena, underwent a second operation to-day for the extraction of a bullet which he had fired into his head in an attempt to end his life after the murder. The surgeons opened the cranium, but were unable to find the bullet. They removed, however, several extraneous bodies, which, it is believed, will relieve the patient of the severe pains from which he has long suffered.

ATTACKS FERRERO'S VIEWS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Guglielmo Ferrero, the Italian historian, has been attributing the decay of European culture, art, literature, manners, and even cooking to American wealth and enterprise.

Europe used to be the land of artistic manufacture; America is the land of artistic machine manufacture—that is Ferrero's argument; but The Daily News maintains that it will not bear examination historically and says:

"America did not invent the modern industrial system; it originated in England, and had there been no America Europe would still have come under the sway of the machine. The sins of the machine are Europe's own, not America's; nor is it wholly just to talk of America as merely a barbarian in the region of art. In recent years she has produced at least one high-class sculptor, one first-rate painter, and further, the United States, for beauty, boldness, and originality of architecture, leads the world.

"All this may not be a very large total, but at the risk of appearing lacking in courtesy, we would say that modern Italy has not done better."

AWARDS HATPIN DAMAGES.

London Judge Holds Wearer Responsible for Accidental Injuries.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—"If a lady chooses to carry in her hat a dangerous implement like a hatpin, without a guard, and injures some one with it she is clearly liable for the injury she causes." Such was Judge Harrington's comment at Wadsworth County Court yesterday, awarding Mrs. Charlotte Osborne of Barnes $15 damages for a wound in the cheek, said to have been caused by a hatpin worn by Miss Olive Smith, an East Sheen typist, while the two women were boarding an omnibus.

Answering the Judge, Mrs. Osborne said that the pin projected 2½ inches beyond the hat. Miss Smith denied that the pin was sticking out beyond the hat.

Judge—You agree that a hatpin is dangerous unless it is protected? Certainly.

And you are wearing an unprotected hatpin now? Yes.

Why don't you get a guard for it? I have had dozens, but they coms off.

His Honor said it was unnecessary to prove any more negligence than the wearing of a hatpin without a guard, and awarded the plaintiff $15 damages.

By-laws prohibiting the use of unprotected hatpins have been adopted in Berlin, Vienna, Hamburg, Munich, Lyons, Nantes, and in towns in Switzerland ad Sweden.

CENTRAL AFRICAN PROGRESS

LONDON, Oct. 27.—L. A. Wallace, Administrator of Northern Rhodesia, has arrived in England after a tour of more than 1,200 miles on a bicycle through the northeastern territory. He describes the country as being now so safe that no further protection than a walking stick is necessary anywhere.

The latest addition to civilization, he said, was the Watwa tribe, people who formerly lived like frogs in the unknown swamps of Lake Bangweolo, (or Bemba,) just south of the equator, in Central Africa. These swamps were quite impregnable, and the people would not allow strangers to visit their haunts. Now, he said, they had vacated the swamps, lived on dry land, and had become law-abiding, willingly paid their taxes, and even escorted Government officials to their old-time homes. Mr. Wallace added:

"Within a brief period there will be communication from the mouth of the Congo at Boma right across Africa to Dar-es-Salaam."

AIR STUNTS IN FRANCE.

Frenchman and Englishman Try Loops and Somersaults.

VERSAILLES, France, Nov. 15.—Flying head downward and turning somersaults in the air are becoming common in the French aviation field. Hanouille, a French aeroplanist, flew over the aviation field here to-day for twenty seconds with his machine upside down, and then cut two vertical circles in the air.

Hucks, an Englishman, flew 35 seconds with his head hanging downward, and he also accomplished four consecutive loops.

Daucourt Resumes Flight.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 15.—Pierre Daucourt, the French aviator who left Paris on Oct. 21 in an aeroplane flight to Cairo, and landed here Nov. 9, resumed his flight to Cairo to-day. He was accompanied by his passenger, Roux. Four Turkish officers in military aeroplanes escorted the French aviators for a short distance.

MOSLEM CHIEFS QUIT ALL-INDIA LEAGUE

Oriental Propaganda Said to be Too Radical for Indian Friends of the Empire.

GRAVE APPREHENSION FELT

Ameer Ali and the Aga Khan Non-Committal as to Future Policy of the League.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—In the light of the Moslem unrest in India, caused by the defeat of the Mahommedan Turks by Christian nations in the Balkans, the resignations of two leaders of the All-India Moslem League are regarded with some apprehension. Notwithstanding the official reasons given for the resignations, it is believed that the league is about to embark upon a political policy which the withdrawing of the leaders, who have had the confidence of the British Government cannot countenance, although they do not feel themselves at liberty to make it known.

Those who have suddenly resigned are Ameer Ali, President of the London All-India Moslem League, and his Highness the Aga Khan, the head of the league in India. C. A. Latif, the Vice President, and A. S. M. Anik, the Treasurer of the London League, also follow Ameer Ali into retirement. It would seem that the London League has for some time opposed the sensational methods of propaganda proposed by the under-officials of the league in India, and that the latter have replied by cutting off the London stipend. This is as far as Ameer Ali will go in explaining his resignation. As for the Aga Khan, he merely says that he retires because his private affairs will no longer permit him to give the league the attention it should have.

In order to appreciate the grave significance of this crisis in the history of the Indian Moslems, it should be recalled that the League was the outcome of a deputation of leading Mahommedans, headed by Aga Khan, which waited on Lord Minto, the then viceroy, on Oct. 1, 1906, and asked that, in the political developments which were then believed to be in contemplation, there should be adequate recognition of the community as an important factor in the State. The Viceroy replied in a most sympathetic spirit, and it was generally recognized at the time had come for its political organization.

The objects of the league, as defined by Ameer Ali at the inaugural meeting in London, have been the promotion of concord and harmony among the different communities of India; the advancement of the general interests of the country in concert with the other Indian communities; and the advancement and safeguard by all constitutional and loyal methods of the special interests of the Mahommedan subjects of the King.

In addition to the Central Committee at Lucknow, which has very few opportunities apart from the annual conference for meeting in numbers representative of all parts of India, there are provincial and local leagues throughout the dependency. The London League has been a most valuable exponent of Moslem sentiments and opinion as expressed in resolutions and communications from the various Indian branches. It had no small share in securing for the community the distinct representation upon the enlarged legislative councils under the Morley reform scheme which had been suggested by the deputation to Lord Minto three years before.

Its relations with the league at Lucknow have been those of co-operation and co-ordination, and by the sober, well-reasoned, and detailed representations it has made to the India Office, the Colonial Office, and other Whitehall departments it has taken the acknowledged lead in formulating and giving expression to Indian Moslem opinion. Indeed, on such matters as the treatment of Indians in South Africa and the East Africa Protectorate, the claim of Indians to positions of real responsibility in the commissioned ranks of the army, and questions affecting the welfare of Indian students here it has spoken for sober, educated Indian opinion generally.

TWO NEGROES AGAIN AT WHIPPING POST

WHITE MAN IS SPARED

His Punishment Postponed and Lawyer Will Try to Have Sentence Remitted.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 15.—Notwithstanding the resolution introduced in Congress by Representative Evans of Montana, protesting against the lashing of prisoners in Delaware, the whipping of negro convicts, who had been similarly punished a week ago, was repeated to-day. James Byard and William Reason colored burglars, were the victims, and each received twenty lashes with a cat-o'-nine-tails, handled by Warden Crawford.

Cornelius C. Street a young white man convicted of robbing the homes of members of the Du Pont family, had his sentence of twenty lashes deferred until Nov. 29. Meanwhile his lawyer will endeavor to have the Board of Pardons remit them.

Twenty-five spectators saw the negroes lashed. The backs of the culprits showed no perceptible traces of their punishment a week ago. Reason was brought out first and bared to the waist, with a blanket thrown over his bare shoulders. He was manacled to a post, and to protect his wrists from the steel handcuffs he wore gloves. With the first stroke Reason squared his shoulders and thrust his face against the post. He made no outcry, and beyond the twisting of his fingers there was no movement of his body. The warden scattered the blows, with the result that the victim was only faintly marked.

Byard dreaded the ordeal more than his companion. His face wore a look of terror when he was fastened to the post. He made no outcry, but his eyes snapped and he flinched with each blow. He was not marked. Byard will serve fourteen years and Reason eleven.

Close to where the men were lashed is the stockade of the Newcastle County Workhouse, which the Legislature in 1907 ordered to be abolished. As the Delaware Judges favor the whipping post, however, this instrument of punishment will, doubtless, remain for some years to come.

Warden Crawford says he has never drawn a drop of blood from prisoners he has whipped, and does not consider the punishment cruel.

KILLED BY SUBWAY TRAIN.

Frank J. Tanner, who was identified by the police from cards in his pocket as a contractor of Groton, N. Y., was killed instantly by a northbound Subway express at the Seventy-second Street station last evening. No one witnessed the accident, so far as the police could ascertain, and the body was not noticed until some minutes after the man had died. His head was cut and bruised deeply, and it was supposed he was struck by the train while leaning over the edge of the platform that narrows a few feet at the extreme north end of the station.

On the body was a telegram addressed to Tanner at the Grand Union Hotel, where he registered on Oct. 29.

He also had a key bearing the name of the hotel, a railway ticket from Boston to Northampton, and a card of J. A. Whitcomb. The latter, who is President of the Baltimore Dairy Lunch Company, at 32 East Twenty-third Street, said the description of Tanner was that of a contractor who called on him three years ago on a business matter. The body is held at the morgue until his relatives at Groton can be reached.

ONLY TWO KILLED FOR DEER

Buck Law Reduces Hunters' Mistakes, Says Conservation Board.

ALBANY, Nov. 15.—That only two men were killed by hunters who mistook them for deer in the season which ended Saturday night goes far to vindicate the Buck law, in the opinion of the Conservation Commission. Reports from the 125 game protectors show that so far this Fall there have been nineteen fatal hunting accidents in the entire State. Only five of these occurred in connection with deer hunting.

When it is borne in mind that the annual kill of deer in New York State is between nine and ten thousand, and that thrice that number of hunters go into the woods the record of only two men killed by being mistaken for deer is considered remarkable. When the Buck law, which requires a hunter to take no deer except one having horns three inches long, was not on the statute books and a hunter was under the constant temptation to shoot at anything moving in the bushes which simulated the form or actions of buck or doe, fatalities to guides and hunters were numerous.

The Conservation Commission directed the game protectors to make detailed reports of all hunting accidents, from which it is found that the vast majority of accidents this season have occurred to small game hunters, and that a large majority of the casualties were due to the recklessness and carelessness of the victims themselves.

THOSE WALLS OF JERICHO.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Prof. Handcock, lecturing to-day at the British Museum on the recent excavations at Jericho, showed photographs which throw doubt on the accuracy of the Biblical description in the Sixth Chapter of Joshua of how the walls fell flat.

James C. Beard, Naturalist, Dead.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 15.—James Carter Beard, naturalist, author, and illustrator, died at his home here to-night. Mr. Beard was born in Cincinnat, June 6, 1837. He was admitted to the bar in 1861, and practiced for a short time. Later he did much work as an illustrator for high class books and periodicals, making a specialty of animals. He was also the author of these works: "Little Workers," 1878; "Curious Homes and Their Tenants," 1897; "Billy Possum," 1906. Mr. Beard married Martha J. Bray of Terre Haute, Ind., on Dec. 25, 1862.

SEEK MISSING GEM BROKERS

The District Attorney has sent out an order for the arrest of Antoinette Bonner and J. B. Kislinger, the diamond brokers, who two weeks ago disappeared with from $150,000 to $250,000 worth of jewels which they obtained from Maiden Lane firms "on memorandum." Miss Bonner is said to have sent money to Paris and Kislinger, who is also known as J. B. Brescher, is thought to be in Bucharest.

Assistant District Attorney Minton, who is investigating the case, received new evidence yesterday that three men heretofore unsuspected were involved in the swindle which cost Francis E. Cocks, a jewelry broker, $78,000, and other brokers large sums. A search yesterday of the pawn shops disclosed jewelry valued at $15,000, which was given to Miss Bonner and Kislinger on memoranda. Some of the articles were pawned by the three men whose names were brought into the case yesterday.

Cocks, whose case was to have come up for hearing yesterday before Magistrate Freschi in the Tombs Court, obtained a continuance of the charges of grand larceny brought against him as a result of his dealings with Miss Bonner and Kislinger. Since his arrest, Cocks, who asserts that he was duped by the two missing brokers, has been aiding the police in the search for the missing jewelry.

WALL FALLS ON FIREMEN.

A falling wall injured several firemen yesterday morning in the course of a fire which destroyed the hay market of the Levy Brothers, at Maujer Street and Morgan Avenue, in Williamsburg. The flames spread rapidly, and by the time the firemen arrived the entire building was ablaze. A third alarm was turned in, followed by a fourth. The flames extended to the Waterbury Table Company's plant, adjoining the market, in Maujer Street, and swept across the street to the Union Coal Company's pockets.

The fire cut through the block to Ten Eyck Street, setting several small frame dwellings ablaze. Many boats were in Newtown Canal, near by, and tugs towed them into Newtown Creek. St. Catherine's Hospital is nt the other end of the block, and the 350 patients there were much alarmed by the fire.

It was while the men of Hook and Ladder 10b were fighting the blaze from the rear that a high wall fell over upon them. Among the firemen who were injured were Capt. John Foley and Firemen Foster, Boyce, Maher, and McDevitt. Foster and Boyce were taken to St. Catherine's Hospital.

TO INVESTIGATE "HALLS."

Princeton Alumni Joins Movement Against Secret Societies.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 15.—The alumni of Princeton plan to take a hand in the movement began ten days ago to abolish secrecy in Literary Societies here, known commonly as the Halls. This was shown by the resolution passed by the Graduate Council, which acts officially for the alumni. A committee was appointed to investigate the matter, sound undergraduate opinion and make a report to the Council at its Spring session.

Gilchrist K. Stockton, President of the American Whig Society, suggested that the "mysteries" be cleared up, and the idea since its first pronouncement has gained in favor among the undergraduates. One of the Halls has succeeded in getting the motion through the first of its three necessary readings in order to make it binding.

At the Graduate Council meeting, the question of a new basis for raising funds for the university was taken up and referred to the Finance Committee with power to act. Better representation on the Council was also discussed and referred to the Committee on Alumni Associations.

A decision which will affect many men who studied at Princeton, but failed to get their degrees, was made whereby hereafter such men will be spoken of as "non-graduates" rather than "ex-members," the customary phrase.

HIS PASSPORT 30 YEARS OLD

Artist, Home from Long Stay in France, Brings Valuable Paintings.

Peter Alfred Gross, an American artist who has lived abroad for thirty years, returned home yesterday on the French Line steamship Provence. In his pocketbook was a passport issued to him by Secretary of State William A. Evarts in President Grant's term of office.

"I saw the Statue of Liberty in Paris," said Mr. Gross, "just before it was shipped to New York, and climbed up into the head. I firmly believed that it would be the most imposing sight in New York, but it is a pigmy compared with those giant buildings that loom so majestically out above the water line."

The artist said that he had brought with him from Paris a painting of Benjamin Franklin by Fragonard which he hopes to have placed in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, and a number of paintings by Rosseau, Corot, and Delacroix.

"I am going to my native town, Allentown, Penn.," said Mr. Gross, "and I shall try to persuade Muhlenberg College to build a museum in which these art treasures may be hung."

ARMY NOT APPRECIATED

The Military, Like Firemen and Others Who Guard the Public, Should Be Honored, He Says.

The United States harbors no desire for aggrandizement, for oppression, or to take away from any man or nation that which rightfully belongs to either of them, Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison asserted at a dinner given in his honor at the Lotos Club last night. But he added that no sane man could conceive of a condition at present in which the United States could do without the services of an army to preserve peace and enforce its just decrees.

The dinner to Secretary Garrison was the second Lotos Club feast of the season given as a tribute to a public man. At the first the Prince of Monaco was the guest of honor. The menus last night were as elaborate as those at the Lotos Club dinner given to Admiral Evans just before he started on his last voyage as Commander in Chief of the Atlantic Fleet, on its trip around the world.

The menus last night were a foot and a half square, and in the centre was a picture of Mars with his war shield and in the center of the shield was a portrait of the Secretary of War. Five small engravings decorated the right edge of the card, the first showing the completed Gatun Locks of the Panama Canal, the second a war dance of the Igorrotes in the Philippines, the third a glimpse of a Porto Rican sugar plantation, the fourth a Hawaiian market and the fifth and last a Moro village. To the left dimly outlined in a cloud effect was a statue of Liberty and still dimmer and behind it a picture of a drum and fife corps in the uniform of the Continental Army.

Those at Guests' Table.

As usual the toastmaster was President Frank R. Lawrence of the club, and the others at the guests' table included Major Gen. Thomas H. Barry, U. S. A., commanding the Eastern Division of the Army; Associate Justice Mahlon Pitney of the United States Supreme Court; Chief Justice William S. Gummere of the New Jersey Supreme Court, Col. George Harvey, Charles W. Price, ex-Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Associate Justice Francis J. Swayze of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, and Judge C. G. Garrison of the same State.

President Wilson sent a letter regretting his inability to be present. Referred to Secretary Garrison as: "my chief, whose views on military policy have the cordial support and approval of the General Staff and all thoughtful officers in the service." Gov. Glynn sent an appreciative letter also.

In introducing Secretary Garrison, who was the first speaker, Mr. Lawrence referred to him as a man, wise, conservative, well balanced, and capable, and possessed of the highest order of administrative ability. He called attention to the great responsibilities that rest on Secretary Garrison's shoulders, among them the possibility of disturbances upon the North American Continent, and yet, he added, no man is more sincerely desirous of peace than the present head of the War Department.

"To the extent," said Secretary Garrison, "that this gathering is a compliment to the high office that I have the honor to hold, I am even more pleased, if possible, than I am on account of its personal character. My great reason for delight at the compliment paid to my office is because, while it is nominally to the official, it is immediately to the army of the United States; and I am extremely anxious that the people of the United States should know about the army, and should have that pride in it which the army merits, and which it is very desirable for the people themselves that they should feel. I say that, for more than it is proper for me to take up in my limited time, the people of the United States, as a whole, have not the proper attitude toward the army and do not feel toward it as they should.

A Plea for the Soldiers.

"For one thing, I think the people fail to discriminate between their absolute hatred of bloodshed and war and the function of the army in respect thereto. All just-minded men must love peace and abhor war—just as they must abhor disease, and devouring flames, and overmastering storms, and devastating earthquakes, and crimes against the peace and security of persons and property. And yet, those of this community that are set apart to prevent, if possible, the occurrence of calamities in these respects are not and should not be looked upon otherwise than as public benefactors and the objects of public praise and support. For the fireman who fights fire, the physician who fights disease, the engineer who endeavors to prevent the flood or to stay its course when it has started—for the peace officers who fight crimes, and for the clergyman who fights the devil and all his works—we, none of us, have any words other than those of praise and encouragement.

"And yet for the soldier whose very presence is a protection against others attempting to use force, and whose efforts in our behalf when force is used against us are essential to our defense, the people either have a negligent attitude or very often one of disapproval. I must confess I cannot on any reasonable ground account for this. If it were true that the men composing the army and the officers in command of it were swaggering bullies, seeking only to engage in a war for war's sake, or if they were undesirable citizens, whose conduct brought disgrace upon the uniform and upon the country which employed them, there would be reason for this public attitude toward it. But exactly the contrary is the case. The army of the United States, both officers and men, was never of higher tone than today, nor as high, in my opinion. They are sober, industrious, hard-working, high-minded, and courageous. The officers are highly educated in the many branches which it is necessary for them to know in order to be efficient, and the men are kept diligently at work along the many lines which it is necessary for them to know in order to be efficient.

"No sane man to-day can possibly think a nation situated as the United States is with respect to the world could do without an army. All stable government rests upon the possibility of using force to secure obedience to its decrees. Judicial tribunals are successful in operation—not because the unsuccessful suitor is satisfied with the decision, is pleased with the reasoning of the court adverse to his contention, or is overcome by the magnetism of the judge in rendering his judgment; they succeed because of the knowledge of the defeated suitor that the whole force of the State is back of every judgment, and that to resist would be worse than useless. And so it is with nations until another day has dawned and many of the attributes of men which now guide their conduct have been changed for other and different ones. It is absolutely essential for any nation to-day to maintain sufficient force to secure the carrying out of its decrees. We all believe that the tendency of the American Government is toward righteousness; that we may have no desire for aggrandizement, for oppression, or for the taking away from any one or any nation that which rightfully belongs to them. But we also know that it takes two to keep the peace, and that we cannot safeguard the interests of our people without that force constantly ready to maintain and secure it!"

Problems of the War Department.

Secretary Garrison then referred briefly to the great problems that had been solved and are being solved by the War Department, among them the governing of our island possessions, the building of the Panama Canal, and the conquering of yellow fever, typhoid fever, and the wonderful record of the Medical Corps in the field of sanitation.

"In view of all this," Secretary Garrison said in conclusion, "I am sure that I will not be accused of a lack of modesty in repeating what I began by saying, namely, that I am whole-heartedly proud of the army of the United States and of what it has done and of what it is capable of doing, and I am sure that I am not asking anything that you should not be enthusiastic to grant, in the suggestion that you likewise should be equally proud. Strong as the army is, willing as it is, efficient as it is, you citizens have the power to add manyfold to its usefulness if you will but give it its due meed of appreciation and of praise. I feel that you will do so."

Justice Pitney, the next speaker, complimented Secretary Garrison as one of the greatest lawyers New Jersey has produced and said that in Washington his great abilities were appreciated to their fullest. He eulogized the officers of the army and the navy as "the flower of the land," men who are doing a great work, he said, in the upbuilding of the nation. Perhaps the principal reason, he added, that the War Department was doing such splendid work was because more than any other department it was remote from what is ordinarily termed "politics."

Ex-Secretary Stimson, who was Mr. Garrison's immediate predecessor as head of the War Department, said that one of the pleasantest memories of his own Secretaryship was the fact that he had been able to transfer his duties to a man so well informed, so just, so considerate, and so able as Mr. Garrison. Justice Swayze and Col. Harvey were the last speakers.

Among others at the dinner were Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, U. S. N., retired; R. A. C. Smith, Commissioner of Docks; James Speyer, Isaac N. Seligman, John D. Crimmins, C. V. Dumont, B. A. Hageman, and Police Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo.

HUNTS BURGLAR TO HIS DEN

When shrill cries of "Burglar!" aroused the neighborhood of Forty-eighth Street and Ninth Avenue at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, Patrolman Hirsch of the West Forty-seventh Street Station raced up the stairs of the house at 327 West Forty-eighth Street and reached the roof just in time to see a man gain the next roof and lift the skylight. A shot from the policeman's revolver whizzed harmlessly into space as the fugitive dropped out of sight.

Hirsch dropped after him. He reached the rear of the ground floor just in time to see his man drop the ten feet to the rear courtyard. At this point the fugitive abandoned his impediment in the shape of a valise stuffed with silverware. Hirsch did not stop to pick it up at that time, however. He kept on the chase, which led over several fences and was punctuated by shots from his revolver. By this time, pursuer and pursued were close to Forty-ninth Street, and Hirsch only doubled his speed when he heard his man chuckle as he disappeared into the tenement at 314.

The chuckle came again when Hirsch smashed his way into a vacant flat on the second floor, only to see the top of the burglar's head as the rest of him slid down the fire escape.

Then the chase moved to the open and did not stop until the two men landed one on either side of the door shutting off a room on the top floor of 232 West Forty-ninth Street. Hirsch broke in the door and made his capture just as the burglar was drawing a revolver.

Burglary and weapon carrying were the charges made when the man gave his name in the police station as Edward Kelly. He had been cornered in his own room. The police say he has done time in Joliet and that he has some reputation as a burglar.

CHARITY BALL AT WALDORF.

For the benefit of the philanthropies of the New York section of the Council of Jewish Women, a ball and entertainment was held last night in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. Dances were given by professional dancers, and there was a contest for amateurs for which handsome prizes were awarded.

Miss Sadie American is the President of the organization. Among the other officers are Mrs. A. N. Cohen, Mrs. J. B. Greenhut, Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, Mrs. Adolph Lewisohn, Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff, Mrs. Nathan Glauber, Mrs. Simon Dottenheim, Mrs. Louis S. Levy, Mrs. Joshua Piza, Mrs. Daniel Richman, Mrs. Ira Leo Bamberger, Mrs. Leslie Graff, and Miss Sara X. Schottenfels.

The boxholders included Mrs. Louis A. Ansbacher, Mrs. Ira L. Bamberger, Mrs. Simon Baruch, Mrs. Myron L. Borg, Mrs. J. G. Dreyfus, Mrs. Abraham I. Elkus, Mrs. B. J. Greenhut, Mrs. Edmond Guggenheim, Mrs. Edwin M. Hydeman, Mrs. Louis S. Levy, Mrs. Adolph Lewisohn, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Mrs. Charles J. Oppenheim, Mrs. Harry J. Sachs, Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff, Mrs. Leonard B. Schoenfeld, Mrs. Fred M. Stein, and Mrs. Jacob Wertheim.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Ligon Johnson, who organized the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers in 1908 and had been its general counsel ever since, sent his resignation to the association yesterday, giving as his reason the press of personal business.

Maude Adams will spend a few hours in New York to-day on her way to Boston, where she is to give twelve performances of "Peter Pan." At the end of the Boston engagement Miss Adams will leave the stage for a month and rest preparatory to her season in New York at the Empire Theatre.

Rehearsals are to begin to-morrow morning at the Harris Theatre for the second company of "Adele," which is to play the Middle and Far West. The organization will open Christmas week in Omaha.

CITY COLLEGE MEN HONOR DR. FINLEY

WILSON WISHES SUCCESS

More than six hundred members of the Alumni Association of the College of the City of New York attended a dinner last night at the Hotel Astor given to Dr. John H. Finley upon the occasion of his retirement from the Presidency of the institution to become State Commissioner of Education.

The speakers paid many tributes to Dr. Finley for his services to the City College. A letter expressing sentiments of esteem and friendship signed by all present was handed to Dr. Finley after the dinner.

In responding to the many compliments, Dr. Finley, who was received with cheers, said that he would not have been attracted by any other offer except the one he had received. He accepted the new office, he said, because he felt that in that way he could do more for the City College than he had ever done before, and for the educational system of the whole community as well. He felt confident, he said, that his place at the City College would be filled easily.

Among those who praised the work of Dr. Finley were District Attorney Whitman, who spoke for the city; Frederick P. Bellamy, Chairman of the City College Board of Trustees; Prof. Adolph Werner, Acting President of the college, and Bernard Herschkopf, representing the alumni. Lewis Sayre Burchard of the class of '77 acted as toastmaster.

Letters and telegrams wishing President Finley success in his new office were read from President Wilson, Gov. Glynn, Mayor Kline, Mayor-elect Mitchel, Borough President McAneny, Controller Prendergast, and Ambassador Jusserand of France.

William F. McCombs and his bride entered the room during the dinner and received an ovation. Mr. McCombs made a speech and a toast was drunk to Mrs. McCombs.

Mr. McCombs said that Dr. Finley was taking charge of the greatest piece of educational machinery in the world, and that he would duplicate the great success he had made at the City College in his new office.

Among those present were Arnold W. Brunner, Dr. Alexis Carrel, President Churchill of the Board of Education, Daniel F. Frohman, Charles E. Lydecker, St. Clair McKelway, Borough Presidents-elect Marcus M. Marks, Dr. William H. Maxwell, Herbert L. Satterlee, and E. C. Zabriskie.

PADEREWSKI PLAYS AGAIN.

Paderewski gave his first recital of this season in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, his only previous appearance having been made at Aeolian Hall. There was a large audience, all the seats in the house being occupied, with many persons standing. It was the typical Paderewski matinée, from the packed house to the applause at the start to the crowding down the aisles at the end to indicate that the musical feast of the regular menu had not satisfied the audience's appetite. The pianist responded with five encores, and it was not until stage hands came out and shut up the piano that the audience consented to leave the hall.

The pianist was in a good mood yesterday afternoon, and when that is said, nothing need be added about his playing. He played his own Variations and Fugue, Op. 23, and followed this with the Beethoven Sonata in C sharp minor, commonly called the "Moonlight Sonata." Then followed four of the Schumann Phantasiestücke, the Schubert Liszt Soiree de Vienne No. 6 and Erikonig, and of Chopin, the Ballade, Op. 47, the Nocturne in B major and the Polonaise, Op. 53. If any distinction is to be made, it may be said that in these three groups he achieved the happiest results of the recital. He did not allow any interruption of applause between the Schumann numbers, which were not played in the order of the programme, and this way of presenting them added a cumulative effectiveness. Following them came Isolde's Liebestod in the familiar transcription of Liszt and the regular programme ended with Rubinstein's Mazurka in D major.

Lou Tellegen Arrives with Play.

Lou Tellegen, the young Dutch actor, who was two seasons in this country with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, arrived yesterday on the Amerika with the scenery of his play, "The Picture of Dorian Gray," which he produced in the Vaudeville Theatre in London last September. He said that he had also brought with him the original sketch of "Il Pagliacci," which had been written by his uncle, Catulle Mendez, and might put it on in vaudeville. He was met at the pier by Martin Beck's manager. Since he left New York last June Mr. Tellegen has learned to speak English fluently.

Conductor Toscanini Returns.

Arturo Toscanini, the conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, arrived yesterday on the French line steamer Provence in time to attend a rehearsal of "La Gioconda" in the afternoon, which opens the season tomorrow night. Mr. Toscanini conducted at the recent Verdi celebration at Busseto, the birthplace of the composer. He set the stage for the operas with his own furniture taken from his house in Milan. Mr. Gatti-Casazza, the director of the Metropolitan, was at the pier to meet him.

American Premiere of 'Don Quixote.'

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 15.—The first performance in America of Massenet's "Don Quixote" was given at the Metropolitan Opera House to-day by the Philadelphia-Chicago Company. Jules Massenet died in August, 1912, and this opera was originally produced on Feb. 24, 1910, at Monte Carlo. Mary Garden sang the rôle of Dulcinea, Vanni Marcoux was the Don Quixote, and Hector Dufranne, his faithful squire, Sancho Panza.

VEXED WORK OF HAMMERSTEIN.

Foreign Song Birds Mingle Discordant Notes Over Opera Postponement.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Twenty operatic artists, angry and perplexed, are dumped in France as a result of Oscar Hammerstein's postponement of the opening of the Franco-Italian opera season in New York.

The artists were preparing for the opening of the American impresario's new house on Dec. 6. Hammerstein has now cabled his Paris agent that owing to delays in construction of the building the season has been postponed until next November.

Many artists abandoned engagements at home, or gave up pupils in order to study their French or Italian parts, and bought new stage costumes. One actress spent $4,000 for her dresses. Their first retainer due on Nov. 10 has not yet been paid. The artists will hold an indignation meeting next week, at which a representative will be appointed to go to New York and force Hammerstein to observe his contract.

It appears that the contract stipulates that the artist is engaged to sing in the new house or "any other theatre or concert hall in New York." Therefore, the singers argue, as there are other houses at Hammerstein's disposition the contract is still binding and unpostponable.

It is suggested in operatic circles here that Hammerstein's action is due to the fear of an unfavorable decision in the Metropolitan Opera litigation.

Among the dumped artists are Henry Weldon Hughes, son of former Rear Admiral Hughes of the United States Navy; Vezzani, the tenor; Louis Masson, conductor, and Mmes. Doria, Marthe Chenal, and Victoria Fer.

Arthur Hammerstein said last night that he did not take much stock in the report that the foreign artists engaged by his father were indignant over the postponement of the season, as they knew when the contracts were made last Summer that the new opera house was only then beginning to be built. He, himself, made the contracts and he said they called for the services of the singers beginning "on or about Nov. 17." He said that the contracts called for their exclusive services in the United States and Canada in the new opera house or any other theatre or concert hall, and that they were elastic and so arranged that if from any uncontrolable force the new house was not ready they would hold over till next season.

He denied there was any other house at the disposal of his father, and if there is, with the exception of the vaudeville house, musical circles here do not know anything about it. An attempt was made by the Hammersteins to use the Manhattan Opera House, when it was evident the new house would not be ready, but there is a lien held on it by the Metropolitan Opera Company which prevented. The Chicago Opera Company also wished to use the house, but could not.

Arthur Hammerstein ridiculed the idea that the foreign artists were "stranded," as he said they were people of enough standing to command engagements any time. When the list was read to him he said he was sure Henry Weldon Hughes and Mme. Doria had no grievance, as they were engaged for the season in English opera beginning in January and would be over here to sing.

WARNER MAKES HIS BOW.

It is not often that a new performer makes his bow to the public under such favorable auspices as those that attended the first appearance of Maurice Warner, a young American violinist, at Aeolian Hall last night. In the first place he had the assistance of the New York Symphony Orchestra with Walter Damrosch conducting, and in the second the audience was of a number and a class that is seldom induced to attend the début of a new player. It would be pleasant to fall in with the glamor of the occasion and believe that the new violinist showed by his playing that nothing too much had been done for him. But it would be stretching the truth to think that Mr. Warner was of such stature as a player that he could not adequately express himself in terms lower that a concerto accompanied by a symphony orchestra.

He showed a certain degree of facility and skill, but was hardly equal to the task of playing the Tschaikowsky violin concerto in an authoritative manner. There were even spots, notably in the exacting passage-work perilously near the bridge of the violin in the first movement, where his technical accomplishment was insufficient last night. In the second movement he failed to find all the breadth of melody that the canzonetta afforded, and seemed to choose for emphasis the least significant portions of the music. Throughout, scant phrasing and some accented upbeats seemed to hint at a not altogether secure sense of rhythm.

Perhaps if Mr. Warner had not chosen so ambitious a beginning his work would have fared better, for there was an unavoidable inclination to compare him to matured artists who have won the right to stand where he stood last night. There were agreeable qualities, both technical and artistic, in his playing. He had a good command of double-stopping, with which he made the voices seem quite independent in his Chopin Nocturne with piano; he was good in harmonics, and he had a good down-bow staccato.

Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra played Goldmark's "Sakuntala" Overture, Electra's Lament from "Les Erynnies" of Massenet, and two numbers from the Algerian Suite of Saint-Saëns in a manner to give a good deal of enjoyment to the evening.

Miss Sawyer's New Dance.

Miss Joan Sawyer had a rousing welcome in the Jardin de Danse last evening on her return from a two weeks' rest. Miss Sawyer danced for the first time an arrangement of the Barcarolle from Les Contes d'Hoffman, made by her partner in the dance, Carlos Sebastian.

CRUCES IN PANAMA GOES OFF THE MAP

Historic Town, Said to Have Been Gate of Transit for Spanish Gold, Abandoned.

PIZARRO HAD BEEN THERE

The Panama Canal Commission has issued an order for the depopulation of Cruces, one of the historic towns of the Isthmus of Panama and the abandonment of the little town, which in the olden days was known as Venta Cruz, has already begun. Cruces is situated on the south bank of the Chagres River, a little above the site where will be located the official administration city of Gamboa. Most of the buildings in Cruces are of the native type with bamboo walls and thatched roofs, the number of houses in the village numbering sixty exclusive of the church and the school house.

"Cruces," the bulletin of the Canal Commission says, "is one of the oldest settlements on the Isthmus and in early times was known as Venta Cruz. The origin of the town has been described as follows:

"The first transit route across the Isthmus, for the transportation of gold, silver, and merchandise from the various Spanish colonies on the Pacific to Spain, ran from the City of Panama to Nombre de Dios, on the shores of the Caribbean. It was cut through the forest and jungle, over mountain tops and across mountain streams, and was roughly paved with stones. It ran from Panama in a northeasterly direction for about twenty miles to a point on the Chagres River, which was given the name of Venta Cruz, afterward changed to Cruces. Thence it extended northward to Nombre de Dios. A line of posts was established along the route. It was put in use in 1519, and was the sole route between the two oceans until about 1535, when the Chagres between Venta Cruz and the Atlantic, a distance of about thirty-six miles, was made navigable for boats of light draft, and a water route was established between Venta Cruz and Nombre de Dios. The land route between these points was not abandoned, however, but continued to be used in connection with the water route. So well was the paving laid that parts of it remain in position to-day, and the entire trail from Panama City to Cruces is open, and is used by the natives as a highway for pack mules and ponies."

The paving of the road referred to is said to have been the work of Francisco Pizarro, the conqueror of Peru. A toll gate is said to have been set up in the village in the latter half of the eighteenth century, and all traffic between the two oceans passed through and paid tribute to Cruces.

"According to the report made by Bancroft," the latest issue of The Panama Canal Record to reach New York states "on the fiscal regulations and commercial decline of the Spanish colonies, goods to the amount of 1,468,946 pesos of gold coin were registered as passing through the Casa at Cruces, while more than seven and one-half millions were smuggled across.

"In their march from Fort San Lorenzo, at the mouth if the Chargres River, to attack Old Panama, Henry Morgan and his men ascended the river to Cruces. Esquemeling speaks of it as follows:

"* * * Thus they proceeded on their journey till noon, at which time they arrived at a village called Croz. * * * This village is seated in the latitude of nine degrees and two minutes north, being distant from the Fort of Chagre twenty-six Spanish leagues, and eight from Panama. Moreover, it is the last place to which boats or canoes can come, for which reason they build here storehouses, wherein to keep all kinds of merchandise, which hence to and from Panama are transported upon the backs of mules.

"Messrs. Sosa and Arce, local historians, note that the Chagres River was first explored from its mouth to the interior, probably to about where Cruces now is, by Capt. Hernando de la Serna, and the pilot Pablo Corzo, between April 8 and 10, 1527.

"Following the construction of the Panama Railroad Cruces entered upon a period of decadence which has existed until this day.

"Prior to 1911 the village had a historic curiosity in the shape of two wrought iron anchors. According to tradition, these anchors were brought up the Chagres River in boats for transport overland to Panama, but the plan was abandoned at Cruces. One of these anchors stood in the village about 300 yards from the river, and the other alongside the trail about 400 yards from the river. Each anchor has a 14-foot shank. The idea was conceived by Lieut. Walter D. Smith, formerly Constructing Quartermaster of the Canal Commission, to send these anchors to West Point. The anchors were placed on a raft, which subsequently broke lpose from its moorings, and after floating down the river a short distance, collided with a log, sinking in two, and allowing the anchors to go to the bottom of the stream. They were recovered later, but before they could be placed on board a vessel, a cable message was received by the chairman from the Secretary of War disapproving of the plan. The anchors are now in the yards of the general storehouse at Mount Hope.

"Cruces also possesses another relic in three ancient church bells. These bells are of varying size, and from one of them a piece has been broken. The dates are indistinguishable, but they are known to be very old. After the transfer of the anchors, the inhabitants, becoming apprehensive that the bells also would be taken, had them removed and hidden. Later, when these fears were dispelled, they were returned to their old place."

POPE BLESSES OUR TARS.

Receives Officers and 150 Men—Three Sailors Hurt in France.

ROME, Nov. 15.—Great solemnity attended the reception by the Pope at the Vatican to-day of the officers and bluejackets of the United States warships now visiting European ports. The officers were in civilian clothes, as their visit to the Pope was in their private and not in their official capacity. The sailors, however, were in uniform.

The party was conducted by Mgr. Thomas F. Kennedy, rector of the American College in Rome; Chaplain William H. Reaney of the battleship Utah, and Chaplain Curtis H. Dickens of the battleship Florida.

Rear Admirals Charles J. Badger, Cameron McR. Winslow, and Frank E. Beatty, and Capt. William J. Maxwell were presented to his Holiness by Mgr. Kennedy. As they entered the Pope's private library Swiss and Noble Guards rendered military honors. In the halls leading to the library were the other officers, and about 150 bluejackets stood in a double line around the Consistorial Hall.

The Pope was most cordial and cheerful, and expressed his great satisfaction at being able to greet the American sailors. He requested the officers to be seated next to his chair, and after a lengthy conversation proceeded in company with the three Rear Admirals and the Captain to the adjoining hall, where he spoke a few words to each officer. He then gave the Apostolic Benediction to all.

After the papal audience the Rear Admirals and other officers were received by Cardinal Merry del Val, Papal Secretary of State.

NAPLES, Nov. 15.—Three hundred American bluejackets ascended Mt. Vesuvius in the course of last night in spite of the uncertain weather. They carried torches with them to light the way. Several midshipmen in the party descended into a spent crater with Prof. Malladra of the Vesuvius Observatory.

NICE, Nov. 15.—In a collision late last night betwen a motor car containing ten American bluejackets and a street car, three of the sailors from the Delaware were slightly injured.

CHARLTON TRIAL IN MARCH.

COMO, Italy, Nov. 15.—The Italian judicial authorities having received from the United States documents proving the legality of the marriage of Porter Charlton with Mary Crittenden Scott of San Francisco, the prisoner will be charged at the trial with the crime of uxoricide and the concealment of the body of his victim in Lake Como, in 1910.

The trial is to take place at the end of March, and under the Italian code the crime renders the guilty person liable to a sentence of from twenty-two to twenty-five years' imprisonment. Charlton has been confined in Crimen

BRYANIZING THE MONEY BILL.

The outcry against redeeming the proposed new banknotes in other paper, or "lawful money," was too loud and strong to be resisted, and the proposal was dropped. There remained a greater mistake to be made, and it promptly was made. The new notes are not to be redeemed in lawful money, they are to be lawful money, "legal tender," themselves. They are to be redeemed in gold by both the banks and the Treasury, and they are not to be used as reserves by the banks of the system, but may be so used by the member banks.

This is not to be allowed on any terms, or for any reason. It is as necessary that the bill should pass the country as that it should pass Congress, and the common sense of the country will not stand an unlimited issue of paper money with legal-tender qualities. That opens a fathomless abyss of inflation, of which we already have a taste. National banknotes are not lawful reserves for national banks under the present law, but they are used as reserves by other banks to an objectionable extent. The law of this State allows national banknotes to be used as reserves by State banks, and ex-Representative FOWLER has said that State banking institutions have been organized for the purpose of doing business on national banknotes as reserves. It has been reported by the Treasury that national banknotes comprise one-fifth of the reserves of other than national banks throughout the country. This is not a precedent to be followed. It is a horrible example which ought to be impossible of mention in connection with banking reform.

This country is on a gold standard or it is not. If gold is our standard, then all final payments should be in gold at the option of the payee. Particularly, reserve obligations of banks should be discharged in gold. This is recognized in the proposal regarding the new banks, but the contingency is overlooked that there are now two banks outside the national system to one within, and the present prospect is rather for the increase than the reduction of the ratio. We have no need for another form of money, the substitute for the national banknotes excepted. Another form of lawful money, "legal tender," is an imposition not to be endured. There is to be no limit upon the amount, save that of ability to accumulate reserves, and there is no calculation of the extent to which these legal tenders would water the reserves of other banks. It would reverse the restrictions which bankers have recently imposed upon such use of the national banknotes, and it would cause the export of gold whenever we have too much currency.

In that case there would be a threat of national embarrassment. The Treasury is obligated to redeem these notes in gold, but the Treasury is to have no control over their issue. The Government is to be represented in the management, but that is different from the Treasury's having control of the obligations imposed upon it. There is every reason against mixing the affairs of the banks and the Treasury. It is said that the notes are to be so strongly secured that the committee declines to take into consideration the possibility of default in redemption. All the greater reason why the banknotes should be the obligations of the banks, and not obligations of the Government. There can be no other reason for making them obligations of the Government to an unlimited extent than the desire to make money plentiful and cheap. That is the Bryan gospel of money. But just in proportion as money is made abundant it becomes more difficult to procure enough of it to make the payment of bills easier. Even if the bill be made perfect in other respects there can be no thoroughfare for it on this basis. It would be far too dangerous.

FERDINAND OF BULGARIA.

The report in our cable dispatches yesterday that the Czar of Russia has demanded that King FERDINAND of Bulgaria shall abdicate is probably premature, though it comes from a source of some authority. Such a demand at this time, though addressed in form to the Bulgarian King, would in reality be directed to the Government of Austria-Hungary. Everything that FERDINAND has done that is offensive to the Czar has been backed, if it has not been initiated, by Austria. Throughout the stormy period in the Balkans, and earlier, Austria has regarded Bulgaria as bound to her by common jealousy and animosity toward Servia, and whenever they could they have acted together.

While the alliance of the Balkan kingdoms prospered in war, Austria interposed to baffle the plans of Servia, and Bulgaria made no effective attempt to protect her ally. After the first war, with its amazing triumphs, Austria sustained, if she did not inspire, Bulgaria's effort to snatch the lion's share. The effort failed miserably, and it is possible that Russia may think the time favorable to punish the Bulgarian King and, through him, Austria. But it is improbable that the Czar would go to the length of directly demanding that FERDINAND step down from his tottering throne. Such a demand would, indeed, seem needless. The Bulgarian people are deeply chagrined and angry over the situation in which they find themselves, and as they are a very determined, if somewhat slow-moving, people, the chances are that they will, in their own time and way, take care of the sovereign who has so betrayed their ardent hopes.

HYPOTHECATED OPERA TICKETS.

The plight of the large number of subscribers to the opera who find themselves, on the eve of the opening of the season, without vouchers for the seats that they have occupied many years is amazing. They must now get their tickets out of pawn at a considerable expense, or permit the institution with which they were hypothecated to sell them to others, in which case their own claim on the seats may have to be settled by litigation. If all these supporters of the opera had been willing to do for themselves the not very arduous work they hired an agent to do on commission, and had obtained their tickets directly from the box office of the Opera House, there would have been no trouble. There is trouble now, and lots of it. That is the point. The subscription books of the opera are opened on a specified day every year. Habitual subscribers have the preference, of course, in the allotment of seats. Any habitual subscriber can get his seats at the appointed time. The best of agents can do no more for him than he can do for himself. But many subscribers to the opera would as soon think of shoveling the snow off their sidewalks as buying their own opera tickets. Perhaps the recent unpleasantness will change that.

It is not likely that the Metropolitan Company will be held responsible for damages if some of these hypothecated seats are sold twice. On the other hand, if a subscriber has duly paid for his regular seats and occupies them at a performance it is not likely that the opera company will be held liable for any damages claimed by a person who has bought the hypothecated tickets for the seats. We have no doubt that Mr. GATTI-CASAZZA and his assistants will do all in their power to straighten out the difficulty. But their power in this matter is as limited as their responsibility. Doubtless they will urge the subscribers to get their seats directly from the box office in the future.

COURT HOUSE DELAYS.

After many years of planning and discussion, of disputes about sites, of condemnation proceedings and consideration of building designs, New York County has no clear prospect of getting a suitable shelter for its law courts within the lifetime of the present generation. A site has been selected, and that is all; and as the Merchants' Association is using all its influence to have the projected downtown Post Office erected on the Astor House site it is obvious that the plan of a civic centre surrounding the new Court House is in danger of collapse. The existence of that depended upon the acceptance of neighboring sites for a Federal building and a State building. Of the State building nothing has lately been heard. If a building for the Post Office Department is to be put up on the Astor House site it will contain plenty of room for the Federal Courts.

The latest news about the Court House is that all the twenty-six Judges have condemned the modified plans of Mr. GUY LOWELL, and insist upon a system of lighting and ventilation which will render the accepted design utterly useless. In the circumstances, the Judges are liable to severe criticism for their tardiness. The Lowell design was never hidden from them. But if their present judgment is to prevail the sooner the Lowell plan is laid aside the better. Mr. LOWELL must receive his forfeit money, ($50,000,) and a new competition must be arranged for. For the sake of the suffering advocates and litigants, let the work be done as quickly as possible. As it is, the old Tweed Court House must be used many years more.

Let the Judges have their say in the selection of the plans, and then they cannot further delay the work on the ground that the plans do not suit their ideas of architecture. In Kings County the Judges are delaying the work of building a new Court House because they do not like the most available, attractive, and suitable site in the Borough of Brooklyn. Perhaps the law may be amended in the future so as to remove from the Judges jurisdiction over matters of architecture and ventilation. But meanwhile this Court House matter is urgent. If the Judges will not accept the design which has been commended all over the world for its beauty, and has received the approval of competent architects, engineers, and lighting and ventilating experts, another design must be selected and the work pushed forward, subject, of course, to many other delays.

DIRECT PRIMARIES.

There is a curious notion abroad that all the evils of bossism—which is another name for politics as a business—can be done away with by what are known as direct primaries. The essence of the new plan is that the voters shall select candidates for all offices by a spontaneous act and not through one or more grades of representative delegates.

It has happened in the past, when the latter system was in use, that men whose business is politics, who make more or less money by stubborn and minute attention to this calling, have got themselves made delegates, or, by the use of stratagems and spoils, have influenced delegates, controlled nominations, carried elections, and fattened accordingly. The New Thought is that these unworthy schemers would be helpless in the presence of the great mass of voters of any one party armed with the power to say directly who shall be named for all the offices. And the business politicians have lent a certain plausibility to this pleasing doctrine by opposing it. As they are assumed to know their interests, the apostles of direct primaries take this opposition as evidence that this opposition would, in practice, bring the business politicians to grief.

We think it a very dangerous assumption. The politicians fight any new plan because they are used to the old one and would prefer to go on with it. But if the new one were adopted, we may be sure that they would not go out of business. On the contrary, they would devote all their energy, shrewdness, and all their resources to make the new plan serve their ends. And they would not have a very hard job. It would take a good deal of money, much hard work, and a thorough organization. All these the politicians could provide not merely for one year or one election, but all the time. If they are to be downed and kept down the same means would have to be used by their opponents, who would not and could not make a business of their opposition. The odds would all be on the side of the professionals.

The source of the evils of bossism is not in the machinery of politics. It is chiefly in the frequency of elections and the enormous number and absurd variety of places to be filled by election. For each of these offices there are from two to a half dozen candidates, and for each nomination as candidate there are from half a dozen to a score of aspirants. By such an overwhelming mass of choices to be made the average voter is reduced to a state of stupefied bewilderment, and in this condition he is to the business politician as clay in the hands of the potter. The only way to restore him to a state of reasonable independence and self-possession is to give him, at the longest practicable intervals, the right of choosing the smallest practicable number of responsible officers. Armed with this right, he would defy the business politicians, use his own judgment, and serve his own interests. It is this change and no other that the professionals have any reason to fear. And the reform would work as surely in nominations as in elections. Men would have an adequate motive for needed activity and the means of accomplishing a desired end. Anything short of this, we may be sure, the politicians would "beat."

LOW-TARIFF TURKEYS.

That the price of turkeys will undoubtedly be reduced because of the recent tariff revision will be a cause of special thanksgiving this year. The holiday birds come no more from the New England States. Mr. P. Q. FOY, editor of The Daily Market Report, places Texas, Kentucky, and Ohio among the chief producing States, but he notes that part of the seasonal supply has for two or three years past come from Russia by way of Liverpool, and from Canada. The import duty on turkeys, which has hitherto been 6 cents a pound, will be 2½ cents hereafter, with great resultant competition from foreign countries.

There will be no cold-storage turkeys this year, either. Mr. FOY assures us that for the third time in twenty years the supply kept in the freezers from past years is quite exhausted. Greater New York requires 1,080,000 of the strutting creatures for its Thanksgiving tables, but the fresh stock now being offered will suffice.

WASTEFUL FELLERS OF TREES.

Let the mature timber be cut, by all means, in the preserves as well as in private forests, but cut it so that it will be merchantable. That, in effect, is the advice of Prof. R. C. BRYANT of the Yale School of Forestry, and his instructive article on the subject, appearing in American Forestry for November, goes far to justify the liberal endowment of such schools.

The machinery used in American sawmills is superior to that of any other country, as are the devices for cutting and hauling logs from the forests. But the subject of close utilization of timber has not been studied. The log rules of measurement often forbid a two-foot increase in length on large logs that would more than counterbalance the difference in diameter. The loss entailed on a twenty-foot log eleven inches in diameter, but cut at eighteen feet so that it may come within the twelve-inch rule, is fifteen board feet. Yet the feller gets a higher price for the shorter log.

Other defects are enumerated by Prof. BRYANT, such as cutting logs that are crooked and forked, which frequently adds one-half to the cost of handling, and carelessness in marking off lengths on the boll of the felled tree. Measurement of 1,000 logs on the skidways of a Southern operator showed that nearly one-fifth were cut too short, and one-third were cut too long; in the former instance the loss was the greater, since the lumber is made in even multiples of two feet, and nearly that amount is trimmed away at the mill on logs that come a few inches short. Careful inspection and checking of lengths of the measuring sticks would prevent a loss that sometimes amounts to one foot in every hundred cut.

Prof. BRYANT's article presents illustrations of logs shattered by being permitted to fall on stumps, although plenty of clear space usually exists for a fall that keeps the boll intact. Besides, there is waste in high stumps, in the cutting of tops, in disregard of quality, and in leaving timber standing that is not windfirm. Apparently, not the least part of conservation of the forests should be in correcting the judgment of the men who wield the axes, and of their handlers after the trees have become logs.

NOTES AND GLEANINGS.

A grave robber caught in the act by the falling roof of an Egyptian tomb, into which he had crawled some thousands of years ago, was revealed recently by Prof. FLINDERS PETRIE in his work at Ghizeh. The man had crawled through a small hole, had found jewelry, and was about to remove it when his death came. Prof. PETRIE found him lying dead over the body he would have robbed, grasping a pectoral with precious stones. The American Antiquarian reports Prof. PETRIE's expressed intention to have the beautiful piece of jewelry exhibited in England next July, with other "finds" of the British School of Archæology in Egypt.

Poisons excreted by past crops and left behind in the soil to depress the growth of succeeding crops of the same kind have been reported, and believed in, by agricultural experts. Their theory is disproved by work conducted at the great Rothamsted Experimental Station in England, and presented in the Transactions of the Royal Society of London by ALFRED D. HALL, F. R. S., and his assistants, WINIFRED E. BRENCHLEY and LILIAN MARION UNDERWOOD. Their research yielded "no evidence of the existence in soils on which a particular plant had been growing for sixty years and upward of a soluble 'toxin' having a depressing effect upon the growth of that plant."

"What is Insanity?" was the subject of a paper read last month before the Royal Society of Medicine by Dr. CHARLES A. MERCIER. Dr. MERCIER deplores the loose application of the terrible word to cases that do not merit it. Thus giddiness, epileptic symptoms, fear of closed spaces, as well as of extended spaces, have nothing to do with insanity, since insanity and unsoundness of mind are not convertible terms. No one should dare call a man insane until his conduct has been found disordered. That, of course, does not mean "disorderly conduct" in the police court meaning. Disorder of mind and of conduct, coupled, usually, by a third disorder of brain function, would be true insanity. If to these a fourth element be added, such as poisoning, myxoedema, gout, specific fever, Graves's disease, then a new diagnosis is needed to ascertain whether the "insanity" is not really a delirium of the more comprehensive disease.

A conflagration has hitherto been considered any fire extended to many objects, or over a large space—a general burning. That is not sufficient to define it, in the minds of the fire insurance men. The Spectator observes that no definite line has been drawn as to the minimum loss involved in describing a true conflagration. That is necessary in computing a "conflagration hazard," useful to the companies in setting aside a percentage of their income against losses like those incurred in the burning of San Francisco. The Spectator believes that 5 per cent. of the premiums of the stock companies, if saved during the last twenty years, would not have equaled the fire losses by the great fires of the last decade.

In his guide book of the Selkirk Mountains, Director WHEELER of the Alpine Club of Canada states that heat and cold, contraction and expansion cause the large crevasses in glaciers. Challenged by a reviewer, he adds to these causes "the unevenness of the bed over which it moves downward" which occasions the cracks across the rivers of ice.

A Blow at Local Shipping.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I call your attention to the La Follette Steamship bill, passed by the Senate, and now before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries? This bill, if it becomes a law, will destroy local shipping. The Sandy Hook and Iron Steamboat Lines will suffer very severely from its effects. This measure is supposed to provide for the safety of passengers and sailors, but its operation is practically impossible. For instance, the bill calls for a seat in a lifeboat for every passenger, and two able seamen for each boat. Anybody who knows anything of local shipping knows that a steamer like the Asbury Park, plying between Liberty Street and the Atlantic Highlands, would have to carry 120 lifeboats and 240 sailors.

The Iron Steamship Company in thirty-three seasons has carried 62,000,000 passengers without a loss of one life, and if the La Follette bill becomes law the added equipment would have to be such as to put the company out of business. The bill seeks to have been passed without any consideration whatever as to practical details, and it is farcical, useless, and outrageous.

JUDGE JENKINS DISSENTS.

Court of First Instance
Province of Pangasinan
Lingayen, P. I.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Chicago Tribune on June 29 last tells of the connection of a man by the name of Jenkins with the "invisible Government," and reports Col. Mulhall as saying that this man Jenkins was afterward made a Judge in the Philippines.

As I am the only man by the name of Jenkins who has ever been appointed to a Judgeship in the Philippines, the inference naturally is that I am the one who is alleged to have been found in bad company, which tends to discredit me—indeed I have already been twitted for being a member of the Mulhall combine; and an explanation was necessary.

Therefore, I beg to say that I am not the same man; and that I was not made a Judge in these Islands by President Taft with the aid of the N. A. M., as stated by Col. Mulhall. And to forestall any possible inferences prejudicial to me, and to show you that I am not the other fellow, I wish to tell your numerous readers a little of my history, where I came from and what I have been doing for ten years on this, the other side of the world.

I am a native of North Carolina and a Georgian by adoption. I was graduated from Princeton in 1876 at the time when the present progressive Chief Executive was there, and in the law department of Columbia University in 1881; and thereafter located in the Grant Building, Atlanta, Ga., at the time when and place where the present Democratic Chief Executive located for the same purpose; and I remained there for twenty-two years.

In 1904 I was named a Judge for these Islands by that princely Southern gentleman, Luke E. Wright, at the instance of the immortal "Teddy" Roosevelt, who acted upon urgent solicitation of hundreds of the most prominent Democrats of Georgia, North Carolina, and other States, as well as The Chattanooga Times, Atlanta Journal, Constitution, and other Georgia newspapers, and Representatives in Congress from Georgia.

So you see I was in good company all the while before being made a Judge. It is true I studied law in Washington City (very close to the lobby,) and took first prize in Columbia University in 1880 for a criticism of the decision of Chief Justice Marshall in the celebrated Dartmouth College case; but it is hardly likely that a critic of this famous decision would find congenial companionship in the Mulhall crowd. Besides, that crowd was not then in esse, so far as I know.

Finally, I want my friends, college, and classmates, and those responsible for my appointment to know that neither my record on the bench nor previous conduct reflects discredit upon them, myself, Columbia University, or Old Nassau Hall.

I have disposed of about 4,000 civil and criminal cases in ten years. In 100 cases appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, and in 89 of these cases my decisions were affirmed; in 4 cases affirmed in part, and in only 7 cases reversed out of 100 cases appealed. Is not this exceptional and worthy of mention to my credit as well as to the credit of those really responsible for my appointment to the bench of the Philippine Archipelago? If you think so, please publish this letter in full.

This will serve also to illustrate that Col. Mulhall has made one mistake, and that there may be other mistakes in the "write-up" of the "invisible Government."

TRADE UNION VIOLENCE.

How Long Will the Policy of Intimidation Continue?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES of recent date contained some news items of special interest to those who believe that law abiding citizens are entitled to the unhindered right to work and live.

First, we have the humiliating spectacle of a Cabinet officer, W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, addressing as "Fellow Unionists," the American Federation of Labor, an association, many of whose members have been convicted of murder and of outrage against non-union man. It is perfectly evident, from the speech above referred to, that W. B. Wilson is a union partisan, and it is no wonder that employers should not welcome his assistance in the settlement of their labor troubles.

Then, turning the page, we see an account of the arrest in this city of union leaders for inciting to violence and for attempted dynamiting. Then two columns distant, is an account of the threats of strikers to prevent Mrs. Haverty from operating her taxicabs. It is perfectly plain that Mrs. Haverty, unless she yield to these union strikers, is in danger of bankruptcy, and her non-union employes are in danger of their lives.

The question is "Where are these outrages going to end? Is the freedom to work and to live only an actual fact for those who hold union tickets and pay tribute to that most powerful and cruel of trusts—the Labor Trust?

The Term "Scotch-Irish."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to Mr. Wall's letter on the term "Scotch-Irish," may I state that the subjoined extract, which has a bearing on this subject, is to be found in "Dictionary of Races," (Page 80,) a book which is officially entitled "Senate Documents," (Volume 9,) and which was ordered to be printed under the authority of the Sixty-first Congress, (third session):

The term "Scotch-Irish" does not necessarily indicate, as many Americans suppose, a mixed Scotch and Irish descent, although in many individual cases it could be properly so used. It is an appellation given to the American descendants of the Lowland Scotch, Presbyterians in religion, who emigrated in the early part of the seventeenth century to Ulster Province in Northern Ireland, and thousands of whom emigrated to America during the following century. At first they called themselves Scotch.

It appears from the foregoing extract that the term "Scotch-Irish" originated in America. I remember that, long ago, I read in an historical book published about the middle of the last century, that in Connaught Province the appellation "Scots" was still (then) applied to the inhabitants of several counties in Ulster Province.

Favors Thanksgiving Clubs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of "W. J. L." struck me as a happy suggestion regarding Thanksgiving dinner clubs. Being myself of a social temperament, I find meals at a restaurant about as warm and cheery as an ice floe in the Arctic Ocean. I should like to join the "dolorous dollar ones," (undolorous for the occasion,) in a one day club. "Just a word, a cry, a distant voice in the darkness" in the "ocean of life" in New York.

LIQUOR DEALERS PAY.

Taxed More Than the Cost of Jails, Hospitals, and Asylums.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an article on prohibition published in your "Topics" column Friday you say: "Most of us know that the revenue he [the liquor dealer] gives the State does not pay a half or a quarter or a tenth of the costs he imposes upon us in the maintenance of prisons, hospitals and asylums." Perhaps most people believe that the facts are as you state them, because such assertions have been made repeatedly by our prohibitionist friends. Nevertheless, the statement is inaccurate and without foundation in fact. The liquor traffic, far from paying only a quarter or a tenth of the costs of prisons, hospitals and asylums, is paying much more than the cost of those institutions, while a large proportion of the inmates are there from other causes than the liquor traffic.

While it is difficult to get exact figures on this subject, because of the confusion in public bookkeeping, there are enough available to support my contention. The last general compilation of governmental expenditures is the census report of 1902. This shows that the entire annual expenses of State and local Governments for charities, insane, and penal institutions were then a trifle more than $100,000,000. The total receipts from liquor licenses were $55,000,000, and the Federal internal and customs revenue from liquors $200,000,000 additional. That the Federal Government takes so much of the revenue does not alter the fact that the money is paid.

It is not reasonable, either, to charge all of the cost of these institutions upon the consumers of liquor. The State of Kansas, which has been for a number of years under prohibition laws, reports a total expenditure for these purposes of $1,600,000, approximately $1.10 per capita. This is only 30 cents per capita less than the average for the United States, which difference could easily be accounted for by the different character of the population and the absence of large cities. But if this excess in other States were all chargeable to the liquor traffic, the total difference would have amounted in that year to less than one-half the receipts from licenses alone.

It may be objected that there are other charges which should be considered, as, for example, court proceedings and police. The entire expenditures of States and localities for courts, military, and police for the year given were not quite $100,000,000. Adding all this to the expenses already given, makes a total of $200,000,000, or $50,000,000 less than the receipts shown from the consumers of liquors.

Take the case of New York State. While the total expenses of that year for charities, insane, and penal institutions amounted to $20,000,000, the liquor licenses produced nearly $13,000,000, (and this was before the increase in the tax, which now makes them yield $18,000,000;) and on a per capita basis the share of the Federal receipts from the liquor traffic paid by the State of New York was more than the $20,000,000 spent for the above-enumerated institutions.

OIL OF EUCALYPTUS

Has Proved Effective in Checking Scarlet Fever Epidemics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Dr. Alvah H. Doty wrote to you recently a letter which attracted my attention. It was in reference to the use of eucalyptus oil in the treatment of scarlet fever. This treatment is termed the "Milne treatment," Dr. Milne being the originator of this particular mode of treatment.

During this last Summer I visited a town in Scotland named Kirkenuir, where this method of treatment had been carefully carried out, and I have since received an authentic report from the sanitary inspector's office relative to this subject, which will be of interest to your readers.

In 1910 there were in Kirkemuir sixty-two cases of scarlet fever. At the beginning of the outbreak cases were sent to the hospital. After eighteen cases had thus been transferred to the hospital for the regular routine hospital care and treatment, it was decided to follow the Milne treatment, and the subsequent forty-four cases were so treated in their homes. These cases were, as far as possible, isolated. In some this was quite impossible and these were allowed to mingle with the other members of the family. The result was that in the forty-four cases treated at home there was not one instance in which the disease was contracted by other members of the family within the first fortnight after contact, and in only one case after this length of time. Whereas, from the eighteen cases returning from the hospital eight others contracted the disease, even though some of these cases had been treated in the hospital for twelve weeks.

In the neighboring berg, five miles distant from Kirkemuir, named Forfar, the epidemic has continued for the last two years without abatement, and it is now only after they have adopted the Milne treatment that they have had any appreciable diminution in the number of cases developing. In Kirkemuir, on the other hand, the spread of the infection was stopped within three months.

The application of oil, which is now used in Kirkemuir to anoint the body with, is a 10 per cent. solution of carbolic in olive oil. This has been found to be quite as efficacious as eucalyptus oil.

HOMELESS CATS AND DOGS.

A New Society to Protect Them Is Proposed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would that I had the eloquence of the writer of the "Cry of Little Brothers," published in THE TIMES, to help drive home more convincingly the lesson of our duty to our little dumb friends, roaming around the streets, cold and half frozen, with not a pitying hand reached out to rescue them from their miserable condition.

But not until man, superior in his dominion of the earth, feels his oneness with all life—animal as well as human—will he be prompted to help a starving cat or dog as unhesitatingly as he would a child in a similar condition. Undoubtedly there are many starving children also, but their chance of rescue is far greater than that of our dumb creatures, whose inability to speak for themselves makes our responsibility toward them all the greater.

In an article by Edwin Tenny Brewster, published in the May, 1912, McClure's, we learn that out of a million cats which inhabit New York a hundred thousand of them are homeless. The horse and dog have found owners, in most cases, but the cat is still an outlaw—just on the point of being included in our protection from ill-usage and want.

If a Child's Welfare Society, then why not one for homeless cats and dogs as well? Let the women who are so enthusiastic on the questions of suffrage, white slave traffic, feminism, and various other "isms" sidetrack these issues long enough to direct their interest and dollars to the rescuing and housing of the hundreds and thousands of our "little brothers," that otherwise will perish this Winter.

IN THE ART GALLERIES.

On exhibition at the American Art Galleries is a collection of furniture, glass, and decorative objects that has the rare quality of artistic integrity, making an impression of unity despite its variousness, and enticing the mind of the observer with its mellow tone and air of springing from sources of culture and fine taste. This is the collection of objects belonging to the old and well-known house of Cottier & Co., which, in the future, is to devote its whole attention to pictures.

One of the most interesting sections is that of the stained glass, differing as it does from the modern work in which the old is imitated, and from the typical American glass. These glass panels and windows contain typical examples of the English glass of the last century, which, like the English painting, has no exact counterpart in the product of other countries. Occasionally the artists responsible for the designs were of first importance. There are, for example, three panels, a reclining figure symbolic of "Morning" and two scenes from "The Lady of Shalott" from originals designed and painted by Matthew Maris. The figures and accessories are conceived in a large and simple style, with few leadings, and the tone is rich and golden, superb decorations to live with. Another series of less artistic interest, but entertaining in historic association and suggestion, contain views of old Scotch towns—Bass, Perth, Elgin, Aberdeen, Stirling, and so on, frequently surmounted by panels of portrait heads. An interesting old German panel, sixteenth century, with a panel on either side, composed of fragments of antique glass, comes from the Clarence King sale.

Another section which has its special prizes for collectors is that of European ceramics, in which may be found several of the rarest Wedgwood pieces, the jars with Sphinx covers, for instance, and the plaque representing Mars and Venus in white on a mauve ground.

In the furniture section there will be chances at old Chippendale and Hepplewhite, occasionally enhanced by coverings of fine old petit point. There are Queen Anne and Jacobean pieces of quality as well, besides the admirable modern furniture made by Cottier & Co. from special designs.

The numbers of painted tiles of English pattern are reminiscent of a period when Morris & Co. "changed the face of all England." Like the glass, they reflect, in the sinuous figures and hints of mediævalism, the romantic feeling that swept over the country under the influence of Rossetti, Morris, and Burne-Jones. In the catalogue is listed a brass tray that escaped the attention of the present writer. It is described as the work of Morris himself, "the friend of Daniel Cottier," and is a remote reminder of the mighty craftsman's early interest in the memorial brasses of the Essex churches, with their curious and quaint patterns.

There are interesting and valuable specimens of Chinese porcelain, and a marble Buddha painted in red, blue, and green and given to the Tang dynasty; a few rare pieces of Roman and Greek glass, some beautiful textiles and French tapestries, and the whole place glows with the deep yet muffled color that takes its key from mediæval windows and ancient oak. It is an exhibition to visit both before and at the time of the sale.

The forthcoming sale at Clarke's Art Rooms of the furnishings from Gray Craig Castle, Newport, will offer more to architects and interior decorators than to private collectors, in all probability. Equipped with the knowing eye that discerns what to take and what to leave in a large and motley collection, a visitor to these galleries could make many a rewarding choice. Who, for example, with a taste for Persian blues would overlook the quaint Persian plaque with the admirably composed figures of lord and lady, musicians, and dancing girls? The archaic little tango going on in the foreground gives a sense of rhythmic motion, while the general structure of the composition is strictly architectural—a remarkably good bit for a decorative purpose and stemming from the Davis collection. There is also a group of entertaining Swiss panels of stained glass, such as were painted for bridal couples as wedding presents and used in the windows of their houses, and there are carved columns, pedestals, and torcheres that would solve decorative problems in Italo-American villas. The pictures form the least noteworthy section.

At the Knoedler Galleries, Carroll Beckwith is showing paintings and sketches of Versailles, "The Fountain of Neptune," "Le Moulin," "The Palace at Sunset," and other subjects characteristic of the beautiful old place sleeping among its verdure. Mr. Beckwith sees it with sympathetic eyes, yet not quite as most of us conceive it. He lends a certain weight of importance and richness to what presents itself oftenest to the mind as brilliant and shallow. Thus he realizes for us the real historic aspect of the ancient buildings so tawdry in their semi-dilapidation, yet so thick with reminiscent splendors and withal so imposing by sheer size and magnificence. He shows us that the gardens are not in their old estate, yet manages to convey the charm of their present wan stateliness. And he tells us what historians have so much trouble in believing, that the rustic playhouses of the Little Trianon were the simplest toys of the world to be furnished for the pleasure of a gracious lady tired of pomp. In a word he reproduces the spirit of the place as it is now without trying for reconstruction, and that is the way to make us feel what once it was and to be truly an artist into the bargain. Moreover his copies of Nattier and Largillière have more life in the flesh than the originals.

At these galleries next week will be seen Aston Knight's recent pictures. Mr. Knight has been painting in Normandy and Yorkshire in order to catch the secret of quickly moving water in the streams of those countries, and in Holland and Venice for effects of still water. One of his Yorkshire pictures was lately bought by the Luxembourg. His father, Ridgway Knight, painted last year a charming picture called "Le Bas de Laine Francais," and represents an old peasant couple counting out their savings, which they have kept in an old stocking. The picture was sold on the opening day of the Salon to Mr. McLean of New York, and Mr. Knight is engaged on another picture in the same vein of rustic simplicity for the next Salon. The new picture is to be called "Charity," and represents the old peasant eating soup while his wife is filling a bowl with the good child nourishment for a woman and child begging at the door. The models are found at Rolleboise, where Mr. Knight paints, and the pictures are very interesting departures from his former style.

A letter of Alexandre Davy de la Pailleterie Dumas, called by Napoleon Bonaparte the "Horatius Codes of the Tyrol," and father of the French novelist, Alexandre Dumas père, brought $6.50. A letter of Pierre Dupont de L'Etang, the French General who was defeated at Baylen, surrendered 18,000 men, and was condemned by Napoleon to an indefinite imprisonment, brought $15.

A letter of Gerard C. M. Duroc, Duc De Friuli, to Count Daru, informing him that Napoleon had decided on the present to send to Jerome, King of Westphalia, sold for $8.

The total thus far is $3,462. There will be two more sessions to-morrow.

NAVY NOW FINDING RECRUITING EASY

MANY LETTERS FROM BOYS

One Family Gives Four to the Fleet —Another Writes He Will Soon Make the Weight.

For the first time in years more than half of the enlisted men of the navy are re-enlisting in the service at the expiration of their terms. At the recruiting office of the Navy at 153 West Twenty-third Street it was said yesterday that the latest report from Washington indicated that 52 per cent. of the old men were re-enlisting and that the outlook was for a still greater increase in the near future.

Unlike the Army the Navy is experiencing no trouble whatever in getting men. Every day there come in batches of fifty or more letters to the recruiting officers, from parents, guardians, and from the young boys and men themselves, asking for information as to the quickest and best way to get into the Navy. At West Twenty-third Street recruiting station the largest in this country a TIMES reporter was permitted yesterday to read some of these letters. Here is one from a mother, whose home is at West Hampton, L. I.:

The Recruiting Officer.

Dear Sir: Will you kindly send me at once a blank to fill out for another of my sons. Please send the blank without delay so that I can take it before a Notary Public. I guess Uncle Sam will have all my boys for they all like the navy so well.

The boy referred to in the letter is now in the Navy and is the fourth brother to enter the service in the last two years.

Mr. Recruiting Officer.

Dear Sir: My son, Walter, has joined the navy, and you can't imagine how proud I am to be the mother of a son who is willing to serve this beautiful and grand country. We all hope Walter will make good.

Here is a letter that came to Commander Day from a boy in New Haven, Conn., who failed to pass the physical examination for enlistment in the Navy:

Dear Sir: I am sorry I am not heavy enough to join the navy just now, but expect to make the weight as soon as possible.

I gave the booklet to one of my friends and he has passed in Hartford. He left New Haven to-day for Boston. I have got four more of my friends, who want me to wait until October or November, but if I get the weight on before I will go before them and join. So you see that booklet got one already and will get five more if we all pass.

This letter is from a father and was also addressed to Commander Day:

Dear Sir: My son enlisted in the navy service of Uncle Sam a year ago last October, and I am very happy, indeed, to say that he is making splendid progress. He is serving on the Nebraska. His sisters, brother, and parents are very glad he has taken that course for a future existence. My business being of a public kind, I will place the circular which I received from you in a conspicuous place. Perhaps it will help to guide some young man who has no aim in life to a better existence.

MISS M'KEE, BRIDE OF KURT REISINGER

THE WEDDING ATTENDANTS

Senator and Mrs. Kern of Indiana, Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, and Gen. B. F. Tracy Among Guests.

One of the prettiest weddings of the late Autumn was that yesterday of Kurt Reisinger, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, and Miss Mary Lodge McKee, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James R. McKee, and a granddaughter of the late ex-President Benjamin Harrison. It was celebrated quietly at 4 P. M. in the Central Presbyterian Church in West Fifty-seventh Street. There was no reception or breakfast following the ceremony as Mr. Reisinger is in mourning for his grandfather, Adolphus Busch.

Trails of smilax and baskets of pink chrysanthemums suspended from the galleries and organ loft and tree palms back of the pulpit decorated the church. The guests were seated in the pews in the nave which were screened from the side aisles with masses of palms.

The bride, who walked with her father, wore a trailing gown of white satin draped with point lace on one side and a tulle pannier on the other. It was embroidered in pearls and ropes of pearls appeared here and there in the soft draperies. The corsage was low and point lace formed the top of it and tulle and lace the sleeves.

A Dutch cap of point lace with wired lace wings over the ears and folds of tulle passed under the coiffure at the back held the voluminous tulle veil in place. The bride wore the bridegroom's gift, a diamond and ruby pendant, and carried lilies of the valley and orchids.

Her only attendant was Mrs. Lowry Gillet, who wore a frock of pink cuarmeuse brocaded in silver leaves, having a silver net tunic standing out a bit at the bottom and held in at the waist line with a silver net girdle and flaring bow. Her hat of silver lace had the crown banded with pink ostrich feathers and pink roses. She carried a huge bouquet of pink orchids and yellow roses.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Wilton Merle Smith of the church, to an accompaniment of soft organ music. Mr. Reisinger had his brother, Walter Reisinger, as his best man, and the four ushers were Harvard classmates, Hubert W. Ryan, Leon O. Warle, Samuel Lata, and Stuart McDurnat.

Guests came from Washington, Indianapolis, and other cities. Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lee came from Washington, and among the guests were members of the Dixon and Findlay families. Gen. B. F. Tracy, Mrs. Wilmerding, Senator Kern of Indiana and Mrs. Kern, Miss Leary, Mr. and Mrs. Edward McKee, Mrs. Charles R. Locke, Mrs. Walston Hill Brown, Miss Eva Iverson Brown, Lowry Gillett, Mrs. Herbert Brooks and Miss Brooks of Washington, Dr. Houghton and Mrs. Houghton, Mrs. Walter Rutherford, Mrs. Daniel Lawton, and Mrs. C. G. Ayres.

Mrs. McKee, the bride's mother, was in violet velvet and white and white lace, topped by a hat to match, trimmed with Hugo Reisinger was in white, with fur.

The bride spent her earliest childhood in the White House during the Administration of her grandfather, Benjamin Harrison, and has many friends in Washington.

CHESTER M. DEUEL WEDS.

Magistrate's Son Married to Miss Mae Morrison—The Attendants.

The marriage of Miss Mae Morrison, daughter of Mrs. William Morrison, of Bridgeport, Conn., to Chester Merritt Deuel, son of Magistrate Joseph M. Deuel and Mrs. Deuel, of 125 West Eightieth Street, took place at 6 o'clock last evening at the home of the bride's cousin, Miss Dorothy Morrison, 59 East Seventy-eighth Street. The Rev. Henry Anstice, of this city, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Erskine Kelly of St. George's Church, Bridgeport. The rooms were decorated with yellow chrysanthemums, palms and Southern smilax.

The bride's gown was of white satin trimmed with point lace. Her veil was of tulle and was caught up with sprays of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white roses.

Mrs. Rosaiter L. Waters, sister of the bride, was the matron of honor. Her gown was of peachblow charmeuse with a girdle of blue. Mrs. Justin Loeber, Miss Dorothy Morrison and Mrs. Henry De Soto Beales were the bridesmaids. They wore blue minaret gowns and all of the attendants carried arm bouquets of large yellow chrysanthemums. The little nieces of the bride, Elizabeth and Eleanor Waters, were the flower girls. They wore white frocks of point d'esprit and carried Empire baskets of small chrysanthemums.

Mr. Deuel had as best man Harry De Mott Sims, and the ushers were B. A. Engert, Justin Loeber and Dr. Jellinghaus. After the ceremony a reception was held. Mr. and Mrs. Deuel are to live in Watertown, N. Y., upon their return from their honeymoon.

WEDS MRS. D. CHAUNCEY, JR.

H. A. Curtis Marries Polo Player's Widow After Brief Engagement.

The marriage of Harry Appleton Curtis of Boston and New York, and a son of Mrs. Greeley S. Curtis of Boston, and Mrs. Grace Fargo Chauncey, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Fargo of New York, took place quietly at noon yesterday in the chantry of St. Thomas's Church, the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, rector of the church, officiating. None but the immediate family were asked, and there was no reception. The bride wore a blue traveling gown, and had one attendant, her sister, Miss Clara Fargo.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have gone North on a honeymoon trip, and on their return will live in New York.

The engagement was announced formally on last Thursday.

Mrs. Curtis was married in 1907 in St. Thomas's Church to Daniel Chauncey, Jr., a son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel M. Chauncey. He was a well-known polo player, and in 1909 was seriously injured playing polo, and died soon afterward at his Cedarhurst, L. I., home. Since then Mrs. Chauncey had lived with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Fargo, at 120 East Thirty-seventh Street.

Mr. Curtis is a Harvard graduate, class of '96, and has been for some time engaged in business in New York. He is a member of the Racquet Club.

STRONG-TUFTS WEDDING.

Son of the Rev. Dr. G. A. Strong of New York Marries Miss Mary Tufts.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 15.—Trinity Church was the scene this noon of the marriage of Miss Mary Tufts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tufts, of 13 Gloucester Street, to Alexander Strong of New York City, Harvard '12. He is a son of the Rev. Dr. George Alexander Strong, rector of Christ Church, New York. Miss Tufts is a member of the Vincent Club.

The bride was escorted to the chancel by her father, who gave her in marriage. She had for her bridal attendants her sister, Miss Ellen Tufts, as maid of honor, with Miss Margaret W. Strong of New York, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Faith Simpkins, Miss M. Katharine Ayer, and Miss Alice Garland as bridesmaids. Miss Simpkins is to become on Thursday the wife of Walter Tufts, Jr., brother of to-day's bride.

The bridegroom had for his best man Walter Tufts, Jr., Harvard, '13. The ceremony was performed by the bridegroom's father, Dr. Strong, who had the assistance of the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity.

MISS HALL MAKES DEBUT.

Introduced by Her Mother, Mrs. Benjamin E. Hall, at a Reception.

Mrs. Benjamin E. Hall was the hostess yesterday afternoon at her residence, 15 West Eighty-third Street, at a reception and dancing tea to introduce her daughter, Miss Marian Wells Hall.

ACTORS WANT TAX ON INCOME LESSENED

Committee to Ask Treasury Department to Make Exemptions for Big Expenses.

LAW LIBERAL IN ENGLAND

Guy Standing Says Collector There Allows Expenses for Shirts and Taxis — Hattie Williams's Views.

Actors and actresses of prominence earning large sums of money were greatly interested in the letter from Guy Standing, the English actor, which was printed in THE TIMES yesterday regarding the taxing of members of their profession under the provisions of the new income tax law, and as a result a delegation of theatrical people, or at least several representatives, will be sent to Washington soon to confer with the Treasury Department about exemptions to which the acting fraternity may be entitled and to straighten out other points which are worrying the theatrical world in relation to the tax.

In the meantime it is reported that at least one firm of managers is preparing next week to begin collecting a small sum from their employes each week "to be put aside to pay the income tax." This is openly resented by the actors themselves, who contend that the action is illegal and that the move should be blocked at once. They will ask Federal aid to have the weekly reduction of their salary stopped.

"It would be very bad taste for me to find any fault with the laws in this country," said Guy Standing at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, last night, "as I am an Englishman, and in reality I am not making any complaint against the income tax. I have always been subjected to it in England, and I want to pay what is required of me here, but I do think we ought to know just what we are going to pay on, and I believe we should be entitled to the same exemptions that we are in England. Over there I go to the tax collector and tell him what I am earning, and he has the books and reports of the theatrical managers to confirm my statements. That settled, he asks me my expenses connected with my business, and I give him a list of them.

"I put down everything that I am required to spend for my profession, such as stage clothes, shirts, and everything of that sort. Shirts may sound like a small item, but it is in reality a large one to the actor, and there are many other things of that sort. If I feel that I am required because of the luncheon, recalled his student days at Amherst, when he crossed the "Notch" to serenade the fair daughters of Holyoke, and Miss Phoebe Crosby, the grand opera singer, rendered two soprano solos.

Miss Olcott, one of the younger alumnae, made a suffrage speech. This question has heretofore been taboo at Mount Holyoke gatherings, and its introduction on this occasion was not received with great enthusiasm by the alumnae.

CITY OPENS POE COTTAGE.

The cottage in which Edgar Allan Poe lived from 1845 to 1849 and in which Mrs. Poe died was opened yesterday afternoon as a Poe Museum by Borough President Cyrus C. Miller of the Bronx, who was assisted by T. J. Higgins, the Bronx Park Commissioner. The cottage stands in Poe Park, at Kingsbridge Avenue and the Concourse. It stood originally across the street from the park, but when the cottage was bought by the city, it was moved.

The building has three rooms on the ground floor and two rooms in the attic. In the main living room is an old-fashioned open fireplace and old-fashioned crane. Prof. Owen J. Hill of Fordham University, Dr. Elmer E. Brown of New York University, Prof. John Erskine of Columbia, Franklin W. Hooper, director of the Brooklyn Institute; Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education, and W. W. Miles, President of the North Side Board of Trade, delivered addresses at the opening ceremonies, and Miss Lisbet Hacker of the Morris High School recited Poe's poem, "The Raven."

EDISON'S NEW PLANT READY

The plant of the Edison Storage Battery Company at Orange, N. J., is practically completed, and now awaits only the installation of machinery to start making Mr. Edison's alkaline nickel-iron storage battery on the enlarged basis made necessary by the rapid development of storage battery applications.

The Edison battery is described as particularly adapted to miners' safety lamps, and a new type of this lamp is to be placed on the market. This fact, together with the laying off of more than 100 employes pending the arrival of new machinery and supplies, caused a rumor that a new battery was forthcoming, and that manufacture would be curtailed until its development. This was officially denied yesterday.

AID FOR ST. CHRISTOPHER GUILD

Sale at Mrs. J. W. Haven's for St. Mary's Free Hospital.

A sale will be held on Tuesday afternoon from 2:30 until 6 o'clock at the residence of Mrs. J. Woodward Haven, 18 East Seventy-eighth Street, for the benefit of St. Christopher Guild of the St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children. Mrs. William Warner Hoppin, Jr., is President of the Guild; Mrs. G. P. Cammann, a sister of Mrs. Hoppin, and Miss Louise Munroe, are the Secretary and Treasurer, respectively, of the Guild.

Mrs. Richard Irvin and Mrs. Herman Duryea will have charge of the hats, and the Misses Kate Haven and Leslie Murray, in Swedish peasant costume, will take care of the Swedish table, which has been donated to the sale by Miss Elizabeth Kean.

There will also be a 25 cent table of toys for children, and the little Misses Ethel Haven and May Hoppin will sell them.

Mrs. Richard Irvin is President of St. Mary's Hospital and Mrs. James Speyer is the Treasurer. Among the members of the Board of Managers and members of the Guild are Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. John E. Alexandre, Mrs. Frederic Gallatin, Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster, the Misses Mabel Gerry, Malvina, and Georgia Appleton, Evelyn Witherbee, and Eyelyn Marshall.

The bazaar, given last season at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, was for the benefit of St. Mary's Hospital, to which the St. Christopher Guild gives efficient aid.

Stony Wold Benefit.

For the benefit of the Stony Wold Sanatorium, Auxiliaries 12 and 17 will give an entertainment at the Hotel Astor on Saturday, Dec. 6, including a pageant representing the Court of Cleopatra. The settings will be realistic and on a luxurious scale. There will be songs of the Orient, snake dancers, a magician, and tableaux of the Rubaiyat. The entertainment will be followed by a fancy dress ball. Tickets may be obtained from Mrs. B. Stern, 542 Fifth Avenue.

BEGINS WORK FOR WOMEN.

Mrs. J. B. Harriman is the Only Woman on a Federal Commission.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, the one woman member of the Industrial Relations Commission, the only woman ever appointed by a President of the United States as member of a Federal commission, leaves New York for Washington to-day to be ready for her new duties. Monday morning she will be at the headquarters of the commission in the Southern Building on H Street, taking up the general lines of the work she is to do. She hopes before long to institute a special investigation into the trades in which women and children are employed. Speaking of the great suffrage campaign in which the women of New York are now engaged, Mrs. Harriman said:

"Suffrage for women is bound to come, of course. It can't help it. It is a matter of evolution, and I am glad that the question is to be put before the people in 1915. The campaign must now be largely one of education—some of the women must be educated to want the vote, and then the women must show the men what they can do and what they will do if the vote is given to them. If they make good beforehand, it is certain that they will do even better afterward.

"Any woman who works for good government, it seems to me, does valuable suffrage work. The work the women have done in this last local campaign and the work they did for the Progressive Party and for Wilson in the Presidential campaign must be a good argument in favor of what they are asking.

"I can't see how any one interested in the industrial classes can help seeing how necessary the vote is for them. I was for several years on the fence in regard to this question, but in the various lines of work in which I have been engaged I have seen that the suffrage will be of the greatest advantage to wage-earning women. My friends in the settlements tell me that they can go so far without a vote, and then they come against a stone wall—they can go so far and no further. The question of women and children in industry cannot be divorced from the suffrage question."

Mrs. Harriman has taken a house in Washington at 1,716 New Hampshire Avenue, and she will go into her own home in that city when she arrives to-day.

MT. HOLYOKE RAISES FUNDS

The Mount Holyoke Alumnae Association held its Fall meeting at the Hotel St. Denis yesterday, with Mrs. W. H. Gilpatric in the chair. Mrs. J. D. Walton, Chairman of the committee to raise funds for the new Student Alumnae Building, reported that $121,000 had been already collected. As the building will cost $130,000, $9,000 must be raised in the next few weeks. Work is soon to begin on the new Skinner Building, the gift of William and Joseph Skinner of Holyoke, Mass.

The Rev. Nehemiah Boynton of Brooklyn, in a speech after the luncheon, recalled his student days at Amherst, when he crossed the "Notch" to serenade the fair daughters of Holyoke, and Miss Phoebe Crosby, the grand opera singer, rendered two soprano solos.

Miss Olcott, one of the younger alumnae, made a suffrage speech. This question has heretofore been taboo at Mount Holyoke gatherings, and its introduction on this occasion was not received with great enthusiasm by the alumnae.

EDISON'S NEW PLANT READY

The plant of the Edison Storage Battery Company at Orange, N. J., is practically completed, and now awaits only the installation of machinery to start making Mr. Edison's alkaline nickel-iron storage battery on the enlarged basis made necessary by the rapid development of storage battery applications.

The Edison battery is described as particularly adapted to miners' safety lamps, and a new type of this lamp is to be placed on the market. This fact, together with the laying off of more than 100 employes pending the arrival of new machinery and supplies, caused a rumor that a new battery was forthcoming, and that manufacture would be curtailed until its development. This was officially denied yesterday.

AID FOR ST. CHRISTOPHER GUILD

Sale at Mrs. J. W. Haven's for St. Mary's Free Hospital.

A sale will be held on Tuesday afternoon from 2:30 until 6 o'clock at the residence of Mrs. J. Woodward Haven, 18 East Seventy-eighth Street, for the benefit of St. Christopher Guild of the St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children. Mrs. William Warner Hoppin, Jr., is President of the Guild; Mrs. G. P. Cammann, a sister of Mrs. Hoppin, and Miss Louise Munroe, are the Secretary and Treasurer, respectively, of the Guild.

Mrs. Richard Irvin and Mrs. Herman Duryea will have charge of the hats, and the Misses Kate Haven and Leslie Murray, in Swedish peasant costume, will take care of the Swedish table, which has been donated to the sale by Miss Elizabeth Kean.

There will also be a 25 cent table of toys for children, and the little Misses Ethel Haven and May Hoppin will sell them.

Mrs. Richard Irvin is President of St. Mary's Hospital and Mrs. James Speyer is the Treasurer. Among the members of the Board of Managers and members of the Guild are Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. John E. Alexandre, Mrs. Frederic Gallatin, Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster, the Misses Mabel Gerry, Malvina, and Georgia Appleton, Evelyn Witherbee, and Eyelyn Marshall.

The bazaar, given last season at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, was for the benefit of St. Mary's Hospital, to which the St. Christopher Guild gives efficient aid.

Crippled Children's School Exhibit.

On Dec. 2 and 3, at Delmonico's, the Crippled Children's East Side Free School will hold its annual sale and exhibition. Mrs. Albert Seligman is Chairman of the committee in charge of the exhibit, and associated with her are Miss Florence S. Sullivan, Mrs. Spencer Lathrop, Mrs. Moses Heineman, Miss Louise Baldwin, Dr. Charles H. Jaeger, Dr. Arthur H. Culley, and Mrs. John M. Galloway. Those representing the Federation of Associations for Cripples are Mrs. George F. Shrady, President; Mrs. Henry Goldman, Vice President; Miss Edith M. Bond, Treasurer; Miss Eleanor Adler, Secretary, and Honorary Vice Presidents Bishop Greer, Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman, Dr. Edward T. Devine, William J. Schieffelin, Robert W. de Forest, Alfred T. White, Oswald G. Villard, and Mrs. Florence Kelley.

Miss Butler Weds Brower Hewitt.

Miss Antoinette Reeve Butler, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Glenworth Reeve Butler of 229 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, and Brower Hewitt, younger son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Browning Hewitt of 122 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, were married last evening. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. L. Mason Clarke in the First Presbyterian Church, of which the bride's grandfather was a founder. White chrysanthemums and palms were used in the decorations.

Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt will make their home in New Haven, where the bridegroom is connected with the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

BEGINS WORK FOR WOMEN.

Mrs. J. B. Harriman is the Only Woman on a Federal Commission.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, the one woman member of the Industrial Relations Commission, the only woman ever appointed by a President of the United States as member of a Federal commission, leaves New York for Washington to-day to be ready for her new duties. Monday morning she will be at the headquarters of the commission in the Southern Building on H Street, taking up the general lines of the work she is to do. She hopes before long to institute a special investigation into the trades in which women and children are employed. Speaking of the great suffrage campaign in which the women of New York are now engaged, Mrs. Harriman said:

"Suffrage for women is bound to come, of course. It can't help it. It is a matter of evolution, and I am glad that the question is to be put before the people in 1915. The campaign must now be largely one of education—some of the women must be educated to want the vote, and then the women must show the men what they can do and what they will do if the vote is given to them. If they make good beforehand, it is certain that they will do even better afterward.

"Any woman who works for good government, it seems to me, does valuable suffrage work. The work the women have done in this last local campaign and the work they did for the Progressive Party and for Wilson in the Presidential campaign must be a good argument in favor of what they are asking.

"I can't see how any one interested in the industrial classes can help seeing how necessary the vote is for them. I was for several years on the fence in regard to this question, but in the various lines of work in which I have been engaged I have seen that the suffrage will be of the greatest advantage to wage-earning women. My friends in the settlements tell me that they can go so far without a vote, and then they come against a stone wall—they can go so far and no further. The question of women and children in industry cannot be divorced from the suffrage question."

Mrs. Harriman has taken a house in Washington at 1,716 New Hampshire Avenue, and she will go into her own home in that city when she arrives to-day.

MT. HOLYOKE RAISES FUNDS

The Mount Holyoke Alumnae Association held its Fall meeting at the Hotel St. Denis yesterday, with Mrs. W. H. Gilpatric in the chair. Mrs. J. D. Walton, Chairman of the committee to raise funds for the new Student Alumnae Building, reported that $121,000 had been already collected. As the building will cost $130,000, $9,000 must be raised in the next few weeks. Work is soon to begin on the new Skinner Building, the gift of William and Joseph Skinner of Holyoke, Mass.

The Rev. Nehemiah Boynton of Brooklyn, in a speech after the luncheon, recalled his student days at Amherst, when he crossed the "Notch" to serenade the fair daughters of Holyoke, and Miss Phoebe Crosby, the grand opera singer, rendered two soprano solos.

Miss Olcott, one of the younger alumnae, made a suffrage speech. This question has heretofore been taboo at Mount Holyoke gatherings, and its introduction on this occasion was not received with great enthusiasm by the alumnae.

CITY OPENS POE COTTAGE.

The cottage in which Edgar Allan Poe lived from 1845 to 1849 and in which Mrs. Poe died was opened yesterday afternoon as a Poe Museum by Borough President Cyrus C. Miller of the Bronx, who was assisted by T. J. Higgins, the Bronx Park Commissioner. The cottage stands in Poe Park, at Kingsbridge Avenue and the Concourse. It stood originally across the street from the park, but when the cottage was bought by the city, it was moved.

The building has three rooms on the ground floor and two rooms in the attic. In the main living room is an old-fashioned open fireplace and old-fashioned crane. Prof. Owen J. Hill of Fordham University, Dr. Elmer E. Brown of New York University, Prof. John Erskine of Columbia, Franklin W. Hooper, director of the Brooklyn Institute; Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education, and W. W. Miles, President of the North Side Board of Trade, delivered addresses at the opening ceremonies, and Miss Lisbet Hacker of the Morris High School recited Poe's poem, "The Raven."

Stony Wold Benefit.

For the benefit of the Stony Wold Sanatorium, Auxiliaries 12 and 17 will give an entertainment at the Hotel Astor on Saturday, Dec. 6, including a pageant representing the Court of Cleopatra. The settings will be realistic and on a luxurious scale. There will be songs of the Orient, snake dancers, a magician, and tableaux of the Rubaiyat. The entertainment will be followed by a fancy dress ball. Tickets may be obtained from Mrs. B. Stern, 542 Fifth Avenue.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH HOME.

Brings with Him 64 Views of Scenes Made Famous by Dickens.

F. Hopkinson Smith, the author and painter, returned yesterday on the Hamburg-American liner Amerika from England, where he had gone to paint scenes of Dickens land, which he will publish later. He told the reporters that he had brought back sixty-four pictures with him of the scenes in England that Charles Dickens had written about in his books.

"Then," said a young reporter, "you are going to make Mr. Dickens famous.

For a moment Mr. Smith stood astonished. Then he replied in surprised tones:

"I make Dickens famous? Why, there is more fame in one page of his writing than anything I could accomplish in my entire life."

Mr. Smith said that, while he had little interest in the present Administration he was contented with three diplomatic appointments made by President Wilson.—Thomas Nelson Page to Rome, Walter Hines Page to London, and Dr. Henry L. Van Dyke to the Hague.

Harold Fowler, Secretary of the United States Embassy in London, was also a passenger on the Amerika.

KIAMIL PASHA, EXILE, DIES.

ROME, Nov. 15.—A dispatch from Larnaca, in the Island of Cyprus, states that Kiamil Pasha, the veteran Turkish statesman, is dead.

Kiamil Pasha was one of the central figures in Ottoman public life for thirty years. He was appointed Grand Vizier in 1885 and again in 1895, and following the victory of the Young Turks in August, 1908, which established the Turkish Government upon a constitutional basis, he was again chosen for that office.

Throughout his career Kiamil Pasha struggled for a constitutional régime and was thrice exiled for his opinions, and on several other occasions escaped death only by taking refuge in a foreign embassy or consulate. He fell from power in February, 1909, when he incurred the enmity of the Young Turks. This powerful party accused him of aiming to become a despot who would recognize no authority but his own.

In the negotiations with the Balkan allies undertaken to bring the war with Turkey to a close, Kiamil Pasha, who had been re-appointed Grand Vizier, took a leading part. He insisted that Adrianople should not be given up and in this position he failed to receive the firm support of his Government. He was forced from office following Enver Bey's coup d'etat and the assassination of Nazim Pasha. At the conclusion of peace, Kiamil Pasha was assailed from both sides for having yielded to the demands of the Balkan allies and was forced into exile.

FRANCIS HIGGINS DEAD.

Francis Higgins, President of the Board of Directors of the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum at Kingsbridge and a Director of the Catholic Protectory, died at his home, 104 West Fifty-seventh Street, yesterday in the eightieth year of his age. He had been retired from the real estate business for ten years, which time he devoted to the interests of the two institutions in which he was interested. He was also one of the oldest members of St. Patrick's Cathedral Parish, and Cardinal Farley will pronounce the absolution at his funeral to-morrow morning.

Mr. Higgins was born in Mayvore, County Meath, Ireland, eighty years ago. He came to New York when 16 years old, and after finishing his education here, entered first the cigar and later the real estate business in Nassau Street. He never married and for several years recently, until a short time ago, he lived at the Manhattan Club.

Among the honorary pall bearers at the funeral will be John D. Crimmins, John Fox, City Court Judges E. S. O'Dwyer and Francis B. Delehanty, ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, and Municipal Court Justice Lewis J. Conlon.

PRINCE DE POLIGNAC DEAD.

Was Brigadier General in Confederate Army in Civil War.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Prince Camille de Polignac, who served in the American civil war, died to-day at the residence of his son-in-law, Count Michel de Pierredon. The Prince was born Feb. 16, 1832.

Prince Camille Armand Jules Marie de Polignac was descendant of the Duchess de Polignac, a favorite of Marie Antoinette, who, at the beginning of the civil war he came to this country and offered his services to the Confederate Government, and was made a Brigadier General on Jan. 10, 1862, and attached to the Army of Tennessee. Subsequently he received command of a division and was commissioned Major General on June 13, 1864.

During the Franco-Prussian War Prince de Polignac served with his countrymen. He was a journalist and civil engineer. On several occasions he was sent to Algiers in charge of surveying expeditions by the French Government and his work received special

RARE WASHINGTON LETTER IN MARKET

Three-Page Note Written Day After His Election as President Offered at Sotheby's.

A FINE WOLSEY LETTER

One of the most important George Washington letters ever offered for sale in Great Britain will be sold at Sotheby's in London on Nov. 28. Historically the letter is one of the most interesting ever penned by Washington. It appears to be hitherto unpublished, and was written the day after his election as the first President of the United States. It is three pages quarto, is dated Mount Vernon, Feb. 5, 1789, and is addressed to Samuel Powell. In it Washington says:

The letters which you did me the honor of writing to me on the 6th and 26th of last month came duly to hand and their enclosure were safely delivered to my nephew, Bushrod Washington, who has lately become a resident of Alexandria, where, and at the Courts in its vicinity, he means to establish himself in the practice of the Law. No apology, my dear Sir, on this or any other occasion was, or will be, necessary for putting any letter, you may wish to have safely conveyed to a friend in these parts, under cover to me. All the political manoeuvres, which were calculated to impede, if not to prevent, the operation of the new Government are now brought to a close until the meeting of the new Congress, and, although the issue of all of the elections are not yet known, they are sufficiently displayed to authorize a belief that the opposers of the Government have been defeated in almost every instance. Although the elections in this State are over it will be some time (from the extent of it) before the Representatives to Congress can be finally announced. From conjecture, however, it is supposed the majority will be Federalists—some are so sanguine as to believe that seven out of the ten will be so—but this, as I have already said, is altogether conjecture—and vague conjecture—for much pain has been taken, and no art left unessayed to poison the mind, and alarm the fears of the people into opposition. In the list of the Electors, which has been published for the Executive authority of this State, there appears (as far as I am acquainted with the characters of the gentlemen) eight decided friends of the new Constitution. In the case of the British King's insanity what it may, his situation, if alive, merits commiseration.

Better perhaps would it have been for his nation, though not for ours, under present prospect, if this event had happened at the time Dr. Franklin, you say, supposes his Majesty's constitution was first tinged with the malady under which he is now laboring. Mrs. Washington, the Major, and Fanny and others under this roof unite in best wishes and affectionate regards for Mrs. Powell and yourself.

Washington's reference to George III.'s first attack of madness is considered most remarkable. In the autumn of 1788 the King returned to Windsor after taking the waters at Cheltenham, and on Oct. 16 got wet while walking. The next day he was taken ill, and on the 22d signs of derangement appeared. However, he got better, and on the 24th held a levee. His mind dwelt on the loss of the American Colonies. While at Windsor on Nov. 5 he became delirious, and for a while it was thought that his life was in imminent danger. On Dec. 5 his physicians stated to the Privy Council that his disease was not incurable, but that it was impossible to say how long it might last.

Cardinal Wolsey Letter.

Another letter, in this same sale, is of great historical importance because it was written by Cardinal Wolsey while he was presumed to be acting as an arbiter between the Emperor Charles and King Francis I. of France. It is addressed "To Monsieur the Chancellor of France, the Sieur de la Palice, the first President of the Court of Parliament at Paris, the Sieur de la Bastye, and the other Ambassadors of France being at Calais." The letter reads as follows:

Gentlemen: I commend myself to you cordially in order to inform you of the business I have had with the Emperor (Charles V.) for the smoothing away of the differences between the King, your Master, (Francis I.) and him. I remit to you the bearer of this letter, to whom I beg you to give complete faith and trust. And on this subject give you to God who may give you, gentlemen, good life and long.

T. CARLIS EBOR.

The letter indeed may be regarded as a link with the Field of the Cloth of Gold Pageant. After the meeting of Henry VIII and Francis 1 at the Field of the Cloth of Gold, "twixt Guisnes and Ardres," in 1520, the Emperor and the King of England met at Gravelines on the 10th of July that same year. At this meeting, which was regarded with distrust by France, the marriage of the Emperor with the Princess Mary, already recently betrothed to the Dauphin, was discussed, in spite of the fact that Charles V had pledged himself to marry the French King's daughter Charlotte.

The treaty was concluded between the two monarchs by which they promised that no new treaty with France, which should bind either to those matrimonial alliances which both had contracted with that country, should be made within two years. Henry then wrote to Francis, informing him that the Emperor's Ministers had made dishonorable proposals for breaking off the marriage treaties. Francis, however, was not deceived, and although Wolsey persuaded him from open resentment, yet matters were now drifting towards a war, which eventually broke out between the Emperor and the King of France.

Charles, therefore, called upon Henry to assist him, as he had bound himself to do. Henry required, however, to know first who was the real aggressor, and Wolsey crossed to Calais to hear the deputies from both sides (July 29, 1521.) Among the commissions which the Cardinal was charged with by Henry was the settling of the differences between the Emperor and Francis. Conferences were opened under Wolsey's presidency at Calais on Aug. 7. The Emperor had come to Bruges to be near at hand, and the Cardinal was requested by the deputies to negotiate with the Emperor direct owing to a hitch in the proceedings. Persuading the French deputies to remain at Calais until his return, Wolsey visited Charles at Bruges. It was while with the Emperor there that the Cardinal wrote the present letter, but, of course, his real business at Bruges was not to settle differences between Charles and Francis, as he says in his letter—that was only a ruse—but to conclude a secret offensive and defensive alliance against France, which had already been planned before Wolsey left England.

Mary Shelley Items.

There is also an extremely important series of five autograph letters of Mary W. Shelley, the second wife of the poet, Percy B. Shelley, addressed to Leigh Hunt and his wife. They are intimate letters and all relate to Shelley. Writing from Leghorn, Aug. 28, 1819, to Mrs. Leigh Hunt, she says:

We are very dull at Leghorn, and I can therefore write nothing to amuse you. We live in a little country house at the end of a green lane, surrounded by a podere; these podere are just the things Hunt would like. They are like our kitchen gardens, with the difference only that the beautiful fertility of this country gives them a large bed of cabbages is very picturesque in England, but here the furrows are alternated with rows of grapes festooned on their supporters; it is filled with olive, fig, and peach trees, and the hedges are of myrtle, which have just ceased to flower; their flower has the sweetest faint smell in the world, like some delicious spice; green grapy walks lead you through the vines; the people are always busy, and it is pleasant to see three or four of them transforming in one day a bed of Indian corn to one of celery. They work this hot weather in their shirts, or smock frocks, but their breasts are bare, their brown legs nearly the color, only with a tinge of red in it, with the earth they turn up. They sing not very melodiously, but very loud, Rossini's music, "Mi pevedral mi ti revedro," and they are accompanied by the cicala, a kind of little beetle that makes a noise with its tail as loud as Jenny can sing. They live on trees and three or four together are enough to deafen you. It is to the cicala that Anacreon has addressed an ode which they call "To a Grasshopper" in the English translations.

Well, here we live. I never am in good spirits, often in very bad, and Hunt's portrait has already seen me shed so many tears that, if it had his heart as well as his eyes, he would weep too in pity. * * * By the bye, a hint Hunt gave about portraits. The Italian painters are very bad, they might make a nose like Shelley's and perhaps a mouth, but I doubt it; but there would be no expression in it. They have no notion of anything except copying again and again their old masters, and somehow mere copying, however divine the original, does a great deal more harm than good.

Shelley has written a good deal and I have done very little since I have been in Italy. I have had so much to see and so many vexations, independent of those which God has kindly sent to wean me from the world if I were too fond of it. Shelley has not had good health by any means, and when getting better fate has ever contrived something to pull him back. He never was better than the last month of his stay in Rome, except the last week, then he watched sixty miserable deathlike hours without closing his eyes, and you may think what good that did him. * * * I have a word to say to Hunt of what he says concerning Italian dancing. The Italians dance very badly, they dress for their dances in the ugliest manner, the men in little doublets with a hat and feathers, they are very stiff, nothing but their legs move, and they twirl and jump with as ill grace as may be. It is not for their dancing but their pantomime that the Italians are famous. You remember what we said you on the Italian opera, they tell a story by action so that words appear perfectly superfluous things for them in that they are graceful, agile, impressive, and very exciting, so that I delight in nothing so much as in deep tragic ballet, but the dancing, unless, as they sometime do, they dance as common people, for instance, the dance of joy of the Venetian citizens on the return of Othello is very bad indeed.

£2,000 Legacy for Hunt.

Under date of 5 Bartholomew Place, Kentish Town, 30 October, 1826, Mrs. Shelley writes as follows to Leigh Hunt:

I told you long ago that our beloved lost Shelley intended on rewriting his will to have left you a legacy; I think the sum he mentioned was £2,000. I trust that hereafter you will not refuse to consider me your debtor for that sum, merely because I shall be bound to pay you by the laws of honor, instead of a legal obligation. You would, of course, be better pleased to have received it immediately from dear Shelley's bequest, but as it is well known that he intended to make such an one it is in fact that same thing, and so I hope by you to be considered. Besides, your kind heart will receive pleasure from the knowledge that you are bestowing on me the greatest pleasure I am capable of receiving. This is the second time I have informed from the moment I knew my situation to be such as it is. I didn't mention it because it seemed almost like an empty boast to talk and resolve on things so far off. I suppose I have a presentiment feeling haunts me as if this futurity were not very distant. I have spoken vaguely on the subject to you before, but now your having had a recent disappointment I have thought it as well to express in exact terms the meaning I attached to my expression. I have as yet made no will, but, if in the meantime I should chance to die, this paper will serve as a legal document to prove that I give and bequeath you, dear Leigh Hunt, the sum of two thousand pounds sterling. But I hope we shall both live, to accomplish dear Shelley's intentions, you for me as far as I can permit me to be their executor. I have mentioned this subject to none, and do not intend; an act is not aided by words, especially an act unfulfilled, nor do I see that this letter requires an answer, at least not till after the death of Sir Timothy Shelley, when perhaps this explanation would have come with a better grace, but I trust to your kindness to put my writing now to a good motive.

In a letter dated Putney, April, 1844, Mrs. Shelley says to Hunt:

Twenty-five years ago, in memory of what Shelley's intentions were, I said that you should be considered one of the legatees to the amount of £2,000. I need scarcely mention that when Shelley talked of leaving you this sum he contemplated reducing the other legacies, and that one among them is (by a mistake of the solicitor) just double what he intended it to be. Twenty years have, of course, much changed my position. Twenty years ago it was supposed that Sir Timothy would not live five years. Meanwhile a large debt has accumulated, for I must pay back on what Percy and I have subsisted, as well as what I borrowed for Percy's going to college. In fact, I scarcely know how our affairs will be. Moreover, Percy shares now my rights; that promise was made without his concurrence, and he must concur to render it of avail, nor do I like to ask him to do so till our affairs are so settled that we know what we shall have, whether Shelley's uncle may not go to law, in short, till we see our way before us. It is both my and Percy's great wish to feel that you are no longer so burthened by care and necessity, in that he is as desirous as I can be, but the form and the degree in which we can do this must at first be uncertain. From the time of Sir Timothy's death I shall give directions to my banker to honor your quarterly charges for £10 a quarter, and I shall take steps to secure this to you and to Marianne, if she should survive you. Percy has read this letter and approves. I know your real delicacy about money matters, and that you will at once be ready to enter to my views and feel assured that if any present debt should press if we have any command of money we will take care to free you from it. Anxiety we shall not have, for neither Percy nor I will allow ourselves to be anxious where matters of necessity are not concerned, but worry and business enough we shall have. I believe we are going into Hampshire on Monday. When we return we hope to see you, and Percy will call to see how you are, and, I hope, find you are better.

There are many other interesting and important items. A long letter of J. J. Rousseau, Nov. 4, 1765, relates of his "Dictionnaire de Musique." In the handwriting of Charles-Marie Bonaparte, father of Napoleon I., is a philosophical treatise of thirty-six small quarto pages. Ten lines of verses are in the autograph of Madame Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI. An important letter of Louis XIV is addressed to the King of England. There is a splendid letter of the Comtesse du Barry and a fine example of Catherine de Medici's. A series of letters on political and social topics is from Benjamin Disraeli to his sister.

FIXED HIS OWN SENTENCE.

"Two Years Will Do," He Told Judge Who Pitied Him.

McALESTER, Okla., Nov. 15.—Tom Wright of Self, Boone County, Ark., was permitted to fix his own sentence in the penitentiary by Judge Priestly Cole here. Wright pleaded guilty to shooting Constable Jack Larison here last July. Larison had discovered Wright in his back yard at night. Both men opened fire and both were injured.

Wright told the court he had served ten years in the Federal Penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth for killing a man in McAlester twelve years ago last February. Three weeks after being released he said he was forced to shoot his brother-in-law in self-defense at Denver, Col.

He declared he was trying to lead an honest life, but that his ungovernable temper always gets him into trouble. The Judge, pitying Wright, told the prisoner to name the number of years he should serve for shooting Larison. Wright said he "guessed two years would do." The Court then imposed the sentence.

PROUTY ON B. & M.'S PLIGHT

Says Trouble Is Due to Unchanged Board—No Receivership Likely.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 15.—Commissioner Prouty of the Interstate Commerce commission says in a statement to-day that the chief trouble with the Boston & Maine Railroad is that "its Directorate continues in control of the same crowd that has been responsible for past mismanagement." But he does not look for a receivership.

Regarding the road's request for financial relief by advancing its rates, the Commissioner says that, while some increases will be allowed, the road will not be permitted to raise its rates to yield anything like "the $5,000,000 which, he says, is needed.

Mr. Prouty has not been able to learn yet what ground there is for the accusations of traffic diversions. These will be investigated.

"In any event," said the Commissioner, "I think the Boston & Maine and New Haven traffic departments should be separated. There also will be an inquiry made as to whether the Boston & Maine should cancel any of its leases."

Urge Sending Italian Warships.

ROME, Nov. 15.—Many of the Italian newspapers to-day point out that most of the naval Powers have sent warships to Mexican waters and urge that Italy should be represented there, as her subjects and interests also require protection.

On an order signed by Justice John J. Delany of the Supreme Court, Sheriff George Emener of Queens yesterday attached the plant of the United States Metal Products Company, an $8,000,000 concern, at College Point, L. I. The attachment is to satisfy a claim against the company for $73,390 on two notes held by the Chase National Bank of Manhattan. One note is for $50,000, the other for $25,000, with allowances for partial payment.

Clayton E. Bailey, President of the company, and Frank E. Finnigan, its Vice President, said that the writ was the result of a misunderstanding, and that the matter would be soon straightened out. The plant was not shut down. It covers nine acres of ground.

At the Chase National Bank it was said that the attachment was levied to collect upon notes of the Metal Products Company, but that the solvency of the company was not in question. The bank simply desired a settlement on the notes, it was said, and if the company wanted a renewal it would have to go elsewhere.

A few days ago notice was sent out to the stockholders of the concern that the usual quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. would not be paid. Frederic Bowers, the Treasurer of the company, said yesterday that the dividend was passed because the stock had not earned sufficient in the past few months to warrant its payment.

The company, which manufactures metal trim for buildings, was founded by John W. Rapp in 1886 through a consolidation with the J. F. Blanchard Company of Long Island City. Last August Mr. Rapp sold out his holdings in the company and retired from the Presidency. Recently he formed an opposition concern, known as the Empire Art Metal Company, the capital stock of which is $250,000, and commenced the erection of a large factory opposite the one he formerly headed. The Directors of the opposition company are Rapp, Andrew J. Connell, former Vice President of the United States Metal Products Company, and William C. Lange, who was the purchasing agent of the old company.

A lively trade war has been looked forward to in College Point since it became known that Rapp intended to fight the old company. When he was its President 2,000 men were employed at the plant. This number was recently cut down to 500, according to reports current among College Point workmen, and a few days ago 300 more men were laid off. It is said that many of the old employes have been engaged by Rapp for his new enterprise.

When J. W. Rapp retired from the Presidency of the company in August last it became known for the first time that the entire stock of the United States Metal Products Company, amounting to $8,000,000, together with the stock of the Jamestown Hard Metal Company of Jamestown, N. Y., amounting to $2,000,000, had been underwritten by Tucker & Turner of Boston and had been taken over by the National Steel and Bronze Company of Boston as a holding company.

Mr. Rapp conceived the idea of manufacturing steel parts of fireproof buildings in 1886, and in running small business at Sixty-sixth Street and Third Avenue. The business prospered and the company moved to College Point in 1890. It supplied $750,000 worth of products to the Woolworth Building, which included 4,000 steel doors and 3,000 window frames. The company also furnished fireproof finishings for the Metropolitan Life Building, the McAlpin and Vanderbilt Hotels, and other large buildings.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Pressure has fallen generally except in New England, and the narrow trough of low pressure over the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys has developed sufficiently to cause a continuance of the unsettled rainy weather in the Middle Atlantic States, the Western lower lake region, the great central valleys, Kansas and Oklahoma. It is considerably cooler in the Middle Atlantic States, but elsewhere temperature changes were not of consequence. In the South Atlantic States cloudy weather Sunday will be followed by local rains Sunday night or Monday. In the Northwest there will be rains that will reach the upper lake region by Monday. It will be somewhat colder Sunday in the Ohio Valley, Tennessee, and the interior of the Gulf States, and warmer in the plains States and the Northwest. Elsewhere temperature changes will not be important.

FORECASTS FOR TO-DAY AND MONDAY.

Western New York—Unsettled Sunday, probably local rains; Monday cloudy and somewhat warmer, light to moderate east winds.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	43	37	4 P. M.	46	41
6 A. M.	40	35	5 P. M.	46	41

AINSWORTH'S GREAT RUN

Princeton Makes Thrilling Stand Under Its Own Goal Posts—No Open Playing.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 15.—Rising pluckily out of the throes of a disastrous season, the Yale football eleven fought Princeton tooth and nail to a 3-to-3 tie at Yale Field this afternoon in the last game ever to be played on this historic gridiron, while 35,000 spectators—mostly Yale sympathizers—followed every move of the big Blue team with boisterous enthusiasm, cheering wildly as Ketcham's men piled the Tiger rushers in a heap, and tore the Orange and Black line with a bruising attack. The battle was bitterly fought. The Yale grit and the bulldog spirit, which the romancers have put in college song and story, were there. Yale was fighting in the last ditch, the eleven brawny youths exerting themselves to the limit of physical effort, to pull the proud name of Eli back to where it used to be on the roll of football triumphs.

Princeton was crushed in the fury of the Yale uprising. The Tigers before the game looked like sure winners. There was more football at their command, and they came to New Haven with fire in their eyes. The snap and dash of Princeton's quick shift crumpled up like tissue paper as the Yale tacklers ferociously hurled the Tiger players headlong into the soft, scared turf. The machinelike smoothness of the Tiger attack never had a chance, the line of Blue giants defying every plunge with an aggressive defense which would not be denied.

In the second period, when Yale was within striking distance of the Princeton goal, Otis Guernsey was rushed into the game and kicked a field goal from the 30-yard line. A blaze of shimmering blue waved over the Yale stands. The cheers which greeted Guernsey's kick boomed forth for five minutes like a succession of cannon shots. The Yale players hugged him and hammered his back until he begged for mercy. Princeton was dumbfounded. The hordes from New Jersey could hardly believe that "Hobey" Baker's team, which rose to great possibilities against Harvard a week ago, had faltered in the face of this Yale team, which even Yale men admitted a few days ago wasn't much good.

The Princeton eleven felt the silence of the Princeton stands. They felt the depression of defeat hanging over them. Late in the third period, when Princeton's chances seemed to be growing dimmer, "Hobey" Baker took all the responsibility of saving Princeton's name on his own shoulders. A field goal and a tie was the best thing the Tigers could hope for. Either that or humiliating defeat.

Hobey Baker Saves Princeton.

"Hobey" brushed his blond hair back from his perspiring, mud-stained forehead. He dropped back to the 43-yard line. Even Princeton men whispered: "He will never do it." The Yale stands screamed for somebody to smash through and block that kick. Baker was cool under fire, and his coolness and his nerve commanded silence. From that big gathering of 35,000 no sound came. All eyes were glued on Baker. E. Trenkmann gave him a pretty pass. Baker dropped it to his toe, swung easily, and the ball spinning end over end sailed high over the crossbars, and Princeton's honor was safe.

Yale outplayed the Tigers all the way. Not once during the game was Princeton able to jam its way through the Yale line for a first down. The Blue wall of defense was solid, and the harder it was bruised the harder it fought back. Yale tackled savagely. The Princeton backs were thrown onto the ground with a fierceness which shook them from head to foot and made their teeth rattle. The players will wear the scars of this battle for many a day. "Buzz" Law, the Tiger punter, received a deep gash in the head early in the game. Yards of bandages were wrapped around the cut and Law played on. Before long the blood oozed through the bandages and more were applied, and still Law played on, crashing into the Yale line every time he was called upon and booted the ball in as beautiful an outburst of kicking as has been seen on a gridiron this season. At times Law reeled about dizzily from the exertion, but he stuck to his guns to the last, driving Yale back from the Tiger goal line again and again by his great kicks. When the game was over, Law and his bandaged head weren't forgotten. Guernsey of the Yale team also received a cut on the face, and he played through the game with a blood-stained countenance. "Stew" Baker went out of the game early with a twisted ankle. Talbot was laid out for a while, and so was Avery. It was a bruising, desperately fought game. Football of this kind is a man's work, every minute of it, and it's no pastime for faint hearts. It's grueling and a tax on courage, but it's thrilling and blood-stirring. After every scrimmage, when the players unraveled themselves from the melée, there was a look of pain beneath more than one dirty face.

Big Crowd Disappointed.

When the game was over a disappointed silent crowd filed out of the historic old football field. After all there was nothing to cheer. Princeton partisans had confidently expected that the Tigers would win easily, while Yale followers didn't know what to think. They just hoped for the best and got much more than they expected. A tie game is dissatisfying at best, but in its exhibition yesterday Yale really outdid itself, and showed the power which the team has been promising all season. And Yale will go after Harvard next Saturday just as viciously as it went after Princeton, and that ought to make Harvard do a little thinking.

Yale was on tiptoe every minute. At times the line was too anxious and got off its charge too quickly. The team suffered heavily from penalties for holding and off side play. The Yale ends, Avery and Carter, were down the field on every kick, and "Hobey" Baker was tackled so hard and so often before he got started that he was limp and bruised before the end came. Only once did he run back a punt, and then he went no more than ten yards. The Yale tackling was sure and deadly. Several times the Princeton backs were thrown so hard that they failed to hold on to the ball, while Yale handled the ball cleanly and with little fumbling, and one of the joys of the game to the Yale crowd was the spectacular way in which Wilson, the big quarter back, ran back Law's kicks.

Wilson was the bright spot in the Yale backfield. Early in the third period Law boomed a kick to Wilson on Yale's 25-yard line close to the west side of the gridiron. Wilson was off with a jump. He dodged past three Princeton tacklers and left them sprawling on the grass. He dashed up the side of the field, bowling over everybody who rushed at him with a straight arm push. Dodging beautifully through the bewildered Tiger team, Wilson raced 40 yards before he was brought down. He also broke loose on two other runs of 20 and 30 yards.

Ainsworth's Run to 6-Yard Line.

Ainsworth, with his head bundled in bandages, gave the crowd its greatest thrill in the last period. From the 40-yard line he broke through the left wing of the Princeton team and rushed along on a wild trip toward the Princeton goal. One by one he passed the Tiger tacklers. Three different men hurled themselves at Ainsworth and he scampered by them all. He tore along head down and with the ball clutched tightly under his arm.

Ainsworth was now clear of everybody but Fred Merrill, the Princeton quarter back, who was coming down the field like a whirlwind. Merrill was the last man between Ainsworth and a touchdown. He was the last man between Yale and victory. Ainsworth was running at top speed, and Merrill was coming like a cyclone. Ainsworth was almost on the goal line when Merrill hurled himself at the Yale runner's feet. Ainsworth was thrown heavily, but he had crossed the goal line, and the ball was Yale's on the 6-yard line.

HARVARD TRIUMPHS OVER BROWN ELEVEN

Crimson's Rearranged Line Develops Excellent Defensive Strength.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 15.—Harvard rolled up 37 points against Brown in the stadium this afternoon without much apparent effort, holding the visitors scoreless. The Crimson's "rearranged" line, as the week's shifts are termed at Harvard, as shown in the team which played through the first half, proved the wisdom of the changes in the opinion of the coaches by the defensive strength it showed against Brown's attack.

When the first half ended with the score 17 to 0, the game was deemed safe and the coaches sent in practically a new team. Aided by the breaks in luck of the game, 20 more points were scored by Harvard in the final two periods.

Harvard's first march for a score came early in the first period, shortly after Henry of Brown had tried to drop kick a field goal from Harvard's 40-yard line from the touchback, and the ball carried 58 yards. When Henry returned the punt Freedley ran it back to Harvard's 45-yard line. From that point Harvard's advance was steady up to the 20-yard line, with Brickley carrying the ball most of the distance. He dropped back on a first down as if to try a field goal, but Mahan caught the ball from Soucy and plunged straight through the centre for 19 yards, Brickley carrying it over on the next play for a touchdown. Hardwick kicked the goal. When the period ended Brown had the ball on its 13-yard line.

Brown lost ground in two plays after the second period began, and Henry forced to punt behind the goal line, paved the way for a fine goal from placement, which was kicked by Brickley. Henry's punt was caught by Freedley on Brown's 38-yard line as a fair catch, and Brickley then sent the ball straight as a bullet between the uprights about three feet above the cross bar. Brickley a few minutes later made a fairly good try for a field goal from the 53-yard line.

A 15-yard penalty imposed on Brown two plays after the ball had been put in play from the 20-yard line forced Henry to punt outside at Brown's 38-yard line. Harvard on the first play was penalized 5 yards for offside, but on the next Mahan made a long forward pass to Hardwick, who caught Williams on the 15-yard line and went over for a touchdown. He added another point by kicking the goal.

Willets who went in for Brickley in the second half, gave a fine exhibition of punting and when one of his kicks early in the third period was muffed by Dana at end, picked the ball up and ran for a touchdown from the 30-yard line. Willets kicked the goal. As the period was drawing to a close Harvard had begun a series of attacks on Brown's line, beginning on the 48-yard line, with McKinlock, who had replaced Mahan, doing the bulk of the work which placed the ball on Brown's 12-yard line as the period ended. Mills, who had gone in for Storer, tried a field goal standing on the 22-yard line, but the kick was blocked. Watson, who had replaced Freedley at quarter, recovered the ball on Brown's 17-yard line, and Bettle, who had replaced Bradlee, went over in three plays.

Then developed the spectacular play of the afternoon. Mills took Henry's kickoff on Harvard's 15-yard line, and, aided by splendid interference, ran down the center of the gridiron 65 yards for a touchdown. Willets kicked an easy goal. Harvard coaches then sent in more substitutes, who held Brown at all times safely. The lineup:

O'Brien	Left end	McNeill
Hitchcock	Left guard	Hazard
Soucy	Centre	Mitchell
Pennock	Right guard	Geld
Storer	Right tackle	Bartlett
Hardwick	Right end	McBee
Freedley	Quarter back	Gardner
Mahan	Right half back	Bean
Brickley	Full back	Casey

Touchdowns—Brickley, Hardwick, Coolidge, Bettle, Mills. Goals from touchdowns—Hardwick, 2; Willetts, 2. Goal from field—Brickley. Substitutes—For Harvard: Dana for O'Brien, Rettle for Bradlee, Cowen for Hitchcock, R. Curtis for Gilman, McKinlock for Mahan, Willets for Brickley, Coolidge for Dana, Bigelow for Soucy, L. Curtis for Hardwick, Watson for Freedley, Swigert for Watson, Mills for Storer, Emory for Willetts, Wallace for Bettle, Felton for Coolidge, Underwood for Mills, Whitney for R. Curtis, Withington for Underwood, Rollts for Wallace. For Brown: Chandler for Casey, Ward for Hazard, Blue for Andrews, Brown for Geld, Gotshall for Ward, Bailey for McNeill, Fraser for Blue. Referee—W. M. Morice. Umpire—C. S. Williams. Head linesman—G. N. Bankhart. Time of quarters—Fifteen minutes each.

CORNELL WINS A GAME.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 15.—Cornell's reorganized eleven proved too much for Lafayette to-day and the men from Pennsylvania were downed by a score of 10 to 3. With the exception of considerable careless fumbling, Cornell's new team worked well, seeming more powerful on the offense.

Lafayette scored first when Scheeren dropped a goal from Cornell's fifteen-yard-line in the first period. Barrett tied the score in the second period by a drop kick from the fifteen-yard line. He also tried several other drop kicks which failed. In the third part Barrett made twenty-five yards on a fake kick. Successive rushes brought the ball to Lafayette's one-yard line, where Barrett carried it over. There was no scoring in the fourth period.

The game was loosely played, Barrett's brilliant work being about the only redeeming feature. Scheeren, J. Diamond, and Kennedy played best for the visitors. Cornell's showing was encouraging to her followers, despite the fact that at times the Red and White lacked the necessary punch. Fritz and Sheldon played well at their new positions on the wings. Line-up and summary:

Williams	Centre	Lahr
Frick	Right guard	Woodward
Williamson	Right tackle	Wagenhurst
Fritz	Right end	R. Diamond
Barrett	Quarter	J. Diamond
Collyer	Right half back	Brown
Lahr	Full back	Scheeren

Referee—F. J. Crollus, Dartmouth. Umpire—C. J. McCarthy, Georgetown. Linesman—A. W. Bisley, Columbia. Cornell scoring—Touchdown, Barrett; goal from field, Barrett; goal from touchdown, Barrett. Lafayette scoring—Goal from field, Scheeren. Substitutions—Cornell: Shuler for Phillipi, Cook for Williams, Munsick for Frick, Taber for Barrett. Lafayette: Hammer for Kennedy, Blackburn for Hammar, Edminster for Pardee, Kelly for Woodward, Cochren for Brown. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes each.

MICHIGAN ATTACK CRUSHES OLD PENN

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 15.—Using the same terrific line attack that crushed Syracuse, the football eleven of the University of Michigan to-day defeated Pennsylvania 13 to 0. Michigan simply battered the defense of the Easterners to pieces. At no time during the game was Pennsylvania even dangerous.

Pennsylvania's attack was as erratic as her defense was mediocre. Now and then, at wide intervals, one of Brooke's men skirted a Michigan end for six or seven yards' gain. Attempts to pierce Michigan's line were so unsuccessful during the first half that they were practically abandoned during the final period. Pennsylvania, the same as Michigan, gained little from forward pass plays. It was a distinct victory for old-fashioned, sledge-hammer football.

There were few sensations. The greatest of these came during the first period, when Michigan secured the ball in Pennsylvania's territory. The Wolverine linemen opened big holes and the Wolverine backs did the rest. Craig, Galt, and Hughitt seldom had to be content with gains of less than five yards, and, finally, Craig crossed the goal line. Paterson kicked goal. One of the few forward passes successfully executed helped give Michigan a second touchdown. The play was made during the second period. It was a toss from Hughitt to Lyons that netted 25 yards, and it put the Yost men within striking distance of the Blue and Red goal. Craig crashed through tackle for a five-yard gain, which scored the touchdown. Paterson's attempt to kick the goal failed, the ball hitting the crossbar.

Holding in the line cost Michigan a third touchdown. In the third period Paterson dropped back apparently to attempt a field goal. A trick play resulted, however, and Hughitt sprinted 30 yards for a score. The ball was brought back and Michigan was penalized 15 yards.

Coach Brooke made a desperate effort to strengthen his eleven in the second half. He called on the crippled Minds to replace Avery at full back, and the fleet Marshall took Merrill's place at quarter back. Pennsylvania then shifted to the open game on offense, using Minds to start forward passes, but they were invariably unsuccessful.

More than 20,000 persons witnessed the struggle. The grand stands and bleachers were jammed to capacity, and hundreds stood in the rain and snow throughout the game. The line-up and summary:

Musser	Left tackle	Crane
Paterson (Capt.)	Centre	Simpson
Allmendinger	Right guard	Carter
Pontius	Right tackle	Harris
Lyons	Right end	Koons
Hughitt	Quarter back	Merrill
Galt	Right half back	Hill
Torbet	Full back	Avery

Referee—Mr. Eckersall, Chicago. Umpire—Mr. Wrenn, Harvard. Head linesman—Mr. Marshall, Harvard. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes. Michigan scoring: Touchdowns—Craig, 2. Goals from touchdowns—Paterson, 1 in two attempts.

Substitutions: Michigan—McHale for Cochrane, Scott for Pontius, Catlett for Galt, Quinn for Torbet. Pennsylvania—Murdock for Peden, Bloom for Murdock, Wolf for Carter, McCall for Koons, Marshall for Merrill, Bolger for Hill, Minds for Avery, Avery for Bolger, Bolger for Minds.

CHICAGO IS CHAMPION.

Minnesota Defeated in Brilliant Game at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 15. — Premier football honors of the Western intercollegiate conference for 1913 to-night rest with the University of Chicago by virtue of its 13-to-7 victory over the University of Minnesota on Northrup Field this afternoon. Although the game was replete with flashes of individual brilliancy on the part of both winners and losers, credit for the victory must be about equally apportioned among the Maroon players.

Nearly 25,000 spectators saw the Chicago eleven break down Minnesota's defense in the first period. Within eight minutes of actual play, after a series of successful forward passes, Gray, the Maroon left half, scored the first touchdown from Minnesota's two-yard line, when Norgren had placed the ball by a spectacular run of more than twenty-five yards. After the first touchdown Minnesota's defense strengthened, and for the next two quarters neither team scored.

In the fouth period Chicago executed two forward passes that brought the ball to Minnesota's three-yard line. Capt. Norgren then hit the Minnesota line for two short, jamming gains, which gave Chicago its second touchdown.

In the third period Minnesota, which heretofore had used only straight football, opened up with a number of forward passes and fake formations which formed excellent ground gainers. At no time, however, did Minnesota dangerously menace the Chicago goal line until after Chicago had scored its second touchdown in the fourth quarter.

Shaughnessy, who was one of the most brilliant individual players for Minnesota, was responsible directly for Minnesota's touchdown. He broke up the Chicago defense, and carried the ball over for a touchdown after considerable ground gains.

At this juncture Minnesota rooters put forward a splendid display of enthusiasm, and their team seemed to respond vigorously to this stimulus from the crowds.

After Solon kicked the goal Minnesota players began a desperate effort to tie the score, but the Maroon defense held firm, and it was one of "see-saw line" for the remainder of the contest. The line-up:

Minnesota.	Position.	Chicago.
Sawyer	Left guard	Harrit
Dunnigan	Centre	Desjardien
Robertson	Right guard	Scanlon
Rosenthal	Right tackle	Goettler
Barron	Right end	Baumgartner
Fewmier	Quarter back	Russell
Tollefson or Calmon	Left half back	Gray
Lawler	Right half back	Norgren
Mattern	Full back	Pierce
Shaughnessy

Referee—J. C. Masker, Northwestern. Umpire—Albert Benbrook, Michigan. Head linesman—Capt. M. C. Mumma, West Point.

Harvard Freshmen Beat Yale Lads.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 15.—The Harvard and Yale Freshman football teams played a close game on the field back of the Stadium to-day, Harvard winning 9 to 6. A safety, a touchdown by Harte and a goal made up the Harvard scoring. Yale played a punting game in the first half, but in the second tried line plunging and was more successful. Bentley ran thirty-five yards for a touchdown. Berman of Harvard had to be carried off the field on account of injuries.

INDIANS SMOTHER DARTMOUTH, 35-10

Hanoverians No Match for the Wonderful Carlisle Team in Game at the Polo Grounds.

GREEN LINE CRUMPLES

Indians' "Scoop-Shovel" and Criss-Cross Attack Deadly—10,000 Persons See Contest.

The hitherto invincible team of Dartmouth, dreaming that the season's football championship was firmly in its grasp, suffered a rude awakening at the Polo Grounds yesterday, when the New Hampshire mountaineers engaged in their season's finale against the copper-colored warriors from Carlisle. The awakening was more than rude; it was cruel. With an attack that crushed every effort toward resistance, the wonderful Warner machine tossed the pale-faced opponents around like ten-pins and, once started under full speed, Dartmouth's attempt to check it was pitiful. The score under which Dartmouth's greatest chance of a lifetime was buried was 35 to 10. A crowd of 10,000 persons saw the contest.

For a brief period in the first half of the battle the Dartmouth dream appeared likely to be realized. A drop-kick for a goal by Capt. Hogsett in the first period, after the Indians had pounded their way for thirty yards to a touchdown, was followed by a brilliantly executed forward pass from Ghee to Loudon, who received the ball in the end zone for a touchdown. Hogsett kicked an easy goal and the Dartmouth rooters went into a frenzy. They were doubtful only about the final score.

When the half ended with Dartmouth leading 10 to 7 the Hanover followers, despite Carlisle's steady smashing through the Dartmouth line, could see nothing ahead but victory. In the two closing periods Carlisle so far outclassed their opponents that Dartmouth at times looked like a high school eleven trying to stop a big college team, and the four touchdowns against a Dartmouth zero gives a true line on the playing of the two elevens.

Indians' Concerted Smash.

Carlisle had about everything that an up-to-date football eleven has any use for. The back field plowed its way through the Green line as if it was an open street, and played no favorites in picking out holes. The centre was the same as the wings. The Indians showed a concerted smash against the mid-section of the Hanover line that Dartmouth simply could not check. In a compact group of four Capt. Walch and his three mates moved and cut

NEW YORK AND FORDHAM UNIVERSITIES VANQUISHED ON GRIDIRON---CORNELL A VICTOR

WESLEYAN TAKES GAME WITH N. Y. U.

With a back field that seldom failed, Wesleyan defeated New York University yesterday afternoon by the score of 20 to 0. The New York men put up a hard fight and came near scoring against their opponents twice, once on a forward pass and once on a drop kick that failed by a foot. Wesleyan's scoring came as the result of phenomenal gains by Dietjen. Time after time he got away with long runs and only the strength of the Violet line kept him from scoring oftener. He scored twice in the first quarter and once in the third, Capt. Eustis kicking two goals.

Coming against a team that has been beaten consistently this season, the Middletown men struck an unpleasant surprise. Early in the second quarter Huntley ran the ball through centre for a gain of twenty-eight yards before he was pulled down by Dietjen, a forward to McDermott touched his hands, but the half back let it slip and New York lost a chance for a sure touchdown over a clear field.

In the beginning of the second half McCulloch took the ball on the kick-off and ran it back for twenty yards. Huntley followed with a run for six yards and Wiener advanced the ball thirty more on a forward. Huntley attempted a drop kick and went wide by a foot. Then followed a kicking duel in which Huntley stumbled as he caught Wesleyan's punt, losing ten yards.

New York's line held wonderfully. Time after time Wiener at left tackle broke through the Wesleyan's offense and nailed the man with the ball. Wesleyan gained little through the line, trusting more to end runs. In the back field New York was particularly weak, showing little scoring power except for the work of Huntley, who tore through the Wesleyan line for several long gains. The batting of New York showed steady improvement except in the case of Dietjen, who always seemed to slip through.

The first score of the game came at the end of the first six minutes of play. Dietjen dropped New York's punt, recovered it, wheeled and tore around and through the Violet tackles for sixty yards and a touchdown. In the same quarter Dietjen made another long run. Getting the ball on a double pass, he sped away for twenty-five yards to the ten-yard line, taking the ball through on a rush through centre. Again in the third quarter Dietjen scored for the visitors, carrying the ball around left end for the second touchdown. Capt. Eustis kicked two out of three goals.

Wesleyan's line did not show the strength of the Violet, letting Wiener through several times for losses. The heavy tackle dropped his man hard and played the best defensive game of any of the New York men. He showed up well also in the forward passing way with two forward passes, one on a double play, which netted each time about 30 yards. Francis, left half for Wesleyan, lost the ball twice on fumbles on New York's punts, dropping the sphere as he was tackled. Each time the fumble cost Wesleyan a heavy loss.

Toward the close of the game Wesleyan tried open work with but fair success, except for one gain of 20 yards. Huntley breaking up four forward passes. New York used the forward several times to good advantage, showing the game style of work that has this year appeared on Ohio Field. In punting New York had a slight advantage.

The work of Dietjen was undoubtedly the feature of the game. His runs seemed too much for the New York tackles to solve, and his speed made him sure of touchdowns each time he had an open field ahead of him. Eustis tried one place kick in the last quarter, but it failed of success. His work in the back field did not gain the ground for Wesleyan which Dietjen's did. In tearing the Middletown back field showed superior to that of the New Yorkers. The line-up:

O'Donnell	Left guard	Gordon
Roschbaum	Centre	Hingely
Torrance, (Capt.)	Right guard	Alison
Mackay	Right tackle	Willcox
Waldman	Right end	E. T. Eustis
Huntley	Quarter back	Dietjen
Baldie	Right half back	E. N. Eustis (C.)
Van Michow	Full back	McKenzie

Kings County Cricket Election.

For the twenty-third consecutive year Dr. Ernest C. Huskinson was elected President of the Kings County Cricket Club at its annual meeting held yesterday. Since Dr. Huskinson has held office the club has twice won the championship of the Metropolitan District Cricket League and has recently added a large number of new members to the roll. The other officers elected were: John Bottomley, Vice President; E. J. Atwood, Treasurer; C. A. Hoyle, 102 Everson Street, Brooklyn, Secretary; E. J. Atwood, Captain; Harry Williams, Vice Captain; Rowland Belgrave, Captain second eleven; W. Williams, Vice Captain.

FORDHAM TROUNCED, 60-0.

Holy Cross Has Clear Lead for Catholic Colleges' Championship.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 15.—By defeating Fordham University eleven on Fitton Field to-day, in an easy one-sided game of football, 60 to 0, Holy Cross added another laurel to its credit for the championship of the Catholic colleges of the East, having already won a victory over Boston College, and having only Georgetown to tackle in the near future. From the opening period until the close of the fourth, the New York collegians did not have any real opportunity to score on the Purple team, while on the other hand little difficulty was encountered by the Holy Cross team in transporting the pigskin over Fordham's line for additions to their total.

In the opening period Fordham tried hard to hold the Holy Cross players, but only succeeded in doing this for about five minutes, after which the local team sent Lee, the fast right halfback, over for the initial touchdown. Fifty-seven yards were made by Lee in making the first touchdown, the player, after receiving the ball in a scrimmage, going around the Fordham end without any interference. Brawley sent the ball through the uprights for the first goal. The remainder of the opening period proved a one-sided fight, with Holy Cross having no trouble in holding their Manhattan Island opponents, who made several bold attempts to break through the Purple line without any real result.

A few minutes after the start of playing in the second period O'Brien of the Holy Cross squad, after a hard uphill fight, including two stiff scrimmages, managed to capture the leather, and carry it over Fordham's line for a touchdown, Brawley kicking the goal from the touchdown. Donovan, the Holy Cross full back, within three minutes of O'Brien's scoring, after his team had recovered the leather on the kick-off, carried it for twenty yards for the third touchdown of the battle, but this time Brawley missed on his footwork. The remainder of the play in the second period was in favor of Holy Cross, the local gridiron warriors getting the ball and making large gains by plowing through Fordham's line, but was finally forced back by the New York players, only to give Lee another opportunity to make a fifty-three-yard dash for a count after O'Brien had intercepted a forward pass delivered by one of the visiting players, who previously claimed the ball on a fumble. The score at the end of the first half was: Holy Cross, 27; Fordham, 0.

Fordham in the third period managed in the latter half of the same to get the leather on Holy Cross's 3-yard line, the nearest they had succeeded in their endeavors to score, and would have sent one of their number across the Purple's line had a forward pass tried by the New Yorkers been properly enacted. Lee of the Holy Cross team carried again in the third quarter, carrying the ball over for a touchdown after O'Brien had taken it down the field for a 35-yard gain, but Brawley proved unable to find the space between the goal posts. In this section of play's contest, before the Fordham lads made their only large gain, Lee duplicated his previous stunt with a 60-yard dash and O'Brien added another touchdown to Holy Cross's total by a 45-yard sprint, after which Ostergren, last year's Captain of the local gridiron warriors, sent the leather through the posts for a goal, the other being missed by the former leader.

McCarthy, who replaced Lee in the final period, proved also a hero and a good student at the game, scoring a touchdown on a freak performance; the player fumbling the ballon a back pass and recovering it after it had rolled some feet down the field, although interfered with by several of the Fordham men. In the middle of the period McCarthy, not to be outclassed by his predecessor in the line-up, secured the leather in a light scrimmage and carried it across the New Yorkers' right end for the last count of the game, Brawley kicking both goals.

Holy Cross.	Position.	Fordham.
McCabe, Ahearn	Left end	Viviano, Curren, Brady
O'Connor Ostergren, O'Keefe	Left tackle	Dunn, Cotter
Brawley	Centre	Wynyard

COLGATE WINS AGAIN.

Syracuse Last Victim of Little College's Eleven—Score, 35 to 13.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 15.—Colgate University brought to a close a most successful football season when it scored a 35 to 13 victory over Syracuse here this afternoon. Only for an instant did Syracuse have even so much as a hope of victory, and this one faint gleam was destroyed when Ellery Huntington, playing a most remarkable game at quarter back for Colgate, went through the entire field for a touchdown from the kick-off. His run of 85 yards will go down into history as one of the greatest features of the 1913 season.

Colgate was the first to score, taking the ball on the Syracuse 34-yard line when it was fumbled by an Orange back. By steady plowing through the centre arch they smashed their way across the goal line. Huntington added one point on the goal.

When the Maroon forced their way down into Syracuse territory for the second time Quarter Back Huntington called upon Brooke to try his first goal from a placement. The ball was snapped back from the 12-yard line and the big tackle put across the first of three goals from the field.

A double pass preceding a forward pass gave the ball to Seymour of the Orange, and the diminutive quarter back reeled off forty yards, aided by the excellent interference of Travis for the first Syracuse touchdown. Castle kicked the goal, and hopes ran high. A few minutes later Castle took the ball on a wide end run, and, after a sprint of fifty yards, put the total for Syracuse at 13. His attempt at goal failed.

Twelve of the fifteen thousand people in the stands were now yelling for an Orange victory. The team was fighting gamely, and seemed equally plucky the Maroon. It was only an instant, however, until Huntington made his memorable dash for the next score.

YALE OUTPLAYS TIGER IN 3-3 TIE

body but Hobey Baker, playing far back toward the Princeton goal. The Princeton Captain alone could save Princeton now. Baker set himself like a panther ready to spring. Ainsworth rushed along, first trying to dodge one way, then the other. It was a battle of wits. Baker wouldn't move, but just waited until he was sure which way Ainsworth was going to dash. For a moment it looked as if Ainsworth was free to pass. But Baker threw himself at the galloping half back. His effort carried him clear of the ground, and he went at him in the air. Both of Baker's arms clutched themselves around Ainsworth's legs, and he began to topple over. There was so much force in his rush, though, that when Baker struck him he did not have power enough to push him back, so Ainsworth fell over toward the Tiger goal line, just six yards from the coveted chalk mark. It was the best Princeton tackle of the game. It had to be and Baker knew it.

Ainsworth's run had carried him 34 yards and he had placed the Yale team in a position for what seemed like a sure touchdown. Only 6 yards from the goal line and four chances to push it over. The task of plunging was put up to "Dave" Dunn, the full back. Dunn doubled up like a jackknife and shot into the line head first with five other back field men shoving him along. The Princeton line rocked under the attack for a moment. Then the two lines rose slowly and steadily. There was a moment of terrific strain. The mass of players quivered for a moment and then Princeton, in its might, gave one supreme charge and the line fell over backward. Dunn hadn't gained more than a yard. Again he tried it and got only a yard.

Bulldog Stopped at Goal Line.

Princeton's stubborn stand was a joy to watch. The line fought back bravely and persistently, and when Dunn came on a third time with a savage rush he was thrown back for a loss. Three downs and the goal line was still 4 yards away. The Princeton stands shook under the roar of the howling thousands.

"Hold 'em, Princeton, hold 'em," they yelled.

Princeton was standing almost on its own goal line in this final charge, but it measured up to the great task. The Blues' driving power had met its match. The danger of the situation had spurred Princeton on to one of the pluckiest stands ever seen on a gridiron. Yale's smashing attack was subdued when victory was within its reach. The line-plunging forces were exhausted.

As a last resort Yale tried a forward pass. Dunn dropped back and made the throw, while Carter and Guernsey rushed over the Tiger line and waited for the ball. It went sailing straight for Carter's outstretched hands, when Law leaped into the air and intercepted the throw. Princeton was saved. Then Law went far back over his goal line and punted out of danger.

Yale was always threatening. In the last period Guernsey had another fine chance for a field goal from the 17-yard line Phillips, the Princeton tackle, was through the Yale line like a shot and blocked the kick as it left the ground. Again Princeton was saved.

In the third period Guernsey attempted another field goal from the 50-yard line. The kick was a beauty, but it missed the goal posts by only a narrow margin. "Hobey" Baker made an attempt at a kick from placement from the 50-yard line, but he failed to get the ball high enough off the ground.

While the game was an exciting, spirited contest, with plenty of action and some thrills, there was not a single feature of the open game about it, except the kicking and punting duel, first between Law and Knowles and later between Law and Guernsey. Law had decidedly the best of it. The running game which Princeton showed flashes of against Harvard was missing. Yale had nothing but conventional line plunges. It looked very much as if the Princeton team had played itself out against Harvard last week. The backfield did not show anything like the power it showed last week. Strelt, the Tigers' best line breaker, was disabled early in the game and Fred Trenkmann, his substitute, was stopped by the Yale forwards.

It was Autumn's most delightful football day. There was just enough sting in the November air to make costly furs becoming on pretty girls. The crowd rolled into town from early morning until game time. Seventeen special trains brought nearly 20,000 visitors from New York. Hundreds of automobiles brought others. It was the greatest gathering of its every witnessed a Princeton game here, and was a fitting finale for Yale's historic gridiron. Next year the big games will be played in the new Coliseum, or the Yale Bowl, as they call it.

Plenty of Food on Hand.

Years of experience have taught New Haven restaurant owners that football crowds are hungry. They had plenty of food on hand to-day and served it quickly.

Nobody went hungry. The Hotel Taft was the centre of all the beauty of the "effete East." The hotel lobby was jammed from early morning, and the dining rooms were crowded. Princeton and Yale parties mingled with each other in good-natured rivalry. It seemed as if all the chrysanthemums in the world were brought here to-day. Every Princeton girl wore a yellow one as large as a grape fruit. The Yale girls wore white ones, nestling prettily against their furs. It was an ideal day for the display of fashion, and it was taken advantage of generally. There was one girl who received more glances of admiration than perhaps any other. In the first place, she was very pretty. And then she wore a velvet gown of bright orange, trimmed with black fur. No wonder the other girls who sat near her were jealous.

The crop of college flags and pennants grows every year. Nearly every person in the huge crowd had a pennant or wore the colors. And it was a picture of delight, those packed stands sparkling with color in the afternoon sunlight. The greater part of the crowd walked out to Yale Field and walked back. The streets were jammed all day long. Badges and tin bulldogs and tin tigers were for sale on every corner.

In one shop window was a group entitled "A Live Roast." There was a big Bengal tiger roasting on a gridiron under which was a roaring fire. Over it stood a Yale chef attending to the roasting. There was a crowd in front of the window most of the day, because the tail wiggled and the tiger rolled its eyes and opened its mouth as it was being roasted.

The crowd went to the field early. Soon after 1 o'clock the stands were well filled, and when the game started there wasn't an empty seat in the place. Yale's cheering and singing section made more noise and warbled better than they have been reported. The opening shot this afternoon came just when the Princeton team appeared. The whole Yale section barked out:

Brek-ek-ek-ex-coax-coax,
O-oo, O-oo, Parabalou,
Yale, Yale, Yale, Pe-l-i-c-e-t-o-n.

New Yale Song.

Yale had a new song, called "Good Night, Princeton," which caught on well. The singers offered it early in the game, when they saw that Princeton wasn't going to do as much to Yale as everybody expected. The ditty went:

Good night, poor Princeton,
You're tucked in tight.
When the big line
Gets after you,
Princeton, good night.

After Guernsey had drop-kicked the ball over the crossbar and put Yale in the lead, the singing section broke into Yale's class chant:

Oh, more work for the undertaker,
Another little job for the casket maker.

Between the halves the Princeton cheering section tried to brighten up its dying hopes with "Old Nassau," which rang across the field in deep bass melody. And they also sang about "Crashing Through the Line of Blue," but there wasn't any crashing through. It also chanted that Yale could not twist the Tiger's tail, but Yale came very near it. The Tigers' locomotive cheer snapped across the field in answer to every Yale cheer. Princeton kept it right up to the last. The team was making a good fight and deserved it. Win or lose, Princeton always cheers. Princeton also kept things lively with the song about "Going Back to Nassau Hill."

It was a tired troop of athletes who hobbled slowly off the field after the game. Both teams were pretty well played out, but Princeton was just about all in. The finish looked the fireworks and spectacular demonstration of students which would have happened if either team had won, and the crowd surged on the gridiron after the game and stood to listen to the Yale stands cheer all the players. To many Yale men it was almost as good as a victory, for the team, generally discredited, has shown that it is deserving of a lot of praise. And now on to Cambridge.

HOW GAME WAS PLAYED.

Tigers Outplayed in Close Formations and Kicking Duel.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 15.—The weather conditions could not have been better for to-day's historic struggle. It was neither hot nor cold, and there was no wind to bother the punters. The gridiron was in fairly good shape, soft in places, but not enough to interfere with the running plays. The first period developed into a kicking duel between Law and Knowles, with the Tiger booter having the better of it. Princeton won the kick-off and defended the north goal. Pendleton kicked to H. Baker, who was downed on the twenty-five-yard line. Law punted on the first down to Wilson, who was tackled by "Stew" Baker, whose ankle was injured, and he had to give way to Lamberton. In one of the early scrimmages Law's head was cut, and Trainer Keene Fitzpatrick bandaged it.

Knowles jammed through the Princeton line for three yards, but then Princeton stopped the Yale rushes and there was an exchange of kicks. Law's punts got away beautifully, high and and spinning. The Princeton ends were early outplayed by the Yale ends, and while Wilson was successful in running back kicks the Yale ends had Baker smothered before he started. Law sent a high kick to Wilson on Yale's 35-yard line, and after Knowles and Ainsworth had found the Tiger line solid, the former punted to Baker, who was tackled so hard by Getchare that the Princeton Captain dropped the ball and Talbot recovered it on Princeton's 35-yard line. Yale was penalized five yards for offside play just before the first period ended.

The second period opened with Yale singing, "Good Night, Princeton." Knowles got away a long kick to Baker, who caught the ball on the six-yard line and was hurried back over the three-yard line by Avery, who made a vicious tackle. Law, from behind the Tiger goal line, punted out to Wilson, who made a fair catch on the 30-yard line. Yale was about to try a kick from placement, when Referee Lea Reed penalized Yale 15 yards for holding. Glick then made a spectacular quarter back run for 30 yards around Yale's left wing and planted the ball in midfield.

Law then booted a spiral to Wilson who ran back 15 yards before he was nailed. Princeton was missing tackles frequently while Yale's work in this direction was extremely effective. Talbo was injured in a scrimmage but he resumed playing. Law attempted a long end run. He went all the way across the field but was nailed by Carter before he got ahead any. The Tiger kicker then shot a high rocket to Ainsworth, who fumbled but Dunn was right behind him and fell on the ball. Princeton was penalized 15 yards for holding, and it was Yale's ball on Princeton's 32-yard line.

Ainsworth smashed through Princeton for eight yards and Dunn then carried the ball around the end for 3 more. Law punted on the 22-yard line, and Guernsey was sent into the game in place of Knowles. Guernsey dropped back to the 30-yard line and made a pretty drop kick high over the cross bar. All the pent-up enthusiasm in the Yale stands broke loose with cheers that were deafening.

After several exchanges of kicks Princeton tried a rushing game and sent Strelt into the line for three plays. He was injured and had to be taken from the game. Fred Trenkmann taking his place at full back. Law punted back to Baker on the 50-yard line, who made a fair catch. The Tiger Captain attempted to kick a goal from placement, but the try was a fizzle. It was Yale's ball on Princeton's 45-yard line when the first half ended.

Ainsworth caught Pendleton's kick-off in the second half and ran back to the 30-yard line before he was brought to earth. Guernsey kicked to Hobey Baker, who got away for a 10-yard rush before he was downed. Law kicked back to Wilson on the 25-yard line, and then the Yale quarter back tore 40 yards on a run before he was checked on Princeton's 40-yard line. Lamberton was hurt and Brown took his place on Princeton's right end.

After the kicking game got monotonous, Wilson ran back one of Law's punts 25 yards. Wilson then gave the Princeton lines for an 8-yard gain in two rushes, and brought the ball to midfield, where Guernsey tried a field goal. It was a long, high ball, but cleared the goal posts to one side by a few yards.

In the punting match Law steadily outkicked Guernsey, and one of his punts was caught by Wilson on Yale's four-yard line. Guernsey punted from behind his own goal line to Baker on the thirty-two-yard line. After Trenchmann failed to gain in the line, Law tried a forward pass, which was intercepted by Avery before Baker could reach it. The Princeton Captain then dropped back to the forty-three-yard line and kicked a field goal which made the score 3 to 3.

Now it was Princeton's turn to howl, and howl they did. Just before the third period ended Yale's smashing offense got working, and Ainsworth was jammed through the Princeton line for twelve yards on three tries.

The final period opened with the ball in Yale's possession in midfield. Guernsey punted to Baker on the 15-yard line and Law returned the ball to Ainsworth on Princeton's 40-yard line. Ainsworth fooled the Tiger ends completely and rushed by the second ary defense at top speed. He raced along the west side of the gridiron until he had passed everybody but Hobey Baker. The Princeton leader dived for Ainsworth as he rushed by and threw him heavily on the 6-yard line.

Dunn tried three times in vain to batter his way through the Tigers when there was a touchdown within his grasp. The Princeton line rose beautifully to the occasion and repulsed Yale's vicious onslaught. Yale then tried to make a forward pass into the end zone. Dunn threw the ball straight toward Avery and Ainsworth, and just as Avery was about to grasp it the figure of Law loomed up before him and he smeared the pass and saved the day for the Tigers.

Law kicked out of danger, and with both teams unable to make any headway by the running game, they resorted to kicking again. Guernsey punted to Law who fumbled and Talbot fell on the ball on the 18-yard line. Guernsey then went back to the 25-yard line for another attempt at field goal. Here was Yale's last chance. The crowd looked on silently and anxiously. He was directly in front of the goal line and the outlook for the Tigers was not bright.

Guernsey had just booted the ball, and as it was leaving his toe Phillips came tearing through the Yale defense and blocked the kick. Brown fell on the ball, and recovered it for Princeton. Pendleton was hurt, but he went back into the game. Yale sent in Nate Wheeler in place of Ainsworth, but the blonde half back was in but a few minutes when he was hurt and gave way to "Bud" Wiser. Toward the close of the game Guernsey made another attempt at field goal from the thirty-three-yard line. He missed by a narrow margin. After that Law and Guernsey kept the ball in the air most of the time, and the ball was on Princeton's forty-yard line when Dave Fultz's whistle ended the struggle. The line-up:

Yale.	Position.	Princeton.
Talbot	Left tackle	Phillips
Ketcham	Left guard	Semmons

Referee—W. H. Lengford, Trinity. Umpire—Neil Snow, Michigan. Head linesman—David L. Fultz, Brown. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes each. Yale scoring: Goal from field—Guernsey. Princeton scoring: Goal from field—H. Baker.

Substitutions: Yale—Guernsey for Knowles, Hubbard for Carter, Wheeler for Ainsworth, Wiser for Wheeler. Princeton—Lamberton for S. Baker, Brown for Lamberton, F. Trenkmann for Strelt.

ELI'S TEAM MADE GOOD.

Up to Yale Standard, Coaches Assure Players—No Serious Injuries.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 15.—Members of the Yale eleven took the congratulations of their college mates and friends with the response that they had opportunities to win and failed to embrace them. The Yale coaches assured the team that it gave an excellent account of itself, and that it deserved to rank as an eleven of the Yale standard. Urged to discuss the game, Capt. Ketcham said:

"I am disappointed that we could not win the game, but I am well satisfied with the work of the team. They did well, but they did not seem to have the final strike when we reached the region of the Princeton goal line. It was a hard, clean game, and I am, as I said, both surprised and disappointed that we did not win it. Princeton played a good game, and made use of its opportunities. It was not, however, as strong an eleven as I expected to meet."

Asked whether the two Yale-Princeton tie scores in consecutive years made him feel that a change in the playing rules was desirable, the Captain said:

"I do not think that the two scores show any need for rule revision. We might have used some of our opportunities better."

Upon the conclusion of the game Percy Haughton, the Harvard head coach, extended his congratulations to the Yale coaches and said:

"It's a shame you didn't win. You can depend on it, though, that Harvard will be right there next week."

Ex-Capt. Burr Chamberlain, constructor of the Yale defense this season, said:

"The line held well, as the record of no first downs against us shows. I feel that Howard Jones has built up a genuine fighting football team, one that deserved victory to-day, and one that will give a good account of itself against Harvard. From the large amount of green material he has had, Chief Jones of the coaching staff has selected as eleven that has done just what we planned, rounded into strong shape for Yale's Princeton and Harvard games."

Hermann Olcott, the former New York University coach and Yale centre, said:

"We ought to have trimmed them; we earned a victory."

An examination of the Yale players' injuries by Trainer Mack showed that there was no reason to feel that any one of the team would be unable to come back for the Harvard game of next Saturday. "Nick" Carter, whose knee was slightly twisted, was carefully looked over and found to have suffered no severe wrench. Pendleton, whose knee was injured in mid-season, is also in good condition.

Capt. Ketchum fairly played himself out, and was completely exhausted at the close of play. Avery's ankle, which was hurt in October, received another bump, but he insisted on continuing the game. The eleven dined at the Quinnipiack Club to-night, and went, later in the evening, to the large country house of Oliver G. Jennings of New York City at Fairfield, Conn. Mr. Jennings was a classmate at Yale of the father of Capt. Ketchum.

The players will remain in the Jennings' mansion till Monday, when they return to the campus for recitations. It was felt desirable to get them away from the racket of the university for two days.

AUTO TRAFFIC HEAVY.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 15.—Automobile traffic in the Yale-Princeton game here was believed by those who handled street traffic to be the heaviest on record for an occasion of this kind at Yale. Steam-road patronage was very heavy, but it is thought to have fallen below that at some previous Princeton games here.

Among the incoming throng only one accident of consequence occurred, that being the sideswiping of a special train from New York by a stick of timber projecting from a freight train near Stamford. No one was hurt, so far as the railroad officials knew, although windows of several cars were smashed and the sides of the cars scratched by the projection. The train was Special D, leaving New York at 9:11 and reaching here at 11:11. The train just ahead of it was unharmed, and it is thought that a westbound freight, which passed over the next track, jostled out of alignment a piece of timber in the period intervening between the passage of the two special trains.

Automobilists coming from New York were generally warned by local clubs to beware of speed traps in several towns near Bridgeport and to obey the muffler law. Motor cyclists patrolled the highways and warned the autoists.

Gloom Thick at Princeton.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 15.—The 300 students who did not accompany the Tiger eleven to New Haven to-day sat in Alexander Hall and received the account of the game, play by play, from The Daily Princetonian wire. As the great strength of the Blue team became evident when the reports sifted slowly in, the atmosphere inside the building became correspondingly blue. It cheered, however, instantaneously at news of "Hobey" Baker's wonderful drop kick, and a great outburst of enthusiasm shook the skylights when it was learned that Ballin and Phillips had saved the day for Princeton on the 2½-yard line by blocking a dropkick. When the crowd filed slowly out, compelled to be contented with a tie, where a victory had been expected, one would have said that a congregation was leaving church.

The freshmen who had been out scouting for wood to build a great bonfire in the cadrangle of Nassau Hall were relieved from their duties, and the town is as quiet as if it were occupied by church mice.

BIG NIGHT AT CARLISLE.

Dickinson Students Join Indians in Celebrating the Victory Here.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Nov. 15.—Pandemonium reigned in Carlisle to-night after the strain of listening to the reports of the Indian-Dartmouth game had passed. The town simply cut loose. Ringing bells, red fire, and a couple of bands paid tribute to Carlisle's victory over the Green Mountain team in New York. Not only did the Indians win their biggest game of the year, but Dickinson College swamped the ancient rival, Swarthmore, on the latter's home grounds. Dickinson fittingly celebrated the victory of her men, led by the great Dunn and Capt. Goldstein, but the Red and White students formally paid a tribute to the Indians as being America's greatest football team. Guyon, Capt. Welch, Calac, Bracklin, and the other Indian heroes were lauded to the skies.

Both the Indian school students and Dickinson turned out in night shirt parade, meeting under the white lights in the centre of Carlisle. The Whitelad hosts tangoed, snake-danced and hopped out native Indian steps to the snappy airs played by the college bands, and for a while the town was in turmoil. Staid citizens caught the infection and rah-rahed hoarsely. At the head of the Indian procession four stalwart braves, with broad grins on their faces, bore a hospital stretcher bearing the recumbent form of an effigial Dartmouth player arrayed in green with a large "D" on the chest of the prone figure. A placard bearing the words "At Rest" surmounted the bearers.

The play was called the "scoop shovel attack" when the Indians played in Pittsburgh some time ago, and the title is hardly a misnomer. It seemed to make no difference who was carrying the ball or what spot was picked out as the object of attack. The secondary defense of the Hanoverians threw itself in reckless abandon at the feet of the on-rushing redskins and the Indians continued to move toward the goal line. The only thing that stopped this particular style of attack was Capt. Welch's decision that he would try some of the others.

When the "scoop-shovel" was discarded temporarily the Indians cut loose with a criss-cross which showed various forms of execution, and had rare success. Years ago the criss-cross was a favorite play, but the ease with which it was smothered led coaches to look for new tricks. Carlisle used it yesterday until the green-jerseyed New Englanders were cross-eyed from their attempts to find the ball. Not once during the game did Dartmouth succeed in breaking up the play or checking it before it gained ground, despite the fact that it was used often enough to become almost monotonous. The plays were aimed outside tackle or end, and they baffled every effort to check them, the gains ranging all the way from five to twenty-five yards.

Dartmouth Line Crumbles.

Dartmouth's line, which had so successfully repulsed the attack of the Princeton back field, crumpled like tissue paper before the red men, and the Carlisle line outplayed it practically from end to end. Each of the Carlisle touchdowns was the result of a series of line smashes or end runs, with the former predominating, and Dartmouth had plenty of opportunity to check every invasion. There was nothing like a fumble under the goal posts or near by to furnish a crumb of comfort to the mountain boys in their most crushing, as well as disappointing, reverse of the last seven seasons. For the first touchdown Carlisle had to bear the Dartmouth defense for thirty-five yards, and the second march to a touchdown was over a thirty-yard course. The third covered a stretch from midfield to the goal line, the fourth covered seventy yards, and the fifth was only five yards shorter. On two other occasions the Indians were on their way toward the Dartmouth line only to be turned back, once by a fumble and again by an intercepted pass. If the score does not give a true line on the playing the shade is in favor of the Dartmouth boys, as they were fortunate in escaping at least one more touchdown.

Dartmouth threatened the Carlisle goal line but once during the game, and that was in the first period, when the touchdown was obtained. At no other time did the Green eleven find itself within twenty yards of a touchdown, and only twice did it have good opportunities for a drop kick. Both were accepted by Capt.

CROSS COUNTRY RECORD FOR KOLEHMAINEN

ANOTHER RECORD FOR KOLEHMAINEN

Great Runner Wins Metropolitan Cross-Country Honors Easily.

Hannes Kolehmainen, the Finnish youth who was a thorn in the sides of the world's greatest runners at Stockholm in distance events on the flat or over hill and dale, gave American enthusiasts further evidence of his marvelous foot-racing ability yesterday at the Metropolitan cross-country championship over the Van Cortlandt Park course, which he won in the easiest fashion imaginable, and at the end hung up a new record of 33 minutes 30 3-5 seconds for the six miles, bettering the best previous mark by one minute fifteen and two-fifths seconds.

When Kolehmainen raced through the worsted placed breast high at the finish line it was with a pace which he had not traveled at any stage of the event, and had all the earmarks of the effort of a man of his ability who had just sprinted a hundred yards. Incidental to his winning he aided his club, the Irish-American A. C., in the team victory, which the wearers of the Winged Fist annexed with the very low score of 19 points.

The New York A. C. quintet, who contributed their share to the corralling of second team honors, totaled 45 points, while the Long Island A. C. and Bronx Church House teams tallied 70 points and 110 points, respectively.

The running of the race witnessed the undoing of the previous champion, Willie Kramer, of the Long Island A. C., who, after running well up with the seemingly invincible Finn to a bit beyond the half-way mark at three miles, was compelled to stop because of pains in his chest.

Another of the prominent entrants, Harry Smith, who was expected to finish among the leaders, failed to win the good things anticipated, a stitch, the bane of distance runners, causing him to drop out just as he had completed half the route of six miles, at which stage he was just one minute behind the Finn.

The field of runners was probably the highest in point of class that has ever faced a starter in this country, embracing the cream of the distance men of this territory. Included in the bunch of thirty-four runners were most of the champions at intermediate distances, from one mile to ten miles, both junior and senior, as well as runners who had made their marks through the field in cross-country work.

With every indication that the contest would be one which would overshadow any ever before given over the perfect course, it remained for the over-anxious spectators to mar what otherwise would have been a most spectacular event by overrunning the finish stretch and colliding with the competitors.

Many of the delegates from all over the country to the Amateur Athletic Union's annual session of next Monday were on hand, and altogether the metropolitan event took on a national aspect. Chief among these were George F. Rawling and Alfred J. Lill, Jr., two of the nominees for President of the Union.

Probably 5,000 persons gathered in the vicinity of the polo field from which the start was made, and the runners made a most picturesque troop when they dashed away after the signal. The usual sprint at the gun in an endeavor to get out of the ruck was seen. First to show were the Kramer boys, Willie, the champion, and his brother Harry, with Honohan of the New Yorks almost aligned. Kolehmainen, as usual, was pinned in, but, once straightened out in the run to the Manor House and on the way to the golf links, where the first hill was encountered, the Finn made his way into the front division.

Up the grass incline, which has a rise of 140 feet in half a mile, Kramer and Kolehmainen made the ascent probably faster than it was ever run before. At the top of the links and where a turn was made on to the old aqueduct, it was the champion first and the coming title holder running second. Harry Smith was third, with Springsteen of Yonkers, Masterson, N. Y. A. C., and Sid Leslie, the junior champion, in that order, and the rest of the field fairly well strung out because of the pace, which had been as fast as Kramer could make it to that point.

Along the comparatively flat earth road to the second turning spot at Mosholu Avenue, where a cut was made down hill, Kolehmainen assumed command, showing the way down the quarter mile drop over a stony road by twenty-five yards, with the champion second, and Leslie and Kiviat next in order. A circuitous journey was then made to the polo field, over which the Finn sped in unbeatable style.

Coming to the finish line the first time round it was Kolehmainen by sixty yard from Willie Kramer, who did not appear to be traveling as freely as is his wont. The great Finn was clocked in 16 minutes 21 seconds, which attested that the record was in for a trimming if the Finn was compelled to let himself out to any degree for the rest of the route.

To the cheers of thousands Hannes sped on his way for the second circuit with the next half dozen runners pretty well bunched, and all racing apparently with plenty in reserve. The last man of the bunch had barely got by and started for his second lap when word was brought to the officials that Kramer had stopped.

Across the hills on the second circuit the field made a pretty sight, bobbing through and past the trees on the hill overlooking the lower field. As it was all over but the shouting as to the name of the individual winner, interest began to manifest itself among the club partisans as to the ultimate finish of the men who were aiding for team supremacy.

With the word passed around the field that the leader was on his way to the tape, hundreds of excited spectators rushed hither and thither all over the turf, and nearly toppled over the world's champion, who was an eighth of a mile ahead of the next runner. This unwitting hindering by the spectators caused Hannes to make a detour of the crowd, and probably lost him five seconds in his rush to the tape.

After Kolehmainen and Leslie, the junior champion, and a much-improved lad, had finished one-two, with the winner's time 33:30 3-5, two men, who were competing for individual honors, rushed through the tape. They were followed by Tom Barden of the Irish-Americans and Gaston Strobino, the diminutive Marathoner, also contesting for individual honors.

In the summing up the Irish-Americans had five men in the first six to count with a total of 19 points, not a perfect score. The New York A. C. came along with the next five places and a total of 45 points, while the Long Island A. C. scored 70, and the Bronx Church House lads 110 points, respectively. The summary:

SCHENECTADY BOYS WIN.

Capture Honors in Columbia Interscholastic Run.

The cross-country team of Schenectady High School, comprising seven boys, one of whom was not more than 15 years old and still wearing knickerbockers, duplicated their victory of 1912 yesterday in the third annual interscholastic cross-country run held by the Columbia University Track Association, when it again furnished the individual winner and easily scampered off with the team honors. The team victory of the up-State schoolboys was most important in view of the fact that it gave them a second leg on the King's Crown trophy, which must be won three times by the same school before becoming its permanent property.

Individual honors went to the Captain of the Schenectady squad, Paul Dockstader, who covered the course of approximately three and one-half miles in the good time of 18:29, winning over J. Moriarity of Richmond Hill High School in the last half mile with a good sprint by 60 yards, who in turn was 10 yards ahead of Smith, representing the Yonkers High School. The winning team in garnering its points finished boys in first, eighth, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth places for a total of 48 points. Yonkers High School, second to finish with its team, fell far back of the winners with a score of 123 points, just two less than Richmond Hill High School, the first of the local contingent, who had a score of 125.

The showing of the local schoolboys who were afforded the opportunity to draw on its best material, and also their second strings, by virtue of the fact that no expenses were incurred in transportation, was a big disappointment.

The Morris High School took the first leg on the trophy in the initial run three years ago, and it was expected they would make a strong stand against Schenectady, but their team was crippled and they finished last among the scoring teams, seventh, with a total of 194.

The run this year reached the high water mark both from an individual and school entry. When the start was made at 2:47 P. M. 140 boys broke from the barrier, against 105 who participated last year, and twenty schools made team nominations, which exceeded last year's number by seven.

The start was made directly outside the grounds on 110th Street, going east to Morningside Avenue, turning northerly along the avenue, following the turn into 122d Street; along this thoroughfare to Riverside Drive, turning at Ninety-seventh Street, then going north to 116th Street, and thence to the field, finishing a half lap on the cinders.

At the turn at 116th Street, or about the first mile, the first group of boys made the turn with Docketader in the lead. He took this position just before approaching the point, and from then until the finish made the pace, and was returned the winner, following him 10 yards in his wake was Moriarity, with Smith third, the positions of the trio remaining unchanged with but one exception until the finish was made. At Ninety-seventh Street S. Levine of the Bayonne High School jumped into third position, but his efforts in doing so soon showed on him and he was forced to relinquish the place again to Smith.

After the race concluded the contestants returned to the dressing rooms, and, donning their street clothes, attended the presentation exercises of the team trophy and individual prizes made in the lecture hall by Gustavus T. Kirby, after which they partook of refreshments, consisting of chocolate and cakes. The order of finish and team scores follow:

STEVENS 'TECH' WINS BY BIG SCORE

Stevens Tech completely outclassed the Connecticut Agricultural College yesterday after the first five minutes of play at Castle Point, Hoboken. The score was: Stevens, 28; Connecticut, 7. The engineers started going after the "Aggies" had made a touchdown on a series of fast end runs and forward passes from a shift formation, in which the whole Connecticut line shifted from a position behind the scrimmage line. Ackerman of the "Aggies" made the score. Immediately Stevens found herself, and began a series of driving plays, eight or ten yards at a time. Todd, the light half back, wormed his way through the huskie Connecticut tacklers time and time again, while Seller dived repeatedly into the line for gains.

Connecticut intercepted a forward pass on her own thirty-yard line, and gained thirty yards by rushing and passes before Stevens held them for downs. Here came another lightning series of plays which placed the ball on the "Aggie" five-yard line just as the quarter ended. On the first play in the following period Musk dived through for a Stevens touchdown. Kent kicked the goal.

The engineers were alert then and after several exchanges of punts Stevens worked the ball to the middle of the field. Musk shot a perfect forward pass to Hersloff, who was downed on Connecticut's five-yard line. Seller rushed through the line for the score. Kent kicked the goal. About the third after the kick-off, Hersloff gobup another beautiful pass from and crossed the line. Kent kicked, making the score 21 to 7 in Stevens's favor.

In the third quarter, the Connecticut team fought like demons and Stevens did not gain consistently. The "Aggies" held the engineers on their own five-yard line and kicked out of danger. Oldis, who weighs 250 pounds, furnished a thrill when he picked up a fumble and ran 25 yards before he was downed.

In the final period Coach Fuller put in several substitutes, including an entire new backfield. But these men were too light and Connecticut held with the exception of when Todd carried the ball. In the middle of the quarter, Seller, Hersloff, and Musk were sent back, and, with the aid of Todd, they tore over the ground eighty yards in a series of plays which netted the final score. Kent kicked the goal, making the score 28 to 7.

Connecticut had a very clever forward pass and made several large gains with it. Ackerman played a star game for the "Aggies". Besides the backs, who all played well, Kent and Oldis did particularly good work for Stevens. The line-up:

Stevens.	Position.	Connecticut.
Kent	Centre	Farman
Oldis	Right guard	Noble
Middleton	Right tackle	Muller
Hoinkis	Right end	James
Musk	Quarter back	Chipman
Todd	Right half back	Howard
Seller	Full back	Ackerman

Substitutes—Stevens: Rosenberg for Howell, Erdofy for Stretch, Seagrave for Seller. Given for Musk, Cawley for Hersloff, Savage for Todd, Graydon for Hoinkis. (First men all put back at different times.) Connecticut: Dickinson for James.

Referee—Ed Thorpe of Columbia. Umpire—Mr. Quill of Yale. Head Linesman—Mr. Adams of Stevens. Time of quarters—Fifteen minutes.

RUTGERS ROUTS TRINITY.

Connecticut Eleven Swept Off Feet by New Brunswick Boys.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 15.—Rutgers routed the strong Trinity team this afternoon 80 to 7 before a crowd of 5,000. Rutgers played a sensational game, twice taking the ball on the kick-off up the field for touchdowns without losing its possession. Bracher, Talman, Rockafeller, and Nash put up a wonderful game for Rutgers. Hudson was Trinity's mainstay, but he could not do much with the Rutgers line.

Twice Trinity took the ball from Rutgers on its one-yard line, once on a penalty. In the first quarter Talman kicked a pretty field goal in the first quarter from the forty-five-yard line. In the last quarter Coffee of Trinity intercepted a forward pass on his three-yard line, and ran for a touchdown.

Rutgers was penalized over 100 yards. Once Talman ran 60 yards for a touchdown, but the score was nullified by a penalty. The line-up:

Trinity.	Position.	Rutgers.
Elder	Left end	Rockafeller
Castator	Left guard	White
Kinney	Centre	McClosky
Lambert	Right guard	Twing
Wooley	Right tackle	Toohey
Cole	Right end	Siler
Smith	Quarter back	Elmendorf
Coffee	Right half back	Todd
Moore	Left half back	Bracher
Hudson	Full back	Talman

Referee—Mr. Murphy, Brown. Umpire—Mr. Crowley, Bowdoin. Head linesman—Mr. Schartz, Brown. Touchdowns—Talman, Todd, Bracher, Nash, Coffee. Goals—Talman (3,) Kinney. Field goal—Talman. Time of periods—Fourteen minutes each.

W. and J. Beats Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 15.—Playing a whirlwind brand of football, in which quickness had the better of strength, Washington and Jefferson College to-day defeated the University of Pittsburgh by the score of 19 to 6. In the first period Washington and Jefferson, by a series of forward passes, made a touchdown and kicked the goal. A goal from placement a few moments later gave this team a score of 10 to the local eleven's nothing at the end of the period. In the second period both teams were accredited with a touchdown. In the third period Washington and Jefferson secured a field goal. The University of Pittsburgh played a fighting game in the fourth period, but was unable to score. The line-up:

Wash. & Jeff.	Position.	Pittsburgh.
Braden	Right end	Shof
Cornwell	Right tackle	Hoag
Weebecher	Right guard	Smith
Cruikshank	Centre	Shapiro
McKean	Left guard	Reese
Goodwin	Quarter back	Heil
Fleming	Left half back	Williamson
Spiekel	Right half back	Peck
Young	Full back	Ammons

Scoring for Washington and Jefferson: Touchdowns—Goodwin, 2. Goal from touchdown—Patterson. Goals from field—Patterson, 2. For Pittsburgh: Touchdown—Shof. Substitutions: For Washington and Jefferson—W. Younkins for McKean, J. Drew for Bovill, V. Younkins for Cornwell, Haymen for Young. For Pittsburgh—Collins for Shof, Dillon for Williamson, Ward for Heil, Achenbourgh for Cowell. Heil for Ward, Egbert for Collins. Referee—Mr. Caldwell, Swarthmore. Umpire—Mr. Hickey, Yale. Head linesman—Mr. Merriman, Geneva.

Boston Mayor's Odd Demand.

BOSTON, Nov. 15.—Mayor John F. Fitzgerald to-day demanded that the Harvard football team play the Dartmouth eleven in the Stadium two weeks from to-day for the football championship of the United States. The demand was made in a public statement, in which the Mayor declared that "the present football season is an uncomplimentary commentary on the action of the Harvard football authorities in putting Dartmouth off the schedule."

Maine Best In New England Run.

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 15.—The University of Maine won the New England intercollegiate cross-country run here to-day with a total of 40 points. Dartmouth was second with a score of 44, and the other colleges finished in the following order: Colby, 90; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 79; Brown, 124; Massachusetts Agricultural College, 163; Amherst, 178 and Williams, 208. Marceau of Dartmouth was the first of the runners to finish, covering the 4.7 miles in 27 minutes 37 seconds. He was closely followed by Bell and Fretie of Maine and Wenz, of Colby. The course was in excellent condition, and all of the runners finished in good physical form.

NAVY DEFEATS PENN STATE.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 15.—Pennsylvania State held Navy to a 10 to 0 score here to-day, and the game was not one in which the Navy supporters can find much comfort. State was the first eleven this season to nearly equal Navy in prowess, gameness, and general ability, and the Midshipmen when met by real opposition did not show as well as it was hoped they would.

By line-bucking Navy shoved Harrison across for a touchdown in the first period and Brown kicked the goal. Brown was called on for a kick from placement in the second period, after State had held for downs inside the ten-yard line. In the fourth period the visitors came back so effectively that they held for downs five times when inside their own one-yard line. These rock-ribbed defenses were the best exhibitions of gameness seen here for a long time. The line-up:

Navy.	Position.	Penn State.
Perry	Centre	J. Clarke
Brown	Right guard	Sayre
Vaughan	Right tackle	Lamb
Gilchrist (Capt.)	Right end	Baron
Nicholls	Quarter back	Miller (Capt.)
Failing	Right half back	Yerger
Harrison	Full back	H. Clark

Referee—Thompson, Georgetown. Umpire—Palmer, Swarthmore. Head linesman—Stollenwerck, Hopkins. Time of periods, fifteen minutes each. Navy scoring: Touchdown—Harrison. Goal from touchdown—Brown. Placement goal from field—Brown. State. No score. Substitutions: Navy—Ingram for Overesch, Overesch for Ingram, Ingram for Overesch, Kennedy for Ralston, Ralston for Kennedy, Wicks for Howe, Howe for Wicks, Walker for Perry, Sizer for Brown, Brown for Sizer, Vaughan for Brown, Redman for Vaughan, Mitchell for Nicholls, Alexander for McReavy, Blodgett for Failing. Penn State—Wood for Morris, Morris for Wood, McDowell for Oberley, McVane for McDowell, R. Millar for Bebeout, Wood for J. Clark, J. Clark for Wood, Wood for J. Clark, Vogel for Sayre, Hartman for Barron, James for Miller, Miller for James, Welty for Yerger, W. Craig for Welty.

ARMY'S BIG VICTORY.

Villanova Makes Poor Stand Against Cadets' Attack.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 15.—Villanova went down to defeat to-day before the fast moving Army machine, the Cadets burying the visitors under a score of 55 to 0. Displaying much speed and power, the Army's backs hurled themselves through the gaps in the Villanova forwards and rolled up six touchdowns. Two more touchdowns were scored on the Army's much improved forward pass formations, Merrillat taking two long passes from Prichard and racing over the Villanova goal line. McEwan, the Army's giant centre, who is making a name for himself in his "plebe" year at West Point, kicked six of the goals. He missed only one. Hobbs, Hodgson and Captain "Benny" Hoge, figured prominently in the Army's attack. Hobbs played star football throughout, once intercepting a Villanova forward pass and scampering 60 yards for a touchdown. Prichard's running back of punts was spectacular. Woodruff was jammed into the game to try a field goal in the second period, but failed.

Villanova came near to scoring twice. Once when J. Reap, standing on the 46-yard mark, booted one true, but which hit the cross bar and bounded back, and again when by fine work with the forward pass the visitors got a good look at the Army's goal posts from the cadets five-yard mark. The West Point defense asserted itself at this stage and Reap essayed another field goal, which McEwan broke through and diverted wide of the mark. The Army was severely penalized for offside play and holding. J. Reap, Morrison, and Kiley did splendid work for Villanova.

The Army has scored 132 points during its last two contests and hopes for an even battle with the Navy are running high here. The line-up:

Army.	Position.	Villanova.
McEwan	Centre	Sutliff
Jones	Right guard	T. Reap
Weyand	Right tackle	Carroll
Merrillat	Right end	Hanlon
Prichard	Quarter back	Horan
Hodeson	Left half back	Penrose
Hobbs	Right half back	Forst
Hoge	Full back	Prendergast

Touchdowns—Hobbs (2,) Hodgson, (3,) Merrillat, (2,) Doe. Goals from touchdowns—McEwan, (6,) Merrillat, (1.)

Substitutes: Army—Hoge for Markoe, Jouett for Hoge, Markoe for Jouett, Packard for Wynne, Wynne for Packard, Herrick for Meacham, Weddell for McEwan, Doe for Prichard, Milburn for Hodgson, Hess for Hobbs, Ford for Hess, Woodruff for Hoge, Hoge for Woodruff. Boots for Hoge, Hobbs for Boots. Villanova—Gilron for Kiley, Kiley for Gilson, Ward for Hogan, Morrison for Penrose.

Referee—Mr. Tausig of Cornell. Umpire—Mr. Tyler of Princeton. Head linesman—Lieut. Hayes of West Point. Time of quarters—Fifteen minutes.

AMHERST BEATS WILLIAMS.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Nov. 15.—Amherst triumphed over Williams in their annual football encounter on Weston Field to-day by a score of 12 to 0. The star of the contest was Capt. McGay of Amherst, who carried the ball over the Williams line for a touchdown in the first period, and subsequently added two goals from the field from the 20-yard line. His punting gave his team a constantly recurring advantage, and his line plunging netted distance consistently.

The Williams line was weak, and under the charging attack of the Amherst forwards was torn apart. Through the holes the Amherst backs, playing old-style football, darted repeatedly for gains. Twenty-one line rushes netted Amherst 68 yards in the first period. All the scoring was in the first two periods.

Only once did Williams threaten the Amherst goal. This was in the last period, when two forward passes, in which Ainslie was prominent either in tossing or recovering, netted 62 yards. The ball at the end was on Amherst's 18-yard line and a touchdown seemed imminent, but Williams, resorting to plunging tactics, was held for downs. The line-up and summary:

Amherst.	Position.	Williams.
N. M. Kimball	Left end	Vinal
R. M. Kimball	Left tackle	Turner
Cross	Left guard	Bain
Chamberlain	Centre	Tompkins
Lind	Right guard	Driscoll
Shumway	Right tackle	Walker
Swasey	Right end	C. Hubbell
Washburn	Quarter back	Hunnewell
Warren	Left half back	Toelan
Hubbard	Right half back	Jones
McGay	Full back	Payson

Referee—Mr. Maxwell of Swarthmore. Umpire—Mr. Luhring of University of Chicago. Head Linesman—Mr. Burks of Worcester Polytechnic Institute. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes each.

Touchdown—McGay. Goals from field—McGay, 2.

Substitutions—Williams: Goldman for Eells, Ainslie for Jones, Newton for Hubbell, Newton for Turner. Amherst: C. S. Humway for Cross, Rugg for Hubbard.

Close Victory for Indiana.

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 15.—Indiana defeated Northwestern to-day, 21 to 20, in a rally in the last five minutes of play, after the Purple seemingly had the game safe. The failure of Whittle to kick goal after the third touchdown was responsible for the one point by which the Purple lost. Erehart kicked every goal for Indiana. The innovation of numbering players was tried and pronounced a great success by newspapermen and spectators. Large figures fastened to the backs of the Northwestern men's jerseys enabled the onlookers to tell quickly just "who was who."

Hightower was the star for the Purple. He made all three of the Methodist touchdowns and was the only efficient ground-gainer. But Northwestern's line could not hold the Hoosiers, and Hightower's brilliant work only balanced the poor work of his teammates.

FOOTBALL

There has not been published heretofore such an ILLUSTRATED FOOTBALL SECTION as The New York Times will give to its readers next Sunday.

The section will contain 16 pages and will be printed on paper of extra quality, in a size handy for keeping as a souvenir. It will include the best pictures of gridiron scenes and stars and the most concise records of college teams in the North, South, East and West.

New Yorkers in particular will be interested in the Army-Navy game. That game, to be played at the Polo Grounds Saturday after next, will be the first match of national importance seen in New York since Columbia University abolished its football team, as well as the first gridiron meeting of Cadets and Middies in this city. As a spectacle, the Army-Navy game is surpassed by none. Latest photographs of the players on both sides and complete records of the teams will be reproduced in the ILLUSTRATED FOOTBALL SECTION.

Other striking pictures will be panoramic views of the Harvard, Yale and Princeton grounds packed with football crowds.

Photographs of the captains of the principal college teams will accompany the records of the elevens. Among those who will find the section a pictorial souvenir worth keeping are the alumni and students of Yale	Trinity	Georgetown	U. of Vt.

Harvard	Amherst	Wesleyan	Stevens
Princeton	Williams	Swarthmore	U. of Ala.
Pennsylvania	Tufts	Rutgers	Alabama P. I.
West Point	Lehigh	Wash. & Lee	Virginia P. I.
Annapolis	Lafayette	Va. Mil. Inst.	Wake Forest
Cornell	Pittsburgh	U. of Va.	U. of Mich.
Brown	Penn State	U. of N. C.	U. of Iowa
Carlisle	Hobart	U. of S. C.	U. of Wis.
Dartmouth	Colgate	U. of Ga.	U. of Kansas
Rochester	Union	U. of Texas	Ohio State
N. Y. Univ.	Hamilton	Vanderbilt	Notre Dame
Fordham	Syracuse	U. of Tenn.	U. of Cal.

Parke H. Davis, member of the Intercollegiate Rules Committee, has written for the ILLUSTRATED FOOTBALL SECTION a concise history of the game of football. Other authoritative articles will trace the sport's development at West Point and Annapolis, in the Southern States, and in the West. There will be both pictures and reading matter which cannot fail to interest every college man and every follower of the game in the United States.

As the Sunday edition of The New York Times is always sold out, it will be necessary to tell your newsdealer in advance that you want

NEXT SUNDAY'S TIMES

AROUND THE WORLD WITH THE GIANTS

Tourists Have Passed Through Stormy Section of American Itinerary.

By JOHN J. McGRAW.
Manager of the Giants.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 15.—In a few days more we will really be on our way around the world, and I do not believe that there will be a man in the party to regret seeing the last rope cast off from the dock. It will mean two weeks of rest on the steamer. The trip across the continent has been a tough one, although profitable in spite of the bad weather we encountered for the first couple of weeks after leaving Chicago.

The days that we have spent in California have been delightful, and the warm sunshine has been welcome after the cold and snow we met earlier. After reaching Los Angeles we had completed most of our hard jumps, and we spent two days in this Southern California town, where they treat visitors very courteously. Since then we have been making a leisurely trip through the State.

First, I want to have something to say about our stop in Los Angeles, which was one of the pleasantest of the trip so far. It seemed as if the whole town was out to greet us, and they started us off with a parade to the grounds. Not many of the paraders ran out on us at the gate, as they are not "pikers" in the West. The count at the turnstiles was 11,000 for the first day, which was the best crowd that we have had since we left Chicago. We also played in the best weather. This was on the first day, and the attendance held up on the second. Comiskey and I wished we had booked the party for a week in Los Angeles. It looks like a money town. The spectators all wanted to know who the different players were, so Umpire Klem announced each batter as he went to the plate and skimmed briefly over his record. He also introduced the extra pitchers and other players to the crowd as they went to the coaching lines. For instance:

Klem is no "piker" when it comes to announcing or anything like that. He did not make Matty the greatest pitcher in the National League or even in this country, but made it in the world. I'm surprised that he did not say the solar system, and, if he had, I would have agreed with him. Klem was up against a puzzler when it came to introducing "Jimmy" Callahan and me. But he got around it like a diplomat. He brought us out together.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said Klem, "let me introduce to you Mr. John J. McGraw, Manager of the New York Giants, and Mr. James Callahan, Manager of the Chicago White Sox, the two greatest managers in baseball."

I wonder if he never heard of 'Connie' Mack," remarked some spectator in the bleachers in tones so modulated that they could not have been heard more than eight blocks from the park.

"There's always somebody trying to 'crab' our act," said "Jimmy" Callahan. "What do you think of that guy bringing up 'Connie' Mack's name when we're the headliners here this week?"

"Won't let us forget unpleasant memories," said I.

The native sons in the party got their share of the cheering. Snodgrass is well known in Los Angeles, having played ball with his college team there and having appeared on a Winter team. He received a great ovation, as did "Chief" Meyers, Hal Chase, "Larry" Doyle, Mathewson, and most of the others. Of course, Matty and Doyle are not native sons, but California would just as soon claim them, as they claim all good things as native sons out here, from the oranges to "Connie" Mack.

After Los Angeles had tried its best to give us all its spare change, and had seen to it that a good time was had by all, as they say in the country weekly of the church social affairs, we moved on to San Diego, where some more delightful California weather was served up to us, and there was also on hand to greet us about all the able-bodied population of the city.

San Diego gave us one of the warmest receptions we have yet encountered, and we have been showered with quite a few. Loaded in autos of the latest pattern—nobody in this land of easy gold and copious hospitality seems to have any other kind—we helped the city welcome to its midst Olin Davis, who had just won an auto race from Los Angeles to Phoenix, across the desert. Then the parade headed for the baseball park, where over five thousand fans crowded into a space not meant to accommodate more than half that number, and the Mayor brought the blush of modesty to Larry Doyle's face and Callahan's ditto by saying nice things about him and the rest of us. And how the fans cut loose! Honestly, I thought for a minute I was back in the Polo Grounds listening to about thirty thousand New Yorkers splitting their throats and lungs trying to tell Matty what they thought of his incomparable pitching.

With the plaudits of that city's multitude still ringing in our ears, we moved on to Oxnard, where the sugar beet is king, queen, ace high, jack and the pot. And the barbecue that the good citizens of that sugared city sat us down to before they would allow us to swing our bats for their edification and delight passes all powers of description, no matter by whom possessed. Even Jack London, who, I believe, is somewhat known out here, would have been lost for words with which to picture it feast, and if he had tried to set down what the boys did to said feast he would have sunk beneath the wreck of his own verbiage—I think that is the correct word—never to rise again in this world of abysmal brutes and such like.

Snodgrass, who is more or less known to the millionaires and multis of Oxnard—he only has a ranch there and runs the Winter baseball team that plays on Saturdays and Sundays with the purpose of boosting the town—went ahead the day before to help perfect the barbecue arrangements. I think his help consisted in telling the local committee that each Giant and White Sox was a horse for eats, for said local committee certainly gave to it that each of us was hidden behind a supply of food that towered in front of us almost as high as any mountain peak whose name is a household one in these parts. And to make us feel thoroughly at peace while we were bravely tackling these food hills, the word was passed along every once and a while that there were more imposing heights where the first had come from, and for us not to suspect that Oxnard would think of allowing us to go to the game hungry.

And after all that we did to that barbecue, and after all that it did to us, we went out and played a game of baseball! And just to prove that nothing like a pleasant little task of eating more food than he had ever seen together in one heap before could daunt him, Hans Lobert raced a cow pony around the bases. He stripped to his undershirt, and when the word was given he dug out at a breakneck speed that put the pony to it to keep within fighting distance. I do not know that I ever saw a man get over the ground faster, and for a while it seemed as if Lobert might beat his four-footed rival to the goal. But the race was a tie. After it was over Lobert declared that if the ground had been a little more solid he would have beaten his competitor by a neck at least. But I think that the race was a fie, because Lobert had too big a handicap to carry in that ton or two of eats he had put under his belt an hour or two before.

Speaking of the "eats" and other good times we are having on this trip reminds me that I have seen various comments in the papers since leaving New York to the effect that this long trip, with the many changes of climate and the swift alterations in diet and drinking water, is going to hurt the players and perhaps put some stars out of the game for good. Let me go on record right now as saying that I think, if anything, this trip will result in the men who take it playing better ball next year. They will be under the eyes of baseball men all through the off season and will do just enough work to keep in condition without getting stale. The idea that they will think baseball all Winter is ridiculous, because it is not the sort of a trip which will cause a strain such as a hard pennant race would.

When we are playing games, both clubs are working hard to win, because, as I have said, several of the players and followers of the teams have bets on which club will finally win the long series of games to be played around the globe. Therefore, both teams are hustling to the limit when we are on the field and no phoney baseball is being shown. But the strain of the pennant race is mostly a mental one when the players are figuring out how many more games they have to play and how many they must win to top the flag if their nearest pursuer takes so many. There is none of that on this trip. We forget the game when we are off the field, and, after leaving Vancouver, we will be off the field for days at a time.

It has been pointed out that several of the men who made the former trip around the world ended their baseball careers prematurely because of the careless way in which they behaved at the banquets and other festivities arranged for them in foreign countries. It is distinctly understood among the members of the present party that there is to be no rough work on our trip, and while the men will not exactly be in training, none is going to hurt himself by his manner of living. Most of the players have their wives along, and they are the best and strictest managers I know for keeping players in condition.

Besides, the styles in ball players have changed since that trip of Spalding's, and there is not the inclination to drink in the off season that there was in those days. The men in this party all intend to take care of themselves, because they realize that their future in baseball depends on their condition. I do not fear for that part of the trip, and I confidently predict I will bring back a better conditioned team next Spring to take South for practice than those composed of men who will go to work after a long Winter of loafing. Too much loafing hurts a player just as too much work does. The Giants had a good year after they had been to Cuba in the Winter, and they all went South in fine shape. I look to see this trip have the same beneficial effect on both the Giants and the White Sox.

Gilmore Leads Federal League.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 15.—James A. Gilmore of Chicago was tb-day elected President of the Federal League at the annual meeting here. Mr. Gilmore was acting President during a large part of the last season. M. F. Bramley of Cleveland was chosen Vice President, John A. George of Indianapolis was elected Treasurer, and Lloyd H. Rickart of Chicago, former Secretary of the St. Louis Browns, was appointed Secretary and Assistant Treasurer. The meeting consumed the entire afternoon and the club owners were not inclined to leave it. Mr. Gilmore said the provisions of the guarantee contract were approved and asserted each club had posted a guarantee of $25,000. He said the league's investments to date and improvements contracted for will total $1,000,000. No information was given out about the schedule, nor were any contracts with major league players announced.

LOCAL FOOTBALL BLOW.

Manhattan schoolboy football received another blow yesterday afternoon when the Manual Training High School eleven defeated the Commerce High team at Ebbets Field by a score of 7 to 0. The gridiron was the scene of a double-header, Erasmus Hall and Boys' High clashing in the second contest, with victory going to Erasmus by a score of 26 to 0.

The victory for the Manual lads against the strong Commerce eleven entirely upset the dopesters, and the Buff and Blue seemed to be the most taken back of any one. Clinton defeated decisively the Manual Training team last Saturday, and but two days ago lost to Bay Ridge High. The victory was, concededly, a deserved one, however, for the Manual lads as a machine and as individuals outplayed the Manhattan team. They had the best of it and in spite of the fact that the tally scored on a fluke were rightly awarded the honors.

The line-up of both matches:

Manual Training.	Position.	Commerce.
Ackerman	Left end	Snyder
Sonborn	Centre	De Boer
Parissette	Right guard	Wagner
Weller	Right tackle	Hagenmeyer
Boenau	Right end	Hooper
Feurstein	Quarter back	Gunther
Egan	Left half back	Quinn
Winchester	Right half back	Clapp
Palmer	Full back	Parkington

Score—Manual Training, 7; Commerce, 0. Touchdown—Palmer. Goal from touchdown—Parissette. Substitutions—Manual Training, OldsWang for Ackerman, Dingwall for Egan, Egan for Oldswang, Thayer for Firsching, Firsching for Thayer. Commerce, Wittner for Gunther, Gunther for Wittner. Referee—Capt. G. Beavers, West Point. Umpire—Dr. J. Wilson, Leland Stanford. Head linesman—W. D. Pulvermacher, City College. Time of periods—Two of 20 minutes and two of twelve and one-half minutes.

Erasmus Hall.	Position.	Boys' High.
H. Halstead	Left tackle	Bancroft
Ellis	Left guard	Fischer
Jackson	Centre	Rubeostein
Cole	Right guard	Barshofsky
Medley	Right tackle	Rothman
Troy	Right end	Taylor
Tuttle	Quarter back	Clarke
Olson	Left half back	Wallenweber
Marshall	Right half back	Palmer
Castellanos	Full back	Sherman

Score—Erasmus Hall, 26; Boys' High, 0. Touchdowns—Tuttle, 3; Olson, 2. Goals from touchdown—Olson, 2. Substitutes—For Erasmus: Cramp for Halstead, Fields for Castellanos, Felter for Marshall, Raymond for Gulick, Halstead for Cramp. For Boys' High—Zychlinski for Fischer. Referee—A. J. Way, Swarthmore. Umpire—McElroy, Cornell. Head linesman—T. Fitzpatrick, Yale. Time of periods—Twelve and one-half and ten minutes.

ENGLISH SOCCER RESULTS.

Swindon Town Lose Their First Game of the Season.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Blackburn Rovers suffered another defeat in the first division of the English Association Football League to-day, West Bromwich Albion winning by 2 to 0, and as Manchester United quite unexpectedly lost their home game with Middlesborough before a huge crowd their positions in league remains unchanged.

The strong Sunderland team journeyed to Everton and, playing a fine game throughout, won somewhat easily by 5 to 1.

Fifty thousand spectators saw Chelsea beat Derby County at Chelsea by 2 to 1, but Tottenham Hotspur, after their long journey to Newcastle, lost their game to the United by 2 to 0. The results in League I.:

Everton	1	Sunderland	0
W. Bromwich Albion	2	Blackburn Rovers	0
Sheffield Wednesday	1	Bradford City	3
Bolton Wanderers	1	Manchester City	0
Chelsea	2	Derby County	1
Oldham Athletic	1	Sheffield United	2
Manchester United	0	Middlesborough	1
Burnley	4	Aston Villa	0
Preston North End	0	Liverpool	1
Newcastle United	2	Tottenham Hotspur	0

Woolwich Arsenal, strengthened by the inclusion of Rutherford, recently transferred to them from Newcastle United for the fee of just over $5,000, had to visit Grimsby for their second division game, and, playing desperately, managed to shade the points, 1—1.

Fulham, also playing away from home, found Leicester Fosse in their best form, and suffered defeat to the extent of 3—0. Pearce, who has kept goal brilliantly for Fulham this season, broke his collarbone last week, and was badly missed.

Bradford jumped to second place in the table by a fine win over Hull City, 2—0. Notts County increased their lead by beating Wolverhampton Wandeds at Nottingham by 2—0. Results in League II.:

Grimsby Town	1	Woolwich Arsenal	1
Birmingham	2	Notts Forest	0
Bristol City	1	Blackpool	0
Leeds City	1	Lincoln City	0
Clapton Orient	0	Huddersfield	0
Glossop	2	Bury	1
Stockport County	1	Barnsley	1
Bradford	2	Hull City	0
Notts County	2	Wolverhampton W.	0
Leicester Fosse	3	Fulham	0

Swindon Town, who have played splendidly all the season, met with their first defeat in the Southern League. Having to journey to Southend they found the United too strong and the game ended by 2 to 0. Brighton and Hove again won their match, beating Cardiff City by 2 to 1. Plymouth Argyle, playing at Watford, just managed to win by 1 to 0, after a desperate game.

Millwall made a big jump in the table by their victory on their own ground over Queen's Park Rangers, 2 to 0. The results in Southern League:

Milwall	2	Queens Park R.	0
Portsmouth	2	Exeter City	1
Norwich City	1	West Ham United	0
Gillingham	2	Merthyr Towns	1
Northampton	2	Bristol Rovers	0
Crystal Palace	5	Reading	1
Watford	0	Plymouth Argyle	1
Coventry City	2	Southampton	2
Brighton and H. A.	2	Cardiff City	1
Southend United	2	Swindon Town	0

GOAL FROM FIELD WINS FOR MORRIS

De Witt Clinton Eleven Defeated in Last Period of Play, 3 to 0.

A drop kick in the final period gave Morris High School a well-earned football victory in their annual gridiron battle with De Witt Clinton yesterday afternoon at Manhattan Field. The score closed 3 to 0 in favor of the Bronx lads after Clinton had extended themselves to the limit in an endeavor to push the pigskin across the line for a touchdown which would have robbed the Maroon of their laurels. The wearers of the Red and Black seemed to have lost much of their punch which had been apparent in earlier contests, and except for the second period the Morris lads had distinctively the best of the game.

The defeat of the Clinton eleven came as a surprise to the schoolboy followers of the season's series. But they fairly lost and can in no way belittle the stirring struggle made by the Morris boys. Four times the Bronx team worked down to a threatening point in the Clinton territory, and many thought that they could have forced their way over against the poor resistance that was evident all along the Clinton defense. Instead attempts were made each time for a goal from field, and in the final trial the ball sailed low and true over the bars from Stone's boot. The kick was made from about the fifteen-yard line.

The nearest that the Red and Black could push the pigskin down into Morris's territory was to their ninety-yard line toward the end of the second period. This was on their second down, and they followed with an attempted forward pass which went astray and the half then ended. Capt. Gilmore's injured shoulder kept him out of the Clinton line through most of the game, and Heilmsohn seemed to suffer a return of his troubles caused by concussion of the brain earlier in the season, but these losses to the team were to only a very slight degree responsible for Clinton's defeat.

Erwig, the nimble little left half back on the Morris team, proved the star ground gainer of the machine. Frequently he ripped off eight and ten yards through and around the Clinton line, and twice made twenty-yard runs. Another factor in Morris's success was attributable to their deft handling of the forward pass, which proved a serious weapon against the Clinton team. In five successful forward passes the Morris team gained seventy-seven yards, and only failed in two or three attempts. Clinton, on the other hand, was peculiarly weak in this respect. One pass of ten yards' gain was their record.

Late in the third period the successful rush of the Morris team got underway. Stone received a forward pass from Manley for fifteen yards and added another five before he was downed. Small gains were then made in straight line plunging, and then a penalty against Clinton for offside play took the pigskin to Morris's first down. Hugsneng plunged the ball on Clinton's twenty-yard line just as the period closed. The same punch was apparent in the opening of the final quarter, and Erwig and Manley brought the ball to Clinton's eleven-yard line. Sockalower was good for a yard and Erwig for another. From this point Stone dropped back and booted his team to victory. The line-up:

Treanor	Centre	Gunther
Jenson	Right guard	Pitt
Hugsneng	Right tackle	Moore
Guidone	Right end	Fowler
Manley	Quarter back	Heilmsohn
Stone	Right half back	McKenzie
Sockaiower	Full back	Huston

Goal from field—Stone. Substitutes—Norton for Huston, Gilmore for Pitt, Powers for Heilmsohn, Pitt for Gilmore, Gilmore for Pitt, Pitt for Fitzpatrick, Sherwood for Jenson, Weinheim for Guidone, Appell for Weinheim, Guidone for Graeb, Graeb for Guidone, Craft for Sherwood. Referee—Mr. Fitzpatrick, Fordham. Umpire—Murray Lyons, Syracuse. Time of periods—Twelve and one-half minutes.

ON THE SOCCER FIELDS.

Crescent A. C. Wins Close Game with Montclair.

Superior combination play against the eleven of the Montclair Athletic Club at Montclair, N. J., yesterday afternoon resulted in a soccer victory for the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn by a score of 3 to 2 in the Field Club League's championship series.

With a slashing 10 to 0 victory against the title holders in the Field Club Soccer League of New York and New Jersey at P. S. A. L. Field in Brooklyn yesterday afternoon the Central Y. M. C. A. soccers maintained the lead they had established by consistent work in the early part of the season, and now loom up as almost certain winners of this year's championship.

A hard-fought match in the high school championship series between Manual Training and De Witt Clinton at Prospect Park yesterday resulted in favor of Manual Training by the score of 1 to 0. Being shorthanded, the De Witt Clinton players adopted a purely defensive game, massing their men in front of their own goal. Thus the first half was survived without a goal being scored. From a mix-up in front of the De Witt Clinton goal in the middle of the second period H. Spiro, one of the defending backs, headed the ball into his own net, and this gave Manual Training the point needed to win the game.

By a score of 4 goals to 1 at Jasper's Oval yesterday afternoon the soccer team of Townsend Harris Hall took the measure of Erasmus Hall of Brooklyn in the high school championship series for the Maxwell Cup. Perrotti scored twice for the winners in the first half, and in the second Adler and Tucker made it 4 to 0 before Erasmus had been able to tally once. Davidson, the centre forward, saved Erasmus from a shut-out shortly before the close of the game.

At Prospect Park yesterday the soccer team of Curtis High School met and defeated the Boys' High of Brooklyn by the score of 2 goals to 1 in a high school soccer championship game. At half time the Staten Island boys led by 1 to 0.

At Manor Field, West New Brighton, yesterday, the Bensonhurst Field Club eleven took the measure of the Richmond County team by the score of 2 to 1 in a league game. In the first half Kennedy scored for the home team and Macphee equalized for Bensonhurst. Hall shot the deciding goal for Bensonhurst in the second half.

Scoreless Tie In Soccer Game.

Columbia University and the Crescent Athletic Club, using their reserve teams, clashed at soccer on the Crescent grounds at Bay Ridge yesterday afternoon. So well matched were the opposing sides that the two halves were played through without either goal having been penetrated. No extra periods were called for, so the game ended in a scoreless tie. The line-up:

Columbia.	Position.	Crescent. A. C.
Buermeyer	Goal	Alberts
Maze	Right back	Johnston
Schwarz	Right half	Wall
Hamilton	Centre half	Carpenter
Romeo	Left half	Cholet
Welling	Outside right	O'Rourke
Lamb	Inside right	Cameron
Crimp	Centre	Barry
O. Day	Outside left	Flannery

Referee—S. Day. Linesmen—Messrs. B. Brew and J. Carney. Time of halves—Thirty-five minutes.

Banquet for Princeton Team.

The annual banquet of the Princeton football team was held at the Hotel Martinique last night, but the election of captain for next season was postponed until next week. The dinner was given by Walter Chandler, Princeton '98, the manager of the hotel. President John G. Hibben of Princeton was toastmaster, and the dinner was attended by sixty persons. All the 'Varsity players, substitutes and coaches were present. Several of the Tigers' old gridiron stars were there and made speeches, including "Big Bill" Edwards, "Beef" Wheeler, Garrett Cochrane, "Snake" Ames, Langdon Lee and also this season's coaches, Andrews, Bluthenthal, and Eddie Hart. The Princeton scrubs also had a banquet in the grill room of the hotel.

Princeton Victor at Traps.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 15.—At the traps on the marshes near Yale Field Princeton won the Gun Club match, 189 to 184. McAlpin of Princeton was high gun with 45, and Taylor was the best for Yale with 40.

BOXING AT NEW YORK A. C.

Leo Elvin, Union Settlement Athletic Club, 108-pound class; W. Sanders, Christ Church House, 120-pound class; J. Margolis, unattached, 130-pound class, and J. Kiernan, Arcade Athletic Club, 140-pound class, were the winners of the final bouts in the amateur boxing tournament last night at the New York Athletic Club. Interesting contests were witnessed in the semi-final rounds when all of the bouts went the scheduled distance of three rounds and some required an extra session before reaching a decision. When these were over the finals, in which the best work was anticipated, came to an abrupt ending in each bout.

None of the final contests went more than two rounds, three being stopped in that period, while the 108-pound class went by default when W. Aste was taken ill after winning his semi-final and had to withdraw. In the final tilt of the 120-pound class Williams, Arcade, unattached, was knocked out in the second with a right hook to the jaw by W. Sanders, who drew a bye. Sanders was the master of Flynn from the start, and he repeatedly shot over short rights to the ribs, which had damaging effect. In the first minute of the second Flynn left his guard wide open for a straight right to the jaw, which put him down, and he was carried to his corner.

The following bout, the final of the 130-pound class, was stopped by the referee who interceded for George Meighan of the Trinity Club, who was a poor match for J. Margolis, the 125-pound Metropolitan champion. Margolis used a left jab to good advantage and put his man down twice in the opening round and when he took the third fall in the second chapter the referee put a stop to the proceedings.

The final bout for 140 pounders was a one-sided affair in which J. Kiernan repeatedly stuck a straight left jab to A. J. Jordan's face and had it soon smothered with blood. Jordan took the jabs good naturedly but was unable to protect his face, and although he was strong and willing but void of dig against long odds, the action of the referee in stopping the affair was cheerfully received.

In the semi-final of the 108-pound class, William Moran, Canadian amateur champion at 105 pounds, was defeated by W. Aste, Christ Church House. Both boys slugged through the three sessions, and the award was not received with favor. It was hissed for some time after being made, and, although it was a close decision, the spectators favored an extra session.

The first bout of the 130-pound class showed two district champions in action, with J. Margolis, unattached 125-pound metropolitan champion, and J. Rosenwald, unattached, Philadelphia, 125-pound class Middle Atlantic champion. Both men devoted the greater part of the time to close work and did little damaging work, clouching and only mixing in the clinches. Neither boy boxed in a manner becoming a champion, with the judges disagreeing and the referee awarding the verdict to the local champion. The summaries:

108 Pound Class. Semi Final Bout. First Bout—L. Elvin, Union Settlement A. C., defeated F. Shanley, Dominican Lyceum. Four rounds; referee's decision.

Second Bout—W. Aste, Christ Church House, defeated W. Moran, unattached. Three rounds; judges' decision.

Final Bout—W. Sanders, Christ Church House, defeated W. Flynn, unattached. Three rounds; referee's decision.

Final Bout.—J. Kiernan, Arcade A. C., defeated J. Jordan, St. Mary's A. C., two rounds; referee's decision.

Stanley Wins from Hansen.

Bert Stanley, a Milwaukee welterweight, had a rather easy time outpointing Jack Hansen of England in the main bout of ten rounds at Brown's Gymnasium Athletic Association last night. Both boxers were willing at all times to mix, but Stanley clearly outclassed his opponent and scored heavily with right and left hand uppercuts, doing his most effective work with these punches.

In the semi-final ten-round bout, Bobby Moore of the west side won an easy victory over Eddie Conway, an east side boxer. The six-round bout that preceded this affair, between Buddy Ryan and Kid Henry, resulted in a victory for the former.

McCALL DEFEATED AT GOLF.

Captain of New York Team Vanquished by Wealthy Baltimoreans.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 15.—The Kens defeated the Oaks on the golf links of the Elk Ridge Kennels to-day by the score of 33 to 9. In other words, sixteen men of wealth of Baltimore beat as many New York men in their annual Nassau matches.

Edward E. McCall, the Tammany candidate for Mayor in the recent elections, was Captain of the New Yorkers, but he was defeated by one point. He lost the first nine holes, but in the second he took three of his half over the bunker and laughed at Mr. Rowland, whose ball landed in a sand pile. "I'm glad I didn't land in that mud. I had enough mud slinging a few days ago in New York," said he.

William A. Marburg, Gen. N. Winslow Williams, and other business men of this city entertained the New Yorkers at a dinner at the Maryland Club this evening. Those in the New York party were Michael J. Dongan, R. W. Pope, Q. A. H. Gildersleeve, Andrew Shiland Nathan L. Milton, Judge Victor J. Dowling, F. H. Ecker, George Clausen, P. F. Murphy, M. J. Degrange, H. K. S. Williams, J. A. McKay, E. J. Feeley, John Whalen, Charles L. Guy, John Perrico, Dr. C. Carlos, F. McDonald, and Thomas F. Conway. The party will return to New York to-morrow.

GOLF ON NEAR-BY LINKS.

An eighteen-hole medal play handicap with turkeys as prizes was run off yesterday at the Glen Ridge Country Club. In Class A J. D. Baldwin was the winner, with 88, 20—68, while in the second set C. A. Hungerford became eligible to gratify his appetite with 91, 21—70. The scores follow:.

Class A—C. D. Baldwin, 88, 20—68; R. C. Stevens, 96, 19—77; L. M. McCoy, 97, 19—78; J. Crosskill, 99, 20—79; Charles Ames, 97, 16—81; W. D. Lyon, 100, 19—81; W. C. Thomas, 89, 8—81.

Class B—C. A. Hungerford, 91, 21—70; W. S. Fairchild, 101, 22—79; E. R. Chatfield, 105, 27—81; E. T. Durham, 111, 27—84; H. J. Frost, 110, 22—88; M. A. Allen, 118, 27—91.

In the first day of play for a cup presented by William H. Ziegltr at the Dyker Meadow Golf Club James Herbert led the field with a card of 90, 18—77. In view of the fact that work was being conducted on the Twelfth Avenue extension a short course was played, so that three strokes were taken off the handicap of each contestant. The following returned cards:

James Herbert, 90, 13—77; W. S. M. Watson, 85, 7—78; E. W. Koehn, 87, 9—78; E. D. Miller, 92, 13—79; J. E. Adams, 81, 2—79; E. R. Aldridge, 95, 16—79; E. F. Siney, 07, 17—80; J. W. Faison, 89, 8—81; F. H. Helmle, 95, 9—86; F. W. Fitch, 89, 8—81; W. C. Biddle, Jr., 90, 9—81; E. B. Peabody, 90, 9—81.

In a ball sweepstakes in which there were about sixty entries Malcolm W. Laidlaw, with 88, 16—72, led the field at the Outdoors Club yesterday. The following returned cards: Malcolm W. Laidlaw, 88, 16—78; F. S. Keeler, 86, 7—79; S. H. Lever, 92, 9—83; E. S. Nash, 108, 13—90.

Calvin Demarest, who is practicing at Maurice Daly's Billiard Academy, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, for his championship match with Willie Hoppe, defeated William Dawson in an exhibition of 18.2 balk-line billiards last night by the score of 400 to 25. Demarest displayed excellent form and finished his string in thirteen innings for an average of 30 10-13, making high runs of 125 and 122 points.

Hoppe Wins Practice Game.

Willie Hoppe, the holder of the world's championship title at 18.2 balk line billiards, defeated George W. Moore in a practice game at Thum's Billiard Academy, Thirty-first Street and Broadway, last night, by the score of 400 to 126 in ten innings. Hoppe made a high run of 140 points and averaged 40. Moore's best efforts netted him a high run of 127 with an average of 12 6-10 points.

MATTY DEFEATS CHICAGO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 15.—The New York Nationals downed the Chicago Americans to-day, 6 to 3. Pitcher Mathewson was in rare form except in the eighth inning, when Chicago made four hits that netted two runs. Score:—

Chicago	0 0 0 0 1 0 0 2 0	3	10	2

Attempt at Insurgency, Headed by Senators O'Gorman, Reed and Hitchcock, Went to Smash When the Elections of Nov. 4 Resulted in the President's Favor---Problems of Party Discipline That Still Confront Him.

By Charles Willis Thompson.

HERE is the underground story of the insurrection that failed, of the still-born revolt. It is a tragedy of politics, and if anybody can see anything humorous in the story it must be some callous person like Woodrow Wilson.

The Democrats of the House and Senate had it all framed up that they were going to teach the President a lesson. He had been too dictatorial; he had made himself the whole Government; and, what was worse, he had starved the faithful and withheld the allotment of manna that is expected whenever there is a change of administration. The thing had gone too far. The revolt was scheduled for the week just ended.

Its leaders were to be Senators O'Gorman of New York, Reed of Missouri, and Hitchcock of Nebraska, and Representatives Bartlett of Georgia and Ben Johnson of Kentucky. The lesson was to be taught on the subject of the Currency bill, just for a starter, but after that they were to read him further lessons on other subjects, such as the anti-trust legislation that he is understood to be incubating.

And then a sad thing happened. On a certain Tuesday early in November a lot of elections were held, and when the indignant Senators and Representatives picked up their papers on Wednesday morning they were pained to read the following brutal statements of fact:

A Clean Sweep.

That John Purroy Mitchel, supported by the Administration and advocated through its mouthpiece, Dudley Field Malone, had been elected Mayor of New York by 121,000 majority.

That President Wilson's personal candidate, James F. Fielder, had been elected Governor of New Jersey by over 30,000 majority.

That Blair Lee, in whose support President Wilson had sent Secretary Bryan into Maryland, had swept the State for United States Senator.

That David I. Walsh had carried Massachusetts by 60,000.

The next meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee was on the following Friday, and Senator O'Gorman, the scheduled leader of the insurrection, came into camp and voted for everything that President Wilson wanted. Reed stood out, but if Reed has not capitulated by the time this article is printed he will soon after. The only irreconcilable left is Hitchcock. Immediately after the election Senator Swanson proceeded to summon a caucus to direct the Banking and Currency Committee to carry out the President's plans.

As for the House, it is as mum as a mouse. Two weeks ago Johnson and Bartlett were talking truculently about "the right of Democrats to hold office under a Democratic administration." To-day you can't tease a murmur out of them.

Last August Senator O'Gorman said in private conversation, "In my judgment the honeymoon period of this Administration has just about passed." After the election Senator O'Gorman, the predestined leader of the great revolt that never came about, found that, in the coarse language of Broadway, he had another think coming.

The Storm Centre of Rebellion.

Looking dispassionately at the great rebellion as it exists to-day, it seems to centre itself entirely in the person of Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska. Reed is perfectly willing to come into camp at any time when the President will appoint his man Postmaster of Kansas City. It is just barely possible that even if the President continues to maintain his present inhuman attitude about that Kansas City Postmastership, Reed will come into camp anyway.

As for Hitchcock, he appears to be permanently off the reservation. Hitchcock is a millionaire; he doesn't care whether he comes back to the Senate or not, so that nobody can scare him with threats of political defeat; he is thoroughly disgruntled over the fact that all the Nebraska patronage has gone to Secretary Bryan and none of it to him, and finally he hates Mr. Bryan with a sincere and thoroughgoing hatred that is 8,000 miles in diameter and 25,000 miles in circumference.

So there is no prospect of Hitchcock's coming into camp; and the Administration reckons him as an enemy, just as it reckons Jim Mann, the Republican floor leader in the House, though Mann is a Republican and Hitchcock a Democrat.

The fight in the Banking and Currency Committee has been a joke. Nobody in the committee understood the first thing about the currency except Nelson and Weeks, both of them Republicans, and Owen, the Chairman, who understood it only in an academic way. The Democratic insurgents put forth Reed as their leader. "Reed," said a well-informed Washingtonian, "doesn't know anything about the currency. Why, Reed doesn't even understand the meaning of a dollar sign."

Basis for a Fine Farce.

So Reed has been voting for propositions which he imagined to be antagonistic to the President's ideas, when actually they were Mr. Wilson's own plans, merely because the whole currency proposition was Greek to him. If the whole story of the proceedings in the Banking and Currency Committee could be written as it occurred it would be a basis for one of the finest farces ever put on the stage.

Not that the President escapes wholly scathless, when one is looking for humorous material. One of Mr. Wilson's fundamental defects of character is a disposition to look with suspicion on everybody else and a notion that he can run the thing—whatever the thing may be—himself. So you couldn't convince him that the Republicans intended to play fair.

Now, being a Senator is a business just like any other; it is a business like being a tailor or a delicatessen dealer. Senators may make faces at each other for the sake of impressing the old folks at home, but when it comes down to cases they are willing to work like horses to produce results. Wilson couldn't understand that. He believed there was some sinister motive behind the support that Nelson and Weeks offered him—support, of course, veiled behind the mask of perfunctory partisan opposition which they would have to appear to offer in the open.

Weeks and Hoke Smith worked out a compromise plan on the currency and started to line up the Senators, Weeks lining up the Republicans and Smith the Democrats. But their plan went to wreck because the President could not be made to believe in the good faith of the Republicans, and the result is that the Lord only knows when a currency bill will be passed.

Nelson went to the White House and tried to convince the President of the good faith of the Republicans. He said, "Why, if we really wanted to hurt you, Mr. President, and to wreck the Democratic Party, we would have voted to accept the House bill." But the President refused to see it. And the Republicans, aided by the three Democratic insurgents, held the bill up.

Declarations of Independence.

The Banking and Currency Committee delayed action on the bill chiefly to show its independence. The President let the committee know that as soon as the Tariff bill was out of the way the Currency bill must be passed immediately, and just to show how independent it was the committee decided that it would not do anything of the kind. It deliberately set Oct. 25 as the time for the hearings so as to show how free and unconquerable it was.

Meanwhile, over on the House side, Jim Mann was showing what an independent son of the setting sun he was. The usual course when the Senate is marking time on a bill and the House has nothing on its mind is for the House to meet every three days and adjourn for another three days, but Mann, the Republican leader, swore by the nine gods that if the Democrats kept the Senate in session he was going to keep the House in session, whether it had any business to transact or not. So daily the House would meet and the roll would be called, developing the fact that about 200 Democrats were absent—which didn't do them any good in their districts.

The Republicans finally saw they would have to fight and they made their preparations accordingly. O'Gorman came into the Administration camp the very day after he read the New York election returns, and he was the only man the Administration really feared. "Nobody doubts," said a Congressman of long experience, "that if O'Gorman were leader of that Currency Committee he would lead it." But Owen, the Chairman, has no such gift and knows very little in a practical way about the currency, so the three insurgents have been monopolizing the advertising and the leadership.

The patriotic emotions of Reed have been excited over the Kansas City Postmastership, and those of Hitchcock over the Nebraska domination of his dearest foe, Mr. Bryan. O'Gorman, however, really disapproves of Mr. Wilson, or did until he read about that 121,000 majority for John Purroy Mitchel and about the smash up State. O'Gorman is old-fashioned in his Democracy, and he has always found his gorge rising at the spectacle of the President coming down to the Capitol and making what he calls "a speech from the throne" instead of sending a duly printed message which nobody reads, as the immemorial custom is.

Reed's case, however, is much simpler. He had a candidate for Postmaster of St. Louis, a gentleman with the ingratiating name of Colin Selph, who happened to be a relic of the old Butler ring régime. Postmaster General Burleson would by no means hear of Colin Selph or anybody else connected with the Butler ring; so Reed went off the reservation and began mixing war medicine. He made so much disturbance that it became a question whether the Banking and Currency Committee would so much as consider the President's bill at this session, much less pass it; whereupon the President saw the logic of events and Mr. Burleson sadly gave Selph the appointment.

150 Disgusted Congressmen.

That flushed the cheek of Reed with triumph, and he went after the Kansas City Postmastership. Here the President definitely drew the line, and for that reason Reed has been expounding for several weeks his unalterable opposition to regional banks.

There isn't a man in the United States Senate who knows the differences between a regional bank and a corner grocery except the two or three gentlemen whose names have been mentioned. Nevertheless and notwithstanding, everybody is willing to follow Jim Reed's lead in favor of the Vanderlip plan, or was until the crash of the election made them switch in the other direction.

There isn't a doubt that the House of Representatives was perfectly prepared to blaze out into a roar of opposition against President Wilson, and that it was due chiefly to the withholding of patronage. It is easy to understand the withholding of the patronage, but the average Congressman cannot understand where he gets off in the matter of private bills. Let us illustrate again:

At the last election about 150 new Congressmen were elected. Every single one of them came in on extravagant promises. There wasn't a man who didn't promise to erect a new Court House building or a new Post Office in the district. They arrived in Washington and found themselves tied hand and foot by a caucus rule invented by Oscar W. Underwood at the behest of Woodrow Wilson, to the effect that nothing could be done during the whole extra session except the passage of the Tariff bill, the Currency bill, and whatever emergency bills might come up. There wasn't a human chance for a private bill to slip through.

The disgust among the 150 new Congressmen cannot be described. Every single one of them had promised to deepen the creek or turn the drugstore into a marble building. Their hands were tied by the House caucus. Next Spring they will have to come up for renomination on their record, and they know good and well that they have no record to coax a renomination on, that the public building in Federal City is still unbuilt, and that the dam in Washeut Creek has never been made.

And there are 150 of them!

To the Right About.

So it came about that Ben Johnson and Bartlett made their onslaught on the Administration. They were merely the mouthpieces of a whole lot of talk that has been going on both on the House and Senate sides about the President's attitude in withholding all patronage except that which he gives to Secretary Bryan. So they made their attack on the President three weeks ago, and to-day they are eating out of his hand. The House of Representatives is absolutely Wilson's tool; there will not be a holler from even such persons as Johnson and Bartlett; the elections settled all that.

Leaving the House as a crippled proposition and turning to the Senate, let us look where it stands. It doesn't seem to stand anywhere. The Hon. Knute Nelson is standing in the forefront of the universe defying the lightning, and Senator Weeks is apparently willing to back him up.

But these gentlemen are Republicans. The only real Democrat who still stands up is Gilbert M. Hitchcock, and everybody knows that he would regard Woodrow Wilson as a perfectly good President if William J. Bryan were not Secretary of State and dragging down most of the Nebraska appointments.

The situation is very unusual. Wilson is the only President who has not had a fight on his hands within six or eight months after his assumption of the Presidency. The pugnacious Cleveland was in a state of war almost as soon as he took the office. Even the mild McKinley found within a short time after he had taken the oath that he would have to fight or quit. Roosevelt came into office under strange conditions, but he, too, was involved in a war with Congress almost from the outset, and Taft never had a peaceful moment.

The Conquest of Congress.

Wilson seems to have conquered Congress. The riotous manner of Jim Mann indicates even to the untutored the extent to which the House is cowed. The submission of Senator O'Gorman indicates the collapse of any responsible Democratic insurgency—for nobody can take Reed seriously, and Hitchcock is negligible because of his personal animus. Nelson's threat means Republican opposition, but it is opposition of the old-fashioned kind. Nelson is a man of weight; but he is simply a partisan, and his threat involves merely a partisan Republican opposition to the Currency bill.

There will be the dickens to pay when Mr. Wilson's next bill comes up. He had no trouble with the tariff, but is having a whole lot with the currency. The next bill on his programme will be the anti-trust bill, which will come up before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which Senator Newlands is Chairman. Up to the election of a week ago there might have been considerable chance of much Hades being raised with the President's bill, because Senator Newlands has very decided views on the trust question. It is dollars to doughnuts since the election of Mitchel and Fielder that anything the President wants will go through Newlands's committee like a railroad train trying to make up time.

Gentlemen, we have with us tonight the Hon. Gilbert M. Hitchcock, the only real insurgent in the United States. Until a week ago last Tuesday it looked as if the Hon. James A. O'Gorman was going to be the head centre of the revolt that never did come off. Mr. O'Gorman saw a great light in the election returns and left Mr. Hitchcock holding the bag.

Reed Doesn't Count.

Of course, there is the Hon. James A. Reed of Missouri, but nobody ever worries about Jim. The great rebellion was a matter to be settled between Hitchcock and O'Gorman. O'Gorman has decided that the Jefferson Davis rôle doesn't suit him and has quit the game; Hitchcock is still standing out. As for the House insurgents, they are as silent as churches ever since the election; you can't coax a whisper out of even Ben Johnson or that rampageous Georgian, Charley Bartlett. It's all off.

The relations between Presidents and Congressmen have often left something to be desired. For instance, no Congressman ever went away from the White House without cursing President Roosevelt, and very few left without objurgating President Taft. But the relations between President Wilson and the members of the Senate and House are ideal—simply for the reason that Mr. Wilson doesn't see them. Mr. Wilson sees no Congressman except on the same terms on which he sees everybody else. You may be a Congressman or you may be a green grocer; it makes no difference; you call up Secretary Tumulty and make your appointment, and the President sees you, Congressman or green grocer. He will only see you between the hours of 10 and 1. You may be the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee; you may be a delicatessen dealer from Houston Street; it makes no difference.

All of which adds no joy to the labors of the statesmen who have to deal with the President of the United States or with the alpaca-coated Secretary of State, who hustles through his business as no Secretary of State ever did before, or with the free-handed Secretary of the Navy, or with the democratic Secretaries of War and the Treasury.

You may not like this Administration; many people do not, (Senator O'Gorman for one,) but you have to hand it to them on one thing. It gets there. If you don't believe me, ask O'Gorman.

Savants Declare It to be Oldest Picture of a Man Known—Lively Controversy Already Started as to Its Significance in Determining Man's Descent.

Just Discovered Drawing said to be 15,000 Years old and the oldest of a Man Known.

WHAT is declared by its discoverers to be the oldest known depiction of a human being has just been unearthed in France. It is the rude figure of a man engraved on a prehistoric monster's bone. According to those who dug it up it is at least 15,000 years old, dating back to the so-called Aurignacian Age.

If they are right in their contentions and the strange drawing was actually made by an artist in his prehistoric "studio," it materially strengthens the theory that our ancestors, instead of possessing the ape-like skulls of the type found at Neanderthal, Spy, and La Chapelle-aux-Saints, were creatures with skulls resembling that found at Piltdown, England, last year, declared by some to have had a brain development greater than that of present-day man.

This remarkable discovery was made on Oct. 3 last in the cave of La Colombière, beside the River Ain, in Southern France, by Dr. Lucien Mayet, Professor of Human Palaeontology at the University of Lyon, and M. Jean Pissot of Poncin, a town close to the cave. The official report of the great find was read on Oct. 20 to the Paris Academy of Sciences by M. Douvillé and summarized at length in L'Illustration of Oct. 25.

The cave of La Colombière is situated on the right bank of the Ain, about twenty meters above the present level of that river, between Poncin and Neuville-sur-Ain. As long ago as 1875 a scientist, M. Moyret, called attention to it as having been inhabited in prehistoric times. Ever since numerous investigators have visited it. They conducted their investigations so assiduously that the level of the cave formed during the Neolithic Age—comparatively recent, in the eyes of geologists and anthropologists—was dug away, also the contiguous level of the earlier Magdalenian Age. This lowered the level of the cave by seventy-five centimeters and brought to light rich fields of Neolithic and Magdalenian relics.

But the richest find of all was yet to come. Beginning last May, the latest investigators began to dig deeper into the soil forming the floor of the cave, and after they had penetrated about one meter further down they found a stratum of fine gravel, showing unmistakable signs of dating from the still earlier Aurignacian Age. This proved to be a veritable treasure trove.

A Prehistoric Studio.

In it were uncovered the "studio" of a prehistoric artist, containing a number of different sorts of engraver's tools, pieces of mammoth, rhinoceros, and reindeer bones, pieces of stone ready for engraving, and stones and bones with engravings already cut into them.

One of the latter represents a horse of a remarkably finished type; another shows a bison, still another a wild sheep. But the prize of the whole collection, the prize which, it is confidently expected, will make this an epoch-making find in the annals of anthropology, is the piece of mammoth's bone on which is cut the figure of a human being. This, in the words of those who have unearthed it, "is the first document representing, in engraved form, the man of the Middle Quaternary Age, the minimum age of which is 15,000 years."

As those who delve into the remote history of our race are aware, picturings of himself by prehistoric man are extremely rare. He delighted in drawing and carving the strange beasts which he saw about him—bisons, reindeer, mammoth, horses, and the like—but when it came to giving us an idea of what he looked like himself he was strangely coy.

Especially rare are depictions of man in the form of drawings or engravings. Rude carvings of human beings, dating far beyond the dawn of history, have been dug up—at Villendorf, in Austria; at Brassempouy, the Laussel Cave, and the grottoes of Grimaldi in France and other places. Owing to this paucity of first-hand information, reconstructions of prehistoric man from the various skulls and bones found at different times have been largely a matter of conjecture. It has been a case of every one guessing for himself, and the controversies that have arisen have been legion. One group of savants, endeavoring to build up our remote ancestor from the famous relics found in the Neanderthal, near Düsseldorf, Germany; at Spy, in Belgium, and at La Chapelle-aux-Saints, in France, have shown us something materially strengthening the Darwinian theory that man is descended from the ape. Another group, basing its deductions on the "man" reconstrued from the Piltdown skull, has endeavored to prove that prehistoric man, from whom we are descended, never became so bestial as the possessors of the Neanderthal-Spy-La Chapelle-aux-Saints skulls, and that the latter belonged to a branch of the race which gradually degenerated until it finally became extinct, while the other and superior branch kept on improving until man as we know him was gradually evolved.

What the Finders Claim.

This latter theory, it is expected by the discoverers of the prehistoric "studio" in the cave of La Colombière, will be greatly bolstered up by what they have brought to light. To begin with, the best known depictions of human beings of a similar sort—notably the sculptured forms of women found at Azil and elsewhere in France, as well as the sketches of the human face unearthed in the cave of Marsoulas—were produced in the Magdalenian Age, according to the theory generally accepted by Frenchmen, and, therefore, are supposed to be much more recent than anything dating from the Aurignacian Age.

Granting, then, that the pictures in the cave of La Colombière really date from the Aurignacian Age—and the report read by M. Douvillé shows pretty conclusively that they do—and that those similar to them discovered up to now are of a more recent date, the character of the work done by the cave artist of La Colombière is such as immediately to rivet the closest attention on it.

For the "man" here shown, the man of the Aurignacian Age, bears a most striking resemblance to him of the Magdalenian Age, supposedly a much more developed individual.

Compare this man of La Colombière with the middle one of the three human faces from the cave of Marsoulas, shown on this page. He has the same respectable skull development, much more like that of the possessor of the Piltdown skull than that of the ape-like "Neanderthal man" and his congeners. The nose, it will also be noted, is very similar to that of the Marsoulas man, likewise the heavy chin.

So much for the contentions of the Frenchmen who have made this remarkable find. Backed up though they are by good arguments, it is not likely that they will be swallowed without a struggle. On the contrary, they will probably be the cause of still another controversy to add to the already stormy annals of anthropology. For there is undoubtedly another side to the question.

First, as to the pictures just found of La Colombière. In spite of the fact that those similar to them—including the human faces of the cave of Marsoulas—are generally ascribed by Frenchmen not to the Aurignacian but to the later Magdalenian Age, others think them productions of Aurignacian artists. If this latter theory is accepted, the "man" of La Colombière is simply one more to add to the scanty gallery of Aurignacian depictions of human beings. Even if he proves to be that and nothing more, he will be accounted a precious find, but naturally his value will not be so enormous as those who have found him and those who share their views would have us believe.

Second, as to whether the "man" of La Colombière proves that we are descended from the Neanderthal-Spy-La Chapelle-aux-Saints race or the race represented by him of the Piltdown skull.

There, too, matters are by no means as easy as they look to the sanguine Frenchmen. Plenty of learned men who have studied the subject of the descent of man are of the opinion that man may be descended from neither of these interesting groups; they contend that both of these races may have become extinct and that mankind sprang, possibly, from some race which appeared later.

Among those who are, so to speak, still "on the fence" is Prof. James T. Shotwell of the History Department of Columbia University. A TIMES reporter showed him the other day the first reproductions to reach this country of the La Colombière pictures. The professor studied them and read the résumé of the report concerning them with the minutest attention.

"This is without question a remarkable discovery," he said, "and I thank you for putting me in touch with it—I had not as yet heard of it.

"It is especially interesting because it is, apparently, well authenticated. The placing of the pictures in the Aurignacian Age seems to me to be probably correct—that is shown by the different levels investigated in the cave. The cross section of these levels indicates that a considerable interval has intervened between the strata in which the remains were found and the Magdalenian above. Moreover, if the report is to be believed, the fauna of the lower strata indicate the Aurignacian-Solubrian stages of culture.

"Judging by the rest of the drawings found along with that of the man—(those of the horse, wild sheep, &c.)—this would seem like a pretty accurate representation of a high grade skull with a higher brain capacity or at least a different shaped head than the Neanderthal people.

"If you follow one classification commonly accepted in France, drawings similar to this which have already been found must be placed in the Magdalenian period, thus strengthening the contention of the discoverers of the La Colombière relics. On the other hand, you must not forget that there are some people who place these other drawings in the Aurignacian period. If the cave drawings which have been found in recent years in Spain and France are ascribed to the Aurignacian artists one cannot claim priority for this latest find.

"But it still remains a remarkable addition to knowledge. It is too early to risk any theories, but, anyhow, it is of great significance to find any further possible indications that men of so high a type existed so far back."

It may not be amiss to set down here some facts about the various finds of skulls and other relics from which the theories concerning the descent of man have been constructed in recent years.

May Not Be Oldest Picture.

First in point of time and fame comes the Neanderthal skeleton, unearthed in 1856 in the narrow ravine of that name near Düsseldorf, Rhenish Prussia. When originally brought to light it was probably intact, but the workmen who found it, not knowing its value, greatly damaged it. Only the opportune intervention of a scientist preserved some of the bones, which were taken to the museum of the University of Bonn. To quote "Ancient Hunters," by W. J. Sollas:

"More than fifty years have elapsed since this momentous discovery was made, and from that time to this it has occupied a foremost place in the investigations of anatomists. When its discoverer first exhibited his specimens before a meeting of German anthropologists at Bonn, doubts were freely expressed as to their human character, and subsequently the famous anatomist Virchow endeavored to explain away the remarkable features of the skull-cap by attributing them to disease.

"Huxley * * * arrived at conclusions which we now perceive to have made the closest approach to the truth. He recognized the skull as truly human, but at the same time as the most ape-like he had ever beheld, and placed it below the Australian, which he regarded as its nearest existing representative."

Other discoveries belonging to this group of apelike skeletons supposed to have belonged to the ancestors of man were the skeletons from Spy, found in 1885, the celebrated find at La Chapelle-aux-Saints, and, last but not least, that renowned "missing link," the Pithecanthropus erectus, discovered on the Island of Java in 1891 by Dr. Eugene Dubois. When taken by its finder to Europe this strangest find aroused the keenest interest among savants, and also created a wide divergence of view. Some looked upon it as an ape with human characteristics, while others called it a man with Simian characteristics. Dr. Dubois, the finder, took a middle ground, and declared it to be a connecting link, standing midway between man and the higher apes.

The most notable representative of the other side of the case is the Piltdown skull, discovered in 1912 on Piltdown Common, near Ucksfield, Sussex, England. According to one "reconstruction" based on this skull, the man possessing it was not only far removed from all that is Simian but had a really remarkable brain development, superior, in fact, to that of the average man of to-day. One particularly ardent in championing this theory was Prof. Arthur Keith of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. He came out in emphatic opposition to other savants, among them Dr. Smith Woodward and Mr. Charles Dawson, who, in reconstructing a man from the Piltdown skull, built up something essentially Simian and resembling the Neanderthal men.

In describing his ideas regarding the possessor of the Piltdown skull—the type of man now supposed to have been depicted by the artist of the cave of La Colombière far back in the Aurignacian Age—Prof. Keith wrote:

Five years ago Neanderthal man was accepted as our Pleistocene ancestor by all save a few men—Sergi of Rome, Rutot of Brussels, Schwalbe of Strasburg, and Adloff of Berlin. I stood then with the orthodox.

Three years ago I had to examine and study certain remains of Neanderthal man found in a cave in Jersey; my studies showed me that he could not, because of his specialized and peculiar characters, stand in our direct ancestry. Further discoveries have shown that Neanderthal man was a race apart, and that he became extinct at the beginning of the Pleistocene period. He apparently disappeared from Europe in the same manner as the natives died out of Tasmania.

Such was the condition of beliefs when the Piltdown find was made. That it is the most important discovery of its kind ever made will be freely granted by all who have inquired into man's ancient history.

Nothing can detract from the debt which we owe to Charles Dawson and Dr. Smith Woodward on this score. It was natural that they should be influenced by the beliefs of the time. The evidence as regards antiquity of the Piltdown race pointed, in their opinions, to a very early phase of the Pleistocene period. It was the date at which man should still be struggling toward a human form, if the accepted opinion was well founded.

In the chin region of the lower jaw of the Piltdown skull the discoverers found that the characters were absolutely apelike, absolutely unhuman. The characters of the chin dominated their work when they came to fit the parts of the skull together; so certain were they that they had found a real intermediate stage between ape and man that they abandoned all the precepts of the ordinary anatomist. It was recognized that all the parts of the skull, barring their massive thickness, had the same characters as modern man, only the chin was different. In the skull eventually reconstructed, representing the form of man's head in the early Pleistocene, one could recognize a mixture of features, recalling a microcephalic idiot's skull on the one hand and a chimpanzee's on the other.

This hybrid skull was received with open arms by the orthodox anthropologists. They were comforted to know that their beliefs had been well founded, even if their early-Pleistocene ancestor proved to be but half an ape. As for myself, it was necessary to examine again my facts, inferences, and beliefs and see how they could be fitted to meet the evidence yielded by Piltdown, for at first I accepted implicitly the skull reconstructed.

Keith's Reconstruction.

Until Mr. Dawson's discovery I was certain we had followed the modern man back beyond the middle of the Pleistocene, and on other evidence had postulated that long before the dawn of the Pleistocene period it would be found that man had attained a full-sized brain. There were also the important discoveries of Benjamin Harrison and J. Reid Moir. They had found flints which had been shaped by the hand of man before the middle of the Pliocene period.

Matters had reached this stage when I returned from a glorious golfing holiday in Cornwall early in the Summer of the present year. On my return I found waiting me excellent casts of the various fragments of the Piltdown skull which had been prepared by F. O. Barlow. Sitting down to mark out these Piltdown fragments on a modern skull in order that visitors to the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons might quickly perceive how they differed from the corresponding parts of modern man, I was surprised to find that the area of the ancient parts was much larger than their modern representatives. I also observed that the squamosal—the bone which forms the side of the skull between the ear and the forehead—was much larger than in modern skulls.

That was altogether unexpected, as in all ancient skulls, especially skulls of the Neanderthal race, this bone is particularly small. My curiosity was aroused. I soon saw that the parts of the reconstructed Piltdown skull had been apposed in a manner which was in open defiance of all that was known of skulls ancient and modern, human and anthropoid. Articulating the bones in a manner which has been accepted by all anatomists in all times I found that the brain chamber, instead of measuring 1,070 cubic cm., as in Dr. Smith Woodward's reconstruction, measured 1,500 cubic cm.—a large brain chamber for even modern man.

Comparing the impressions left by the convolutions of the brain on the Piltdown skull with those on a modern skull, I found a close correspondence. It was then apparent a very great mistake had been made; the ancient man of Piltdown had a brain as big as modern man.

The Fight Is On.

The latest news from abroad shows that the man of La Colombière has already set learned tongues to wagging against each other. Already Messrs. Mayet and Pissot, the savants who found him, have a hornet's nest about their ears. In London Mr. J. Leon Williams, writing in The Illustrated London News, has placed himself on record as a foe to the belief that he of La Colombière is the earliest picture of a man. Mr. Williams's idea is that we have to do here not with a faithful delineation of the human form but with a caricature. He writes:

As Messrs. Mayet and Pissot say, the drawing is very clear, especially the face and upper part of the head. The back of the head and the neck do not seem to me very well defined in the photograph.

The discoverers speak of this drawing as having none of the characteristics represented by the Neanderthal, Spy, or La Chapelle-aux-Saints skulls. In their opinion, the head resembles the fossil skull of Chancelade. They say:

"The head is large, the forehead round and prominent, [bombé,] rising slightly obliquely. The face is long, as though pulled out from below upward, and is distinctly projected forward; the chin is prominent, and has a short beard indicated by small lines; the nose is long and very thick: the eye is indicated by two curved lines, and has an indefinable expression."

In this detailed description it is quite evident that Dr. Mayet and M. Pissot believe that we have here something in the nature of a realistic drawing of Aurignacian man. This is confirmed by their further statement that we have not previously found any engraved figures that teach us anything definite about the exact form of contour of the human face of the Aurignacian or Solutrian periods, and that this want has now been filled by their discoveries.

With these statements and conclusions I find it impossible to agree. At least two other engravings of the human face have been previously discovered, one in the Grotte des Fées in the Gironde, and the other in the Font-de-Gaume at Les Eyzies (Dordogne.) * * *

I think it will be clearly seen that the great interest in this new discovery lies not in the belief that it is unique, but in the fact that it is not unique. It is a matter of the deepest interest to find in these three drawings certain identical conventions. The general shape of the head, nose, and chin is the same in all of them. The way in which the mouth is placed is the same in the two which show the mouth, and what our discoverers speak of as the "indefinable expression of the eye" is produced by identical lines in all three engravings.

All of this suggests several things, among which we may mention that the Colombière drawing can hardly be meant to represent any particular individual: it is hardly possible that it was intended as a realistic production. It may be a rude outline effort, such as a child would make, or it may be a deliberate convention with a meaning of which we are ignorant. If the drawing from the Font-de-Gaume cave was made by the artist who drew the figures of bison and other animals on the rock walls of that cavern, then there is something curious and mysterious in the fact that the drawings of the wild animals are wonderfully realistic, while the one intended to represent a human face is vastly inferior to the others.

We have probably not yet quite fathomed prehistoric man's ideas and intentions in all this work. Another proof that this Colombière engraving cannot be intended as a realistic drawing is seen in the photograph and outline drawing of the skull of the Combe Capelle man. This is generally accepted as the typical Aurignacian skull. But by no possible arrangement of the soft parts around that Aurignacian skull could we produce a representation of a face resembling any one of the conventionalized prehistoric drawings shown.

THREE POEMS BY T. A. DALY

DA WHEESTLIN' BARBER.

LAS' night you hear da op'ra?
Eef you was uppa stair
An' eef you know Moralli
You mebbe saw heem dere.
Moralli? He's a barber,
But verra bright an' smart,
An' crazy for da op'ra;
He knows dem all by heart.
He's alla time wheestlin',
An' often you can find
Jus' from da tune he wheestles
W'at thoughts ees een hees mind.
Eef you would ask a question,
Da answer you would get
Ees nothing but som' music—
Ha! w'at you theenk of dat?

Las' week hees wife, Lucia—
Fine woman, too, is she—
She gave to heem som' babies,
Not only wan, but three!
Eef to your shop som' neighbors
Should breeng sooch news to you
Eet sure would jus' excite you
To say a word or two;
But deese Joe Moralli,
Dees music-crazy loon,
He nevva stopped hees wheestling—
But justa changed hees tune.
Dees answer from hees music
Wes all dat dey could get:
"Trio from 'Trovatore.'"
Ha! w'at you theenk of dat?

He nevva stopped hees wheestlin'
Dat "Trovatore" tune,
Not even w'en he's dreenkin'
Weeth frands een da saloon.
He wheestled eet dat evenin'
W'en home he went to see
Hees granda wife, Lucia,
An' leetla babies three.
But w'en he stood bayfore dem

An' wheestled—W'at you theenk?
Ol' den da tune he wheestled
Was—how-you-call-eet—"pat":
"Sextetta from Lucia."
Ha! w'at you theenk of dat?

NOVEMBER.

JUNE is sweet, for then I found thee;
But November, gray and cold,
Weaves warm memories around thee,
Spun of gold.

June a rose-time we remember,
Ere the boy became the man;
But in earnest with November,
Life began.

Still I see thee, as we threaded
Gray woods under grayer skies;
Strange new hopes and fears were wedded
In thine eyes.

And when these had been translated
Into awed and reverent speech,
Stronger then our souls were mated
Each with each.

Deep with vernal promise laden,
As with buds the leafless wood,
Here was blossoming of the maiden—
Womanhood.

Rich the memories now that hover
Round that day when Life began,
And the lightheart boy, thy lover,
Was a man.

Little Polly's Pome.

EARLY IN THE MORNING.

EARLY in the morning
In my blankets rolled
When the day is dawning
Out there in the cold
If I wake from sleeping
Ere its time to rise
And the first wee sunbeams
Dance before my eyes
And the milkman's wagon
Stops before the door
And he leaves his bottles
On the porch's floor
And I hear the whistle
Blowing from the mill
Though nobody's stirring
In our house so still
It is very pleasant
Lying there in bed
Just to pull the covers
Up around my head.
O but it is lovely
Thus to lie and then
Closing drowsy eyelids
Go to sleep again
Early in the morning
In my blankets rolled
When the day is dawning
Out there in the cold.

SIDELIGHTS ON "JOE" CHAMBERLAIN, 25 YEARS WED

Friend Tells Intimate Anecdotes of the Famous British Statesman Who Married an American Girl When He Was Here a Quarter of a Century Ago.

By a Veteran Diplomat.

JUST a quarter of a century ago today I received while here in New York a letter of four pages, which I treasure as a particularly charming souvenir. It was an acknowledgment by Joseph Chamberlain of telegraphic congratulations sent to him on the occasion of his marriage to Miss Mary Endicott, on the previous afternoon, at Washington, D. C., and bore the date of Nov. 16, 1888.

That is to say, it was written on the very morning after his wedding, reaching me by mail that same night. For a bridegroom, during his honeymoon—especially during the early stages thereof—to remember any one of his friends is flattering to the latter; but to be thought of on the very morrow of the marriage may well be construed as a mark of exceptionally kind regard.

That the union thus contracted at Washington Nov. 15, 1888, has been an ideally happy one, is a matter of common knowledge, at any rate in England, and of all the many daughters of Uncle Sam who have bestowed their hands upon Britons there is not one who, while never forgetting the land of her birth, has more thoroughly identified herself with the land of her adoption.

In her sunny personality, New England and Old England are so happily blended that no one can tell just where the one ends and the other begins. Among her husband's countrymen, no one has ever dreamed of considering her in the light of a foreigner; and no woman of the New World ever enjoyed to so marked a degree the favor of Queen Victoria, or was the recipient of so many tokens of good will on the part of that venerable sovereign, as the American wife of the great statesman, popularly known as Fighting Joe.

Until the beginning of 1884, Chamberlain's activities and interests were purely domestic. He was wholly taken up with municipal and provincial reforms of an economic and social nature. He represented the type of what may be described as the parochial statesman, and it was owing to this that he wss assigned to the presidency of the Government Board of Trade, when Gladstone was compelled by popular sentiment, and with undisguised reluctance, to accord him a seat in his Cabinet in 1880. It was the Egyptian question that four years later first led Chamberlain to turn his attention to foreign affairs, which resulted in his becoming a great figure in international politics.

It was in connection with Egypt that I was first brought into close contact with Chamberlain. While spending the Winter in Egypt, I was requested toward the close of January, 1884, by the late Khedive Tewfik, to leave at once for England in his behalf.

The Liberals were then in office, and every conceivable pressure was being brought to bear upon them, from within and without their ranks—particularly by La Haute Finance, headed by the Rothschilds—to proclaim a protectorate over Egypt. Lord Randolph Churchill insisted, moreover, that advantage should be taken thereof to depose Tewfik, and lost no occasion of assailing him bitterly, charging him with treachery and duplicity in his dealings with Great Britain in 1882.

These accusations, backed up by evidence that appeared plausible, created a considerable amount of popular feeling, all the more so as Gen. "Chinese" Gordon, before leaving England in December, 1883, for Cairo and Khartoum, had given public expression in vigorous language to similar views concerning the late Khedive. Most of the Liberal Ministers were indifferent about Egypt. Only the Premier, William E. Gladstone, was bent upon its evacuation by England without delay, and no matter at what cost, while Lord Granville, the most indolent and vacillating statesman who ever held the seals of the Foreign Office, was inclined to humor him in the affair.

British Lack of Decision.

Lord Cromer's remarkable record in his book, "Modern Egypt," of his twenty-five years of magnificent work at Cairo, as British plenipotentiary, furnishes striking illustrations of this lack of decision on the part of the British Government at the time.

Tewfik's position was this: He realized that if the British army of occupation was withdrawn, his throne would become untenable, owing to the irritation of his own people against him. On the other hand, he felt convinced that the proclamation of a British protectorate would entail his deposition.

What he wished me, as an old and intimate friend of his heir-apparent days, to do was to endeavor to prevent the withdrawal of the English army of occupation, upon which Gladstone was so bent, to avert the proclamation of a protectorate, as well as such undue interference in questions of internal administration, as might impair his prestige and authority with his subjects, and, last but not least, to create kindly and friendly feelings for him in influential quarters, not only in London, but also at Windsor.

Queen Victoria, like Edward VII.—both prior and subsequent to his succession to the thorne—was always glad to receive from confidential sources reliable information other than that which reached her through the regular official channels, so as to be able to surprise her cabinet ministers with the extent of her knowledge. In the late Winter and Spring of 1884, both Lord Granville and Gladstone, neither of them bien en cour at the time, were on several occasions not only puzzled, but likewise much disconcerted by the Queen's expression of positive views of her own about Egypt, instead of being content to accept theirs.

With the kindly assistance of the late General Sir Henry Ponsonby, private secretary to Her Majesty, and of old Hermann von Sahl, whose modest title of German Secretary conveyed no idea, save to the royal household, of the confidence shown him by his illustrious mistress, nor of the extent of his quiet influence with her, I was able, by means of frequent trips to Windsor, to create a personal sympathy for Tewfik, where none had previously existed, and I have in my possession a number of letters of von Sahl, and some, too, of Sir Henry, in which they admit this. The interest thus awakened with Queen Victoria for Tewfik, and in his welfare, which lasted until his death, proved to him a bulwark of strength, not alone in his dealings with his suzerain, the Sultan, but also in his relations with the English Government; while there is no doubt that it put an end to all danger of his deposition.

As for his fears of the proclamation of a British protectorate, I was able to set them at rest by means of a cipher cable, communicating to him the contents of a letter just received from Windsor, dated March 12, 1884, in which Sir Henry Ponsonby conveyed to me the positive assurance that there would be no protectorate proclaimed.

The Queen and the Khedive.

Another letter of Sir Henry, likewise in my possession, is curiously illustrative of the Queen's differences with Lord Granville and with Gladstone on the subject of Egyptian matters in the Spring of that year. Her Majesty, in deference to my arguments and requests, had arranged to confer the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath upon the Khedive as a token of good will and in order to console him in a measure for the bitter attacks to which he was being subjected at the time by the Conservatives in and out of Parliament, and by the English press.

Unfortunately for him, the Bath, unlike the Victorian Order, can only be bestowed by the sovereign with ministerial sanction and countersign. Lord Granville and Gladstone objected to the grant of the order to the Khedive as inopportune, and as calculated to still further excite the Conservatives against him, and Sir Henry's letter was to notify me thereof. The Queen was compelled to defer the honor till later. But she sent the Khedive on that occasion an autograph portrait of herself, and I was charged with the task of confidentially explaining to him how her project for a public token of sympathy and good will had been frustrated for the time being.

As at Windsor, so with Chamberlain. I was fortunate in arousing his interest in Egypt and in its ruler, in the place of his previous indifference. Far and away the most broad-minded member of the Administration, wholly free from red tape and official starch, he was not only the personification of frankness himself, but encouraged frankness on the part of all those with whom he was brought into contact. At first kindness and friendship prompted him to listen to what I had to say. He then became quite keen about the matter and accorded much time and attention to the purpose of my wholly unofficial mission.

He did not conceal the fact that he was quite out of touch with Lord Granville, and gave me the impression of being very glad of the opportunity which my information afforded him to tackle the Secretary for Foreign Affairs about something concerning the latter's department.

According to Chamberlain, the very mention of the Land of the Nile had much the same effect upon Gladstone as the proverbial red rag on the bull. Mrs. Gladstone used even to insist that no reference be made thereto at the dinners which she gave, or that she attended with him at other houses, and owing to this idiosyncrasy on the part of the Grand Old Man, and to the anxiety of his ministerial colleagues to avert scenes, and even rudeness, Egypt was avoided at Cabinet councils. Consequently, Granville had been left until then to dispose of Egyptian matters as he thought best, without interference. That, as stated above, was the reason of England's vacillating policy with regard to the Khedivate and the Soudan, down to the Spring of 1884, as is so plainly shown in Lord Cromer's "Modern Egypt."

I may state incidentally that on the occasion of my only call on Mr. Gladstone, in the Spring of 1884, I had been solemnly pledged beforehand not to talk about Egypt to him. As we sat together before the fire, he facing toward the window that looked out into Downing Street, and I toward the curtains which hung across the other end of the long room, I caught sight on two occasions of Mrs. Gladstone's face, peeping in, and of a warning finger raised when apparently she thought we were approaching too near the forbidden subject.

It was at a Cabinet meeting held on Feb. 14, 1884, at 7 in the evening, in the Premier's private room in the Houses of Parliament, that Chamberlain, with whom I had spent most of the morning, first brought Egypt on the tapis, to the amazed disgust of Lord Granville, and to the indignation of Gladstone.

So strong, however, were his arguments that, with the consent of the majority of his colleagues, not the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, but Chamberlain's intimate friend and ally, Sir Charles Dilke, President of the Local Government Board, arose before midnight in the House of Commons to state, in behalf of the Cabinet, that the Government was determined to interfere as little as possible in the internal administration of Egypt, or to interfere with the authority of the Khedive in relation to his subjects, but would on the other hand support the Khedivate much more effectually than theretofore in its troublesome relations with the foreign powers, as well as in the organization of its finances. This was hailed the next morning by The London Times editorially as the first definite declaration of the policy of the Administration toward Egypt.

Dilke, whom I saw later in the day, told me that Chamberlain had, without mentioning my name, repeated at the Cabinet meeting the night before, almost word for word, the information which I had furnished him, that it had been the determining cause of his own speech, and that Chamberlain, while dining with him at the House of Commons, after the Cabinet meeting, and before the debate on Egypt, had revealed to him in confidence the source of his data about Egypt.

From that time forth, Lord Granville no longer was permitted to conduct the relations of England toward Egypt according to his own sweet will, and without regard to the remainder of the Cabinet. At each of its meetings, Chamberlain and Dilke insisted upon information from Granville, and gave expression to their views.

Already, as early as in April of that year, Chamberlain and Dilke were vigorously advocating at the meetings of the Cabinet the necessity of dispatching an armed expedition up the Nile for the relief of Gordon, prompted thereto by General, afterward Field Marshal, Lord Wolseley. But they were in a minority in the Cabinet, the only member of which supporting them in the project being the late Duke of Devonshire, then Lord Hartington.

Many stormy scenes occurred at these meetings in Downing Street. But it was not until the Fall that public sentiment, coming to the support of Chamberlain, Dilke, and Hartington, forced Gladstone, Granville, and the majority of the Cabinet to yield, and to consent to the dispatch of the relief expedition under Wolseley. As everybody knows, it reached Khartoum too late—a few days after its fall, the murder of Gordon, and the massacre of his followers by the Dervishes.

Would Have Saved Gordon.

Had Chamberlain had his way and had the expedition started three months earlier, Gordon undoubtedly would have been saved, the Mahdi destroyed and the entire Soudan preserved from the desolation, bloodshed, and devastation to which it was subjected throughout the fourteen years that followed until reconquered by Lord Kitchener in 1898.

Lord Wolseley was much with Chamberlain in the Spring of 1884, and one evening when sitting with both of them after dinner in Chamberlain's library on the ground floor of his hospitable house in Prince's Gardens, the conversation switched from Gordon to Valentine Baker Pasha who had just then been badly wounded by the Dervishes in the battle of Tokar on the Red Sea, a battle in which he had displayed a heroism that excited the enthusiasm of every English soldier.

It is needless to relate here the now almost forgotten railroad train episode which wrecked his so brilliant career in the British army. But Wolseley, who had always been his warm friend, presented to us the matter in a new light, which put a very different complexion on the affair, and which Baker's Quixotic chivalry alone prevented from being put forward at the trial. Had he permitted his lawyers to cross-examine, had he mentioned the facts subsequently brought out, not by himself, but by such friends as Wolseley, the then Prince of Wales, the late Duke of Cambridge, &c., he would never have been convicted, sent to jail for a year, without hard labor, or dismissed the army. The very worst that would have happened to him might have been to be shelved temporarily on half pay, for having dined a trifle more well than wisely at a regimental banquet.

As the result of this conversation about him at Prince's Gardens, it was suggested by Chamberlain and Wolseley that I induce the Khedive to write a letter to Queen Victoria, begging her as a great favor to himself to recognize Baker's splendid services to Egypt, in the face of the enemy, and also in the creation of her fine gendarmerie force, following his superb leadership of the Ottoman forces on many a battle field of the Turko-Russian war of 1877, by restoring to him his commission in the British army.

Then and there we drafted together the letter for Tewfik to send to the Queen, and after I had sounded Marlborough House and ascertained that the idea was warmly approved by the Prince of Wales, I dispatched the draft to Cairo. The Khedive was very good about it, at once compiled with my request, and embodied the draft verbatim in a letter to her Majesty, which she received a little over three weeks later. But it was of no avail, and of all the relatively numerous letters which Tewfik sent to the Queen, this was the only one which remained without any response or acknowledgment. That it reached her safely I ascertained from von Sahl.

The contents of the letter of the Khedive to the Queen, however, became known in high military circles in London, through Wolseley, and won much good will for Tewfik. It is pleasant to be able to relate that when Valentine Baker subsequently visited England, he was entertained as a most distinguished Turkish and Egyptian general, at a grand banquet at the Army and Navy Club, at which the Duke of Cambridge, commander-in-chief of the British army, presided, and at which the then heir apparent, and all the principal generals, his old-time comrades, gave him a magnificent ovation. But the Queen never relented, and Baker died at Cairo, without obtaining the one rehabilitation for which he so yearned—the restoration of his commission as Colonel of Cavalry in the English army.

Another insight into Chamberlain's character was afforded to me in the Summer of 1885. On my return to London after an absence of several months, I had occasion to pay a long visit to the late W. T. Stead, at the offices of the Pall Mall Gazette, of which he was then editor. Stead, whom I had known for years, had just finished the publication of that amazing series of articles entitled "The Maiden Tribute of Modern Babylon," and naturally they furnished the subject of our conversation.

During the course of the latter he placed his hand upon a big pile of documents on one of the tables in his room, and remarked that they constituted the material, in the shape of affidavits, official and private records of one kind and another, and also police reports, for another series of articles dealing with even more shocking conditions of crime.

I happened to mention this to Chamberlain when driving from his house in Prince's Gardens, in his brougham, after breakfast, to Whitehall. He was greatly aroused over the matter, taking the ground that the publication of articles of this nature far from accomplishing any good, were calculated to do no end of harm, by corrupting the imagination of people who had no conception that such things were possible.

He made use in connection with his denunciation of the unpardonable crime of corrupting innocence—that is, innocent minds—of the Scriptural declaration, that, it were better that a millstone were fastened to the neck of the man guilty of such an offence, and he were flung into the uttermost depths of the sea.

Inquiring of me whether I had any objection to his making use of the information, and receiving my assurance that I had none, since Stead had not bound me to any secrecy, he directed his coachman to drive to the Home Department, instead of to his own office, and there entered immediately into conference with the Secretary of State. Within half an hour, the proprietor of The Pall Mall Gazette, Thompson Yates, was hurriedly summoned to the Home Department, where he was informed by the Secretary, and by Mr. Chamberlain, that the Government, as a matter of public policy and propriety, would not permit the appearance of the projected series of articles.

Thompson Yates not only readily acceded to the arguments of the two statesmen, and gave them the assurance that nothing of the kind should appear in The Pall Mall Gazette, as long as he remained the owner thereof, but he even turned over to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, all the documents which were to constitute the basis of the series of articles planned by Stead. The latter protested vigorously, but without avail, and it was this that commenced the break between Yates and Stead which culminated in the latter's dismissal from the editorship of The Pall Mall Gazette.

This quotation by Chamberlain of a verse of the Bible on that occasion, may serve to enable me to inform the readers of THE TIMES of the fact, generally ignored, that he is a very religious man, that he has been prominent in Sunday School work, and conspicuous as a Sunday School teacher. Indeed, with the possible exception of Mr. Gladstone, and the late Lord Selborne, he is the only English Cabinet Minister who is on record as ever having taught a Bible class.

He is not a member of the Established Church of England, but a Nonconformist, and his Sunday school work was in connection with the Methodist Chapel in Birmingham, and the new defunct Carter's Lane Chapel in London. I am compelled to add that, while for good order and discipline no class could compare with that of Mr. Chamberlain, he never seemed to get into much sympathy with those whom he taught.

This was perhaps due to the impression which he conveyed of being a hard, worldly man of affairs, devoid of sentiment, and of belief in anything that is not based on positive, tangible facts within his reach. Then, too, it may have been attributable to his eyeglass, with which, in teaching, as afterward in speaking in the House of Commons and on the platform, he was wont to emphasize each argument, swinging it about the index finger of his right hand, groping for it about his neck and chest, and dropping it suddenly from his eye at the close of each telling point.

His Lighter Side.

And yet no greater mistake could be made than to imagine for one moment that Joe Chamberlain, who refused the peerages pressed upon him by Queen Victoria and King Edward, is without a lighter and, above all, a very soft side to his character. He has written several most amusing plays, which have been produced on the amateur stage, finds relaxation in French novels, of which he devours a vast number, and entertains a most pronounced fondness for beautiful flowers—his orchids enjoy a world-wide celebrity—and for beautiful paintings.

Before he became so ill he was never seen in public without an orchid in his buttonhole and his town house in Prince's Garden, and his country seat at Highbury, near Birmingham, are full of exquisite works of art, especially of the modern school. Yet the place of honor in his library at Highbury, which is his favorite den, is accorded to a large collection of childish sketches and blotchy paintings, bearing the very necessary label "This is a robin," "This is a tree," &c.

These are Christmas cards drawn by his children, who now have youngsters of their own—the very earliest attempts when chubby hands found it very hard to hold a pencil and paper. They were a labor of love, and so they remain after many years in the place of honor, bearing silent witness to that side of Mr. Chamberlain's character which is least known to the public at large, but which always has the effect of touching a very responsive chord of sympathy among those who have the privilege of knowing him "at home."

THINGS HEARD IN THIS TOWN

The Terror of the Sea.

LILLIAN RUSSELL tells of a girl who made her first trip abroad last Summer. During this trip the young woman kept a journal, which upon her return Miss Russell was privileged to examine. It was the usual journal of the schoolgirl, and very much like the one that Mark Twain tells us he kept, wherein for seven days he recorded the important facts that he "got up, washed, and went to breakfast." There was this exception, however—the girl described the trying time she had in crossing the British Channel.

"I firmly resolved to stay on deck," the journal read, "although the tempest increased to such an extent that it was only with the greatest difficulty that I could hold up my parasol."

Why Willie Was Hilarious.

LITTLE Willie had been permitted to enter the sickroom to view the small stranger who had arrived a few days before. He looked the little one over, with the disapproval natural to a deposed monarch. The nurse brought out the baby's bathtub and filled it with water. Then she started unwinding the baby's outer shell, preparatory to bathing it, while Willie stood by watching the procedure with interest. Suddenly the light of understanding illumined his face and he rushed to the door.

"Hey, Sis!" he shrilled down the stairs. "Come on up, quick. They're going to drown it."

Secret Naval Code Book.

FEW things are so jealously guarded as the secret code book of the United States Navy. It is a book of signals—not the ordinary "wig-wag" signals used in the daily direction of the fleet by a commanding officer—but a code of signals to be used solely in time of war and in the presence of an enemy.

These secret code books are issued only to the executive officers of a ship, who are enjoined to protect them against theft by every possible means. These books are threatened not so much by the ordinary thief as by secret emissaries of other Governments who desire to obtain knowledge of what our battleships would do in time of action. Governments have no scruples against theft in such cases.

The loss of one of these secret code books by an officer, unless explained to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, would mean court-martial and probable expulsion from the service. To the honor of our service, no officer has ever yet been brought up charged with loss.

The books are bound in heavy metal covers, so that in time of threatened capture they may be thrown overboard, sinking at once to the bottom of the sea, and thus avoiding seizure.

The Cause.

WHO is that fellow?" asked Greene of a friend one evening at the club.

"Why, that's Henderson," was the reply; "you know him, don't you? Come on over, I'll introduce you."

"Excuse me," said Greene, with considerable emphasis, "I have no use for that fellow."

"Why," queried the other, in some surprise, "what have you against him?"

"Well, old man, of course you didn't know," explained Greene, "but, you see, he jilted my wife once."

Nothing to Publish.

WHY she had abandoned the revision of her cook book for foreign publication was the subject of the woman's lament.

"We edited it all away," she said. "An English lecturer on cookery helped me. She went through it and said, 'No use to tell how to cook that over there, because they haven't got it,' and by the time she had finished blotting out all the proscribed recipes there was nothing left to publish.

"To have to leave out clams, squabs, terrapin, canvasback duck, venison, planked shad, bluefish, weakfish, and a dozen other kinds of fish, okra, succotash, gumbo, pumpkin pie, buckwheat cakes, and 300 other recipes just as good because such culinary gifts of the gods are absolutely unknown in foreign kitchens would dampen the ardor of the most enthusiastic writer. A few dozen recipes dealing with boiled potatoes, cabbages, joints, and dried fruit puddings are hardly sufficient to base your reputation on as a cook and an author."

Absence

SOMETHING is missing in the sky and sea;
Something is lacking in the daisy's grace;
Something has vanished from the mystic charm
Which erstwhile haunted each familiar place.

The east wind drives the white surf to my feet,
From north and south the merry winds blow free;
The south wind whispers songs I once held sweet,
But not one brings a meseage back to me.

Something is missing in the sky and sea;
Something has stolen from the sun its gold;
And something dumbly waits within my heart
Until the hours of parting shall be told.

The Lady in the Tank.

JUST to please his wife the stout man consented to take a peep at Marie Corelli's house before "doing" the historic part of Stratford-on-Avon. He regarded it with evident appreciation.

"Pretty nice place," he said. "I knew when I saw her in London that she was making money, but I didn't think her salary was big enough to afford a house like this."

"Why, dear," said his timid wife; "you never saw Marie Corelli in London."

"I'd like to know why I didn't," he retorted. "Ain't she the lady I saw swimming in a tank at the Tivoli?"

In no wise abashed at having confounded Marie Corelli and Annette Kellermann, the stout man moved complacently on to Stratford's other shrines.

Hard to Fit.

THE fish dealer explained to an old customer why he had discontinued the practice of supplying rubbers for women customers to slop around in over the slippery market floors.

"I stopped it," he said, "because I could never supply the right-sized shoes without insulting somebody. If I offered them small shoes they were so mad because they couldn't wear them that they never forgave me for the humiliation, and if I gave them rubbers they could wear they were madder still because I had taken it for granted that they had big feet. Either way I worked it that overshoe scheme made enemies, so I concluded it was better for business to let folks slop around with wet feet."

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY TO FIGHT TAMMANY HALL

Experienced Politicians at the Head of It—Plan Is to Beat Tammany in the Assembly Districts and If Necessary to Put Forth a Candidate for Governor Against Glynn—Financial Support Assured and Patronage Expected

WITHIN the next few days a meeting will be held of old-line Democrats—not "kid glove" or "silk stocking" Democrats, but practical politicians—to organize a new Democratic Party in this city in opposition to Tammany Hall. The leader of the movement is James J. Martin, formerly Police Commissioner and City Chamberlain, and plans have been made to organize every Assembly District in the city under the leadership of men most of whom formerly were active in Tammany Hall.

Martin's men intend to give Murphy a reasonable time to get out, and if he does not do so, Martin says, they will send a delegation to the Democratic State Convention and insist that it be admitted as the regular Democratic delegation. "The badge of regularity," said he to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter, "will be taken from the Tammany Hall candidates for Representatives in Congress, State Senators and Assemblymen, and they will be left high and dry at the next election."

Among the district leaders who are to take charge of the new organization are John J. Halligan, who will direct the movement in the Thirteenth Assembly District; James J. Devaney in the Eleventh Assembly District, and Joe Hussey in Dooling's district.

Halligan declared last night to THE TIMES reporter that if Gov. Glynn continued to maintain his present apparent pro-Tammany attitude, the new organization would undertake to beat him for the nomination by putting up Mayor Cornelius F. Burns of Troy. As Glynn comes from Albany, the tactical significance of this geographical choice can be seen; also, Burns is an anti-Tammany Deocrat, and his was the only county which the Democrats carried in the late election.

Help Expected from Washington.

The new Democrats look confidently to the Federal Administration to render them aid. They expect that Collector of the Port Malone will stiffen them up, and they have already been in communication with Mayor-elect Mitchel with regard to getting support from the city administration. Aside from Mitchel they look for support to all the Democrats who were elected on the Fusion ticket.

THE TIMES reporter asked Mr. Martin for a statement of the basis and aims of the new organization. In answer to the question, "What were the causes that led to the defeat of the Democratic ticket in the State and city at the election on Nov. 4?" Mr. Martin said:

"It was the uprising of the people against the stupid, arrogant, and selfish leadership of Boss Murphy. They were disgusted with his management of the New York delegation at the Democratic National Convention a year ago last June, when the nomination of President Wilson was made by more than a three-fourths vote, and all that the ninety delegates from New York could do was to move to make it unanimous.

"His greatest and most vital mistake was in forcing the impeachment of Gov. Sulzer by the Assembly on the 13th day of August last. By the aid of the Republican Boss Barnes he controlled that body, and by the same aid he controlled the State Senate, so that on the so-called 'trial' of the Governor he was able to keep out all the evidence that would have shown the good work that Gov. Sulzer had done in his investigation of the State departments, which was conducted by John A. Hennessy and George W. Blake, whereby many millions of dollars were saved to the people.

"That Mr. Murphy controlled the Senate is clearly obvious by the vote of the so-called 'High Court of Impeachment' against admitting the evidence of Mr. Hennessy, and also by the vote of 28 to 24 against taking the evidence of Judge Beardsley of Utica, who, if the vote had been 27 to 25 the other way, would have testified that he offered Gov. Sulzer $25,000 in cash for his client, the late Anthony N. Brady, that he refused it and that Judge Beardsley then gave the money to Mr. Murphy, who never accounted for it.

"This testimony, if admitted, would have forced Murphy to take the stand to explain what became of the money, and then, on cross-examination, the whole story of his relations with the Governor could have been gone into. Gov. Sulzer has since told the story in the newspapers, and the people were familiar with it before the election.

"Therefore, I say, when the Governor was impeached by Boss Murphy and Boss Barnes, the Democratic Party of the State was split wide open, and the Murphy-Democratic ticket in the city was defeated by an overwhelming vote. The people's mind was made up against the bosses and on Election Day they cast their votes to put Murphy out of business, and when the opportunity comes they will do the same with Mr. Barnes.

"Now, what will Mr. Murphy and most of his so-called 'leaders' do? If they had an ounce of sense they would retire as gracefully as possible. Like the Arabs, they would fold their tent and silently steal away. Since the election there has been a revolt in every Assembly District against them.

"No meeting of the Tammany General Committee has been held since it was organized last September and I dare Mr. Murphy to call a meeting now to test his right to lead the Democrats here.

"Should he and his 'leaders' retire, the Democratic organization in the Counties of New York and Kings could be reorganized, and clean and decent men would be in control. The Democrats who supported John Purroy Mitchel for Mayor at the election on Nov. 4 have no quarrel with the rank and file of Democrats who supported Mr. McCall. Under ordinary conditions he might have been an acceptable candidate. But at the election he did not count. The people looked on Mr. Murphy as the candidate for Mayor and voted solidly for his overthrow.

"If Mr. Murphy does not retire of his own motion within a reasonable time, or if the decent members of the Democratic organization are not able to force him out, the Democrats who supported the Fusion ticket will form a new Democratic organization in each of the Assembly districts, and next Fall will send a delegation to the Democratic State Convention, and it will be admitted. The badge of regularity will be taken from the Tammany Hall candidates for Representatives in Congress, State Senators, and Assemblymen, and they will be left high and dry at the next election."

Mr. Halligan was a good deal more specific. He said:

"Tammany Hall consists of an oligarchy of a few families; it has been metamorphosed into a little tyrannical monarchy. We would believe in reorganization of the Hall if it could be accomplished, but it cannot. Tammany Hall can never be reformed, as it is now organized. It is an organization that is not up-to-date; that does not represent the voter.

"Murphy will never resign. He figures now that he will remain until the election of the new Governor and will get enough State patronage to hold his organization.

"This new organization must have money for clubrooms and political printing, and it must be composed of clean, independent Democrats, who will never think of going back to Tammany Hall as an institution. Bills must be passed in the Legislature so that the Tammany Hall leaders cannot select the Inspectors of Elections, as they do under the present primary law. It is absolutely impossible for any anti-Tammany Democrat who aspires to the Democratic leadership of any district to be elected under the law as it now stands. Even if he has the votes you cannot win with partisan Inspectors of Elections. A law must be passed to give the opposing candidates an equal number of Inspectors with the Tammany Hall leader whom he opposes, just the same as under the election law Inspectors are divided between the parties.

"Furthermore, we shall undertake to legislate out of office Tammany leaders such as that one who now has virtually a life job at $6,000 a year, taking charge of the records of the Surrogate's Court. The Legislature gave him the place only until the records could be brought up to date, but a six-year-old child can understand that that means a permanency. There are a number of leaders holding office by act of the Legislature whom the newly elected officials cannot lawfully remove. That applies to all the five boroughs.

"Once we obtain a majority of the leaders under the new primary law which Gov. Glynn proposes to pass we will be in a position to elect the Chairman of the County Committee, and we shall be the regular organization. We will have help for all these things. There are some millionaire Democrats who have promised their financial support in New York City, and a number of rich men up the State, many of them county leaders, will aid us in every way to obtain control of the organization.

"If Gov. Glynn persists in being hand in glove with Tammany Hall and does not give a fair recognition in our efforts for the cause of good government, we will have another candidate for Governor in the person of the man who brought Rensselaer County into the ranks of the Democratic party and kept it there in the last election by 4,400 majority. He is the Mayor of Troy, Cornelius F. Burns. Of course you don't need to be told that the next candidate for Governor will have to be an up-State man.

"Burns is independent of the Tammany machine. Senator Knight and Assemblymen Schwartz and Taylor of Rensselaer voted for direct primaries and against the impeachment of Sulzer, and that was the only county in the State that went Democratic.

"The American people seem to be obsessed with the idea that good government can be obtained by legislation, but it never was obtained by mere laws. There must be the men. We want men of the calibre of Dudley Field Malone as district leaders.

"The consequence will be that a better class of legislators will be sent to Albany. Every one knows that the legislators we send there from New York City are utterly unable to cope with the bright minds from the country districts. Some of them can't talk the King's English. Men would be sent to represent us for their brains and efficiency, whereas, under this present régime, they are sent for the cunning they display on Election Day—getting the vote out, as they call it.

"A meeting of the new Democrats will be held next week. Of course we can do nothing definite until we find out the kind of direct primary that Gov. Glynn expects to put through the Legislature. Our object is to take away from Tammany Hall the Democratic emblem of the star and make it our own.

"We have already received the adhesion of one Tammany leader who has agreed to join our movement, and we expect to receive more. The movement is young yet.

"We shall try to elect men to the Legislature from every Assembly District in New York City. Of course we can't do that if Tammany controls the patronage, but it won't. The Mayor alone has 250 appointments to make outside of the Civil Service rules, and we do not expect to see him put Tammany men in."

Mr. Martin had something to say on this subject, too. He pointed out that McCall got about 225,000 votes and Mitchel about 347,000. Then he continued:

"The city employes, including the Police and Fire Departments and the school teachers, are said to number 80,000. With their relatives and connections they should be able to bring in, say, 240,000 votes, and I believe that 80 per cent. of the votes were for McCall. That would give 144,000 votes from that source alone.

"I estimate that the influence of the liquor dealers would be worth 60,000 votes, and I think it moderate to say that 80 per cent. of that vote went to McCall, making a net vote for him of 36,000. That would account for 180,000 of his vote. The Tammany Republicans who voted for him were at least 20,000 in number.

"That makes 200,000 votes. It leaves only 25,000 votes for McCall that can be said to have been cast by Democrats who neither held office nor were related to officeholders, and who were not in the liquor business nor connected with it."

Wants a Fair Chance.

Mr. Martin wished it clearly understood that what he had to say about sending a delegation to the next State Convention which would contest the title of regularity with Tammany Hall was based on the assumption that the law would remain as it stands.

"If," said he, "a direct primary law is passed abolishing the State Convention, of course we shall make our fight at the primaries alone. We shall direct our energies toward securing the passage of a really honest direct primary law, one which will deprive Tammany of its monopoly of the election inspectors and give both sides a fair chance, just as is done now on Election Day under the law giving both parties their share of inspectors."

Collector Malone has already made it clear that he is in hearty sympathy with the movement to overthrow the present régime in the Democratic party, and of course there is no need of saying where Mayor-elect Mitchel and President McAneny stand.

It is many years since there has been any efficient Democratic organization in New York except Tammany Hall, but men not yet middle-aged can remember the time when the County Democracy held the party title to regularity and when Tammany was a minority faction. When Richard Croker took the Tammany leadership he built up the organization so successfully that the County Democracy speedily crumbled to pieces. The present seems to be the first occasion since then when a vigorous effort with the promise of success has been made to destroy Tammany's assumption that it monopolizes the Democratic Party in this city.

NIGHT-TIME AT THE AQUARIUM AFTER THE VISITORS HAVE GONE

Plenty of Strange Sounds There to Disturb the Silence, as Some Fishes Don't Seem to Sleep at All—Clams as Rat Catchers.

THE place is the Aquarium, the time is 4 P. M. A whistle sounds as a signal, and the visitors begin to stream toward the door. Within ten minutes the last of them has gone, but with their going the Aquarium is not entirely deserted.

Scarcely has the door closed when the sweepers take their place. They have a big job, these sweepers, for the whole building, ground floor and galleries, must be gone over thoroughly every day. That no time may be wasted, seals feed while sweepers work, and the West Indian seal's bed, which is nothing more elaborate than a stone platform at one end of its pool, is being made comfortable for the night by playing on it with warm water from a hose.

In spite of this activity the great building immediately after the closing hour looks bigger than ever; it is strangely quiet, too, this vast twilight space where but just before sounded the swishing of thousands of feet. The emptiness and stillness deepen the fascination of a place always fascinating. The great room, with a circle of oblong pools set in the floor surrounding the great round pool in the centre, and with its walls lined two tiers high with glass-fronted tanks filled with fishes, is never anything but strange and interesting, but seen in the dim light of scattering gas jets it seems stranger and more interesting than ever.

Cleaning and feeding over, the last daily task at the Aquarium is in order. This is a vital point, for it consists in looking after the circulation of water in the tanks. The men in charge of these things go over the tanks separately, one after another, seeing that the inflowing water is coming in with proper volume and that the surplus water is running off all right through the overflow pipe. The temperature of the water has been previously looked after. Satisfied that his tropical temperament has been properly considered, the West Indian seal climbs out on the warmed platform at the end of the pool, and, snuggling up under the slightly overhanging coping that runs around the top of the pool, he turns in for the night. He is a creature of exemplary habits. Very often he goes to bed before the last of the day men leave the building, and will stay there, more than likely, until morning.

The night engineer has already gone on duty in the boiler room, where there is a force always on duty, day and night. The temperature of the building must be kept uniform, and there are pumps going always to keep up the water supply. And this suggests that, strangely quiet as the great building seemed when it was first emptied of visitors, it is presently discovered that there is to be heard there one sound which, in one form or another, is really incessant; that is the sound of running water.

This may reach the ear first in the gurgling flow of the surplus water running off from one of the pools through its overflow pipe. If any door leading into the corridor back of the exhibition tanks is opened, the sound of running water is heard there in a steady, subdued roar, like that of a sm[illegible]aterfall, ever going. The water, [illegible]alt and fresh, which feeds the various big supply tanks from which the pools and the smaller tanks are filled, is run from big pipes that are cut off each a foot or two above the tank level. Falling through the space the running water takes in and carries with it more or less air, and the disturbance of the water in a tank, caused by the stream's plunging into it, helps also in the aeration of the water. These small cataracts are always sounding; in fact, the sound of running water is a characteristic of the place; but in the great public room of the building this sound is heard in forms so subdued that it scarcely seems to break the stillness, and its absence would be far more keenly noted than its presence is.

But across this prevailing stillness there come occasionally in the course of the night some odd sounds. Now and then is heard the bark of the West Indian seal, this being a noise that is something between the bark of a dog and the grunt of a pig. But the West Indian seal's barking is more likely to be done at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when it is waiting for its dinner. The other seals commonly climb up on their platform and sleep at night, as the West Indian seal does on his platform, but the harbor seals do not go to bed so early, and they may be heard, perhaps, splashing about in their pool. The splashing of water is, of course, a common and characteristic sound in an aquarium, where there are many fishes.

A sound that is likely to be almost startling to one hearing it for the first time is a loud smack that can be distinctly heard all over the great room. That smack is made by a striped bass, and it means that the bass has just taken in a killie from the surface of the water and by the edge of the tank. In taking the killie in these circumstances the bass opens and closes its mouth partly above water and takes in air and water and killie all together, making in the operation the odd, smacking sound. This sound may be heard at intervals through the night, showing that their appetites are good and that the striped bass have not gone to bed, but are up and around.

The same restlessness animates the fishes in the great central pool. There the shark makes its ceaseless rounds by night as well as by day. Running slowly, waving his tail this way and that like a scull, with just force enough to give steerage way, he circumnavigates the pool time after time, hour after hour, all through the night. A big channel, or spotted bass, keeps him company, but the bass does not hug the wall so persistently as the shark does, but often cuts across lots.

Commonly the big eight-foot sturgeon in his pool may be seen moving slowly about by night as well as by day, but in the Autumn he is not very active at either time, since he finds the water pretty cold, and although he may be seen moving he is likely to be stretched out motionless in the water, like a great fish of papier mache. The lively salmon in their pool are as fond of splashing about in the night time as the day time, and the big loggerhead in the turtle pool paddles about as briskly at 2 o'clock in the morning as at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

As to the fishes in the wall tanks, there are some that bury themselves in the sand in their tanks, just as they would in a state of nature. Then there are some fishes that are naturally more quiet than others, more inclined just to stand around, and that do stand around. Other fishes, possibly, are less active after the visitors have gone. Many fishes are very sensitive. The presence of visitors has excited them more or less, and they are glad to settle down and stay in one place for a little while. But these are exceptions. Generally speaking, the active fishes that are commonly inclined to keep in motion seem to keep going just the same by night or by day.

Looking in any direction at any hour of the night there may always be seen in the tanks fishes swimming, and if one should look into the lobster and crab tank he would be as likely to find the lobster clawing about now as at any time, and the nervous crabs scuttling back and forth just the same. The seals go to bed and go to sleep; for practically all the rest of the Aquarium inhabitants day and night seem to be all the same; they take no note of time, and many of them seem never to sleep.

At intervals through the night the watchmen make their rounds of the building, including the corridors back of the exhibition tanks to see that the tanks are all right, and to look after things in general. There was a time when their presence helped to keep away the rats, but now the tanks are protected by wire screens. Before the screens were put on rats had been captured at night in tanks, into which they had jumped after fish, small specimens of which they sometimes managed to land. But though there is no show for the rats there now in the way of food they still come into the building, and after 4 o'clock in the afternoon a rat, perhaps half as big as a cat, may be seen scampering across the floor, the only visitor allowed after the closing hour.

Formerly cats were employed to catch the rats, but the cats developed more interest in the fish than they did in the rats, and after one of them, standing on the stone coping around the central pool, had lost its balance and fallen into the water in an effort to scoop out a fish swimming past, the cats were banished and traps substituted. Traps are now used, with some occasional assistance from the hard clams that are kept in the feed room, to be opened and fed to the stock. The rats go there in search of food. Everything else being shut up in a big refrigerator, they continue their search by wandering around over the hard clams. Here at least two rats have been caught, one by a foot, the other by its tail, between the shells of partly opened clams, which had promptly closed to hold the rat a prisoner.

So the night wears on, and with the coming of day comes the Aquarium's day force, and the fishes get their breakfast. Then presently 10 o'clock is here, and with 10 o'clock arrive the visitors.

SEES AMERICAN GUNS DEFENDING BRITISH COLONIES

Dr. R. M. Johnston of Harvard Prophesies in The Infantry Journal That Australia and Canada Will Turn to Our Pacific Fleet for Protection When the Question of Asiatic Expansion Becomes Acute.

WITH an American fleet well based in the Pacific and in control of the central routes of that ocean through Honolulu and Guam, Australia and Canada will instinctively, of necessity, turn to that fleet for their eventual security, should the problem of Asiatic expansion come to a head, as it surely will sooner or later."

These are the words of Dr. Robert Matteson Johnston, Chairman of the Military History Committee of the American Historical Association, and one of the most widely known writers on historical subjects in this country. Dr. Johnston is the Assistant Professor of History in Harvard University, and is the author of many standard works, among them "The Roman Theocracy and the Republic," "The Napoleonic Empire in Southern Italy," "The French Revolution," and "American Soldiers."

Dr. Johnston's prophecy that eventually the great British possessions in North America and the Far East will turn to the United States for protection is made in the course of an article entitled "The Imperial Future of the United States." The article, a copy of which will be mailed to a majority of the officers of the United States Army, appears in the December issue of The Infantry Journal, published in Washington by the officers of the infantry arm of the regular service.

Dr. Johnston writes:

The international adjustments of the last few years, the tendencies of to-day, point to an impending change which will be greater even than that whereby, a century and a half ago, England acquired Canada and lost her united colonies. The causes at work then were of a mixed economic and military character as they are now. By glancing back at them, by estimating at their true value those now in operation, we may stand a better chance of seeing a little more clearly into the future, and therefore of doing our duty better in the present.

Great Change in Situation.

Until Chatham, to use the words of Dr. Johnston, "blundered into the conquest of Canada," independence on the part of that which is now the United States was an unthinkable proposition. Dr. Johnston adds:

Until that moment the pressure of French military power on the colonial borders had turned the Colonies toward Great Britain for protection; the military factor in one direction had negatived the economic in another. With Canada conquered, and the military threat disposed of, the economic pressure was unchecked, and immediately resulted in the movement for independence. That, in the baldest terms, was what happened a century and a half ago; let us turn now to the present.

From 1776, or at all events from 1805, the year of Trafalgar, down to about ten years ago, Great Britain held a large and world-wide preponderance of naval power. With slender military means, but under the secure cover of an unchallenged fleet, she continued building up her "dominion over palm and pine," till it reached the form that we know to-day. Let us note in that empire, merely in outline, a few salient facts bearing, as will appear presently, on our main proposition.

First—Great Britain's long-continued work of territorial acquisition has now virtually come to an end; the problem she faces, and it is already an acute one, is how to retain and consolidate what she has acquired in the past.

Second—The British fleet has recently ceased to play its former part, for several reasons: (a) Its supremacy is now directly challenged by the German fleet, which weighs more heavily in the balance year by year, as is already perceptible in the diplomatic field. (b) To meet this challenge, the British fleet has been drawn into home waters, and its influence, in the decisive sense, has apparently departed forever from about one-half of the globe, being now roughly limited to the Atlantic and Mediterranean. (c) Conditions have changed so that some parts of the world, long dominated by British interests and only accessible by sea routes, are now being pierced by railroads working down from the north; the possible means for the transport of hostile armies.

Third—These and other facts have created a widespread opinion that before many years, and probably at some point between Gibraltar and Hongkong, the British Empire is likely to suffer considerable dislocations.

Fourth—The economic growth and increase of population of the last few years have served to throw into stronger relief the incongruous elements of the British Empire: one part made up of conquered races, the other of free, rapidly growing Anglo-Saxon communities, the equals in all but size of Great Britain and the United States. It is with the latter only, South Africa, New Zealand, Australia, and Canada, that we can be concerned. The efforts of England to embrace Asiatic and African races within her system involve her in dangers and problems that weaken her in other directions and that cannot interest the United States.

Summing up the situation, Dr. Johnston believes that Great Britain to-day finds herself at the head of a too extensive empire, and he terms her position as one "so weak on land, and now so threatened at sea, that it would seem that the fabric would soon begin to crumble."

The Spanish war, Dr. Johnston points out, was fortunate in that it gave to the United States an overwhelming argument for an effective navy. As a result of that war America to-day has a navy of which she is deservedly proud. With the opening of the Panama Canal in sight, the sphere of that fleet assumes the greatest importance to the English-speaking people.

Dr. Johnston says:

The development of the German Navy has been a manifestation of the energy and skill of her people, of her ardent desire to obtain economic outlet by means of colonial conquest and of the military tendencies of her Government. She does not disguise her anxiety to acquire naval stations on the great Atlantic trade routes and territorial possessions, which she will probably get some day, in Africa. All this in a frankly military power like Germany constitutes a menace to peace, especially should she cast her eyes on the West Indian islands, several of which might easily come into her possession, or on South America; and substantially it is the British fleet, and not our own, that has stood between us and this threat these last few years.

Great Britain has played the imperial part, and shielded the mid-Atlantic from danger. But should her strength decline still further, should she be tempted some day to evade war by coming to terms with Germany, then it would be our own fleet unaided which from Key West would have to enforce the policy of President Monroe—a very heavy task.

But, unfortunately, our position in the Atlantic is about to be weakened, because the opening of the canal and unhappy necessities urgently call for our fleet elsewhere. Great Britain has abandoned the Pacific; we are about to enter it. That change is fraught with great consequences for all the English-speaking communities. For at the present moment the only naval power in that ocean, in one-half of the globe, is that of Japan. Let us consider for a moment how the Japanese Empire came to be in such a position.

The withdrawal of the British battle squadron from the Pacific was the result of various factors. One of these was the destruction by the Japanese of the Russian naval force in the East, and their treaty alliance with Great Britain, which contained a guarantee for India. Under those circumstances it appeared to the British Government not only that its battleships had become unnecessary in the East where their allies were now clearly preponderant, but that they might as well be used at home, to keep down the rising German Navy.

Since then the Japanese naval power has grown so fast that it is unthinkable that Great Britain should ever consider detaching to the Pacific Ocean a battle squadron large enough to weigh against Japan, and provide such a squadron with its necessary base. The withdrawal of the British fleet really gave uncontested supremacy to Japan, though at the time this was not generally recognized.

The Japanese Government was too grateful or too loyal, and too preoccupied with financial, military, and political problems, to take advantage of the situation; and its general attitude has probably not, as yet, been appreciably modified. But the danger of a conflict of interests between Japan and the English-speaking countries was already present—expansion, racial and economic.

Here again the facts are too well known to be more than indicated. Australia, although really defenseless, voted Asiatic exclusion, and, awaking to her defenselessness, has since begun to arm herself, to the point of introducing universal military service. In Canada and in this country, the incidents of anti-Asiatic legislation need only be recalled. And at the present moment the natural, if somewhat ill-adjusted, resistance of California to Japanese expansion has brought us within sight of a deplorable struggle.

All reasonable men in Japan and in this country regret that there should be any possibility of conflict. Yet the possibility exists just the same, because both races are expanding and in opposing directions, so that a collision at some point or other is almost inevitable. One may have the greatest respect and admiration for the Japanese; one may have warm personal friends among them; and yet the racial difference subsists, and if at any given point it is to be the one race or the other, we must and we will follow our own people wherever it takes us. And first and foremost all this leads us to the obvious, the great duty of protecting ourselves. With a conflict possible, we should be in a position to resist aggression and to maintain what is ours.

Our small and poor sister, Australia, with a similar danger facing her, arms and trains every one of her young men, and lays the foundations of an Australian navy. It is time that we also looked at the situation squarely, that we turned for a moment from logrolling and sentimentalizing, and gave the fortune and the honor of our country a little honest consideration. It is in doing this, in carrying out the elementary duty of self-protection, of national insurance, that we shall attain, incidentally, an imperial policy.

For what does protection mean? As these lines are written, (July, 1913,) one may almost say that we owe everything to the forbearance, the goodwill, the good sense, of the Japanese Government. Perhaps we also owe something to the fact that Japan is not yet prepared to sacrifice her British alliance for the sake of a doubtful military adventure in the Pacific. It may also be that our magnificent economic resources, our money, and our energy, are not without their moral effect.

But in a military sense we are obviously enough helpless. We have no fleet in the Pacific; we have no adequate military force at any point; some military experts even believe that nothing could prevent the immediate occupation of California by the Japanese. Whether that be so or not, we clearly have a grave problem of national existence to face, and what we require to solve it is not unattainable: a small field force of regular troops, about 100,000 men, in California; the canal completed with a fleet and a naval dockyard on the Pacific side, and Honolulu and Guam properly fortified, and sufficiently garrisoned, which at present they are not. How small an outlay would this entail, when we consider not only the vastness of the interests involved, but how smaller and poorer nations than ourselves are ready to face sacrifices many times greater for far less justified ends.

And here comes the great consequence. With an American fleet well based in the Pacific and in control of the central routes of that ocean through Honolulu and Guam, Australia and Canada will instinctively, of necessity, turn to that fleet for their eventual security, should the problem of Asiatic expansion come to a head, as it surely will sooner or later.

Just as inevitably as the military pressure of France turned the Colonies to the mother country for protection before 1763, so will Australia and Canada, now that the mother country is powerless in the Pacific, turn to us for, let us say, friendly assistance, the instant we establish a sound military defense of the triangle San Francisco-Honolulu-Panama. And so incidentally to our own essential defense, there arises a question which is, at bottom, that of the regrouping of the English-speaking communities.

The world cares far less than it did twenty-five or even ten years ago about what the terms empire, monarchy, republic, federation, may be held to imply; but it cares more than ever it did about the economic conditions affecting the ordinary citizen under whatever form of government he may be living. The old idea of the war of conquest is giving way to the idea of pooling economic and military interests, adjusting conflicts wherever possible, and leaving local forms of government unchanged.

Jealousy of England Outgrown.

It is along some such lines as these that the advent of the American fleet into the Pacific should bring us closer to the other English-speaking States and lay the foundations of a new and greater empire. We surely have outgrown any jealousy, any dislike, with which we formerly looked on the British flag. We surely have become too great to continue the country attorney policies that have too often done duty for statesmanship in the conduct of our foreign affairs. We surely can see the advantage and the honor of advancing on a broadened path of nationalism toward a future in which we should form the solid and splendid base of a group of mutually supporting Commonwealths.

With its centre and bulk of population stretching from Key West to Vancouver, one of its members wide across the Atlantic, another wide across the Pacific, the English-speaking world would take a new shape, and the British Empire would make way for something far stronger, in which not only Great Britain and the United States would find an equal place, but also the four growing young sisters, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa.

To understand and to wish a thing is half way to having it. If in the momentous developments of the next few years, in which the canal and Asia must play a larger part, we fix our minds on the possibilities here indicated, not in any petty spirit of aggrandizement, but in that broader and humane spirit that has marked so much of our Mother Country's accomplished work, who knows but that we in turn may carry that work on to even greater ends? All that we need is to rise to a larger view of our responsibilities, to place an adequate fleet in the Pacific and an adequate army on our threatened coast.

FINE POINTS FOR THE WOULD-BE EXPERT IN AUCTION BRIDGE

By Florence Irwin.

BEWARE of six-spots, seven-spots, eight-spots, nine-spots, and ten-spots, when you are playing nullos! They are the most dangerous cards in the pack—for the reason that they look low, yet (unless well-guarded) they can nearly always be made to take tricks. Unguarded kings and aces also mean nearly certain tricks; but no one needs to be warned about kings and aces. They carry their danger-signals so flauntingly that their menace is nullified; in fact, I think most players are unnecessarily afraid of kings and aces. They fear them guarded, or unguarded; they feel that every ace and king means a sure trick—which is not so. But the fear kills any perils that might result from the holding of the obviously high cards.

But drop below the jack, and your menace lies in the region between the ten and the five spot. It is like walking in the dusk: because you think you need no light you are in far more danger of pitfalls that you would be carrying a necessary light into pitch darkness. Let me warn you against the cards that look harmless, and are not; against the dusky region that lies between the five and the jack—between light and darkness!

A seven or an eight must be just as well guarded as an ace or a king. Otherwise it means a trick. Below the eight lie the deuce, the trey, the four, the five, the six, and the seven. Just look how many chances the adversaries have to "play under" and leave you to take with your eight.

Sixes are also dangerous cards—although less so than any other intermediate cards. But every suit holds four cards lower than its six-spot; if these four cards, or even two of the four, lie between the adversaries, then your unguarded six-spot will take just as surely as if it were an ace.

Two-four-six, (divided between your own hand and your dummy,) is an excellent combination.

The deuce is the only sure loser. The trey is an almost sure loser; the only combination in which it could take would be that where one adversary held the deuce and the other held none of the suit. A four-spot often takes; one adversary plays the deuce and the other the trey. And the further up the scale you go, the more low cards there are to provide possible "ducking cards" for the adversaries.

Let me then sound an insistent warning against the cards that look harmless and that really are not. A hand that is made up of eights and sevens and their like is a mean-looking hand. But those sevens and eights must be guarded just as well as must kings and queens or the hand will spell nullo-disaster.

The ideal nullo-hand is a mixed hand holding singletons, or blank suits, and with all high cards well guarded with low ones. A long suit that runs to both ends of the line (high and low) is excellent; its length will mean probable shortness in your partner's hand, and that shortness promises discards; its length will also mean corresponding shortness in another suit, in your own hand.

Blank suits are the best things in the world, and singletons are almost as good. Make "discards" your text when you come to play nullos.

"Spade" hands are intermediate hands; "nullo" hands are mixed hands or low hands—and it is greatly to be preferred that they shall be unbalanced hands—that is, hands in which the suit distribution is abnormal.

The line between a spade-hand and a nullo-hand is a thousand times more sharply defined than the line between a no-trumper and a nullo.

The player whose partner has opened with "a spade" is the only player who is debarred from a nullo-bid. What did that spade-bid mean? It meant, first, a hand that couldn't bid nullos, so why force it to be a nullo-dummy? And it meant, secondly, a hand which holds no possible bid to call you off from your nullos. If your partner opens with anything other than "a spade"—any real bid—you are at liberty to bid nullos, once, against him. If his hand fits the nullo-bid he can switch. If it doesn't he has a suit to which he can return and then you must subside.

There is just one case where you might bid "a nullo" against your partner's spade. If your hand consists exclusively of low cards it may make sequences with your partner's intermediate hand, leaving only high cards for the adversary. But it would be a risk, and such a combination wouldn't happen once in a hundred times. Make it your rule to avoid nullos, with a spade-partner.

Z opened with a "spade;" I think he should certainly have said "a no-trump." Nothing but a lack of aces could possibly hinder him, and we do not mind bidding no-trump without aces in these days. In bridge we dreaded a hundred aces against us, and to say no-trump was to play no-trump. In auction hundreds are every-day occurrences; we have many ways of getting them back. And to say no-trump is, by no means, to play it.

Three kings and three queens, and all suits guarded, is a good opening no-trumper.

However, Z said "a spade;" A, "a heart;" Y, "two diamonds;" A, "two hearts;" Y, "three nullos," (with a spade partner!); A, "four hearts;" Y, "four nullos;" and A doubled. I was asked "how Z could warn his partner."

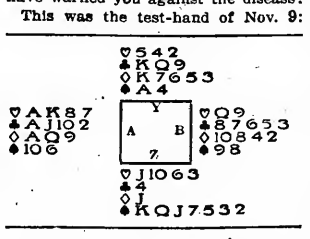
He couldn't; that is awful bidding. Z had already warned against nullos when he bid "a spade." Y holds but four low cards, no singleton, no blank suit, a bandful of intermediate cards and has a spade-partner—yet he bids blithely up to "four nullos." I call that criminal.

If Z opens with "a spade," Y's only possible bid is "two diamonds"; Z should raise the diamonds twice or thrice; his two trumps are two "tricks," and his side-kings are two "raisers."

If Z opens with "a no-trump," Y can say "two diamonds," or "two nullos"; I prefer the former because of his dearth of low cards. But the latter is possible because his partner has a suit to which he can return.

If a friend should say to you: "I have the smallpox!" would you say: "Let me come and sleep with you!" and then wonder, later, how he could have warned you against the disease?

This was the test-hand of Nov. 9:



Z could bid either "a royal," or "a nullo"; I prefer the former as it is higher; also, I don't care for the hearts with nullos for trumps, and the diamond-jack is a sure taker. Y could support whichever bid Z chose, though his clubs are bad for nullos.

Z opens with "a royal"; "five spades" is the stock-bid, (when made against an adverse suit-bid,) by which a player announces: "Partner, I have a no-trumper, but I don't stop the adversary's suit, do you?"

Let us suppose that A makes this announcement; Y could raise the royals, but he is not such a fool. He leaves A with an eleven-trick contract and puts it up to B. What can B do? His hand kills nullos; he does not hold the desired royal-stopper; he cannot pass; he has no bid.

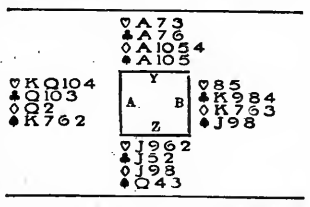
If he passes Z will pass—and reap a wonderful harvest. If B says "two no-trumps" (in desperation) Z must pass. Why should he bid three royals? He will imagine his ace to lie with B—that is one lost trick. One club, one diamond, and three hearts will raise his losers to six—a one-bid, no more. On the other hand, if he clears his spades and gets re-entry in the hearts, he may set B's bid.

He passes, A passes, and were I "Y" I should double. Y knows that B's bid is forced; he knows his partner holds a good royal suit which he himself can clear and then return; he has besides two guarded kings and a guarded queen. Why should he not play against a forced "two no-trump" bid?

Heaven help A-B with their "two no-trumps"! Z-Y take the first seven rounds on spades; after that they take either a diamond or a club—300 penalties—more than a rubber! I should think this hand would turn the stomach of the most devoted high-spade adherent! I have seen dozens of similar hands.

The best answers came from "C. S." and "K. B." The former played royals and the latter no-trumps, (after an opening nullo-bid.)

Here is an odd hand sent me by a correspondent, who calls it "the hoodoo hand." The score is eight-all on the rubber-game:



[Note: The proper nullo-value is eight.

Ten is too high; it kills hearts and royals and causes an undue preponderance of no-trumpers—positive or negative.

Eleven is obviously absurd. Low cards should be biddable till they certainly should not be more valuable than high ones. Don't put the bottom on top; don't use the floor for a ceiling! Eleven also kills the time-honored no-trump precedence.

A suit without honors would be a ridiculous anomaly. The nullo-honors are the aces, and score inversely.

These rules are the result of the longest nullo-auction practice on record.]

MOST POWERFUL ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVES FOR NEW YORK

AN order for the most powerful electric locomotives ever built has just been given by the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, the locomotives being for use in its New York terminal service. The present order is for six electric locomotives, and follows an order given early in this year for ten locomotives, which at that time were the record-breakers so far as their hauling power was concerned.

These two orders, placed in the short period of less than a year, are a striking commentary on the constant and rapid growth in traffic and the corresponding increase in the demand for larger and heavier train units. This growth has been notable ever since the installation of electric power in the New York Central terminal.

In 1906 thirty-five 600-volt, direct-current passenger electric locomotives were built by the General Electric Company and introduced in the terminal. Those machines are all of the 115-ton type. Twelve more engines of the same type were placed in service in 1908. All these locomotives were designed with sufficient tractive effort to haul 535-ton gross-weight trains at 60 miles per hour in the regular terminal service.

The ten 100-ton electric locomotives ordered the early part of this year are designed for pulling the heavy limited trains, and will exert sufficient tractive effort to operate 800-ton trains in continual service between the New York Central Terminal Station and Harmon. They are capable of operating a 1,000-ton train in emergency service or a train of the same gross weight on level tangent track continuously at sixty miles per hour, or an 800-ton train at sixty-five miles per hour.

But the weight of the trains which are being hauled out of the terminal is ever increasing steadily, and some of the more important trains now weigh over 1,000 tons. It has therefore been deemed desirable to have engines for the maximum service with very great continuous capacity, ample overload and high monetary rating. The new locomotives are able to exert practically the same tractive effort continuously that the previous ten locomotives can for an hour.

The ten tons' increase in weight in these machines is accounted for mainly by the greater amount of material in the motors, which are of larger capacity. The speed and torque characteristics of the locomotive have been kept practically the same as those of the former ten machines, but the new locomotives are capable of hauling approximately 40 per cent. greater tonnage in continuous service.

The previous ten 100-ton locomotives have a capacity for developing 1,400 horse power continuously, 2,000 horse power for one hour, and can develop as high as 5,000 horse power for short periods. This corresponds to a tractive effort of 9,000 pounds at 60 miles per hour continuously, or 13,500 pounds at 54 miles per hour at the one-hour rating. The six new electric engines will develop 2,000 horse power continuously or 2,600 horse power for one hour. The equivalent tractive effort is 14,000 pounds at 54 miles per hour continuously, or 20,000 pounds at 49 miles per hour at the one-hour rating. They are able to haul 1,100-ton trains in continual service between the terminal and Harmon, are capable of operating 1,200-ton trains in emergency service, and 1,200-ton trains on level tangent track continuously at 60 miles per hour.

The motors are electrically connected permanently in parallel in pairs, and the pairs can be connected in three combinations, viz., series, series-parallel, and parallel. They are insulated for 1,200 volts, so that if at any future time it should be desired to operate the locomotive on this voltage, the pairs of motors could be changed from parallel to series connections and the same speeds and control combinations obtained as on 600 volts.

The new locomotives are now under construction in the works of the General Electric Company at Schenectady, N. Y., and will be placed in operation as soon as completed. Compared with existing types of electric engines, these machines have greater capacity and higher efficiency than any other high-speed electric locomotive ever constructed. Withal, the total weight, weight per driving axle and "dead weight" is less than that of any other locomotive approaching their capacity.

The Ruling Passion.

"You should avoid quacks," advised the eminent physician.

GOOD METAL IN OUR MELTING POT, SAYS MISS WALD

Twenty Years' Experience with the Varied Races of New York Convinces Henry Street Settlement's Founder That Our Racial Outcome Will Be Worthy.

By Edward Marshall.

NOWHERE else are American citizens being manufactured with a rapidity which equals that of the great mill formed by New York's tenement districts. Perhaps Zangwill's term, "the melting pot," described it better.

Miss Lillian D. Wald, founder of the Henry Street Settlement, known generally as the Nurses' Settlement, may have had better and more extended opportunities to watch this mill, this melting pot, than any other woman, for the settlement which she founded has just passed its twentieth anniversary. During every moment of the twenty years she has been not only its guiding spirit, but its active head.

She is very hopeful for New York's tenement house people, for the nation which is so largely recruited from them. We had a long talk, the other day, about her twenty years' experience.

"My philosophy," Miss Wald declared, "is that the material for citizen making with which the tenements of New York provide the city and the nation is good.

"I believe and steadfastly maintain that the failures are principally our own. Emigration every year sends us an army of new youth, thus swelling that which is already here. All need guidance, hospitality, opportunity. It has been in search of these that they or their forebears have adventured to our shores. But these things we do not always furnish. The immigrant loses and we lose. Our waste of human beings on the great east side of New York is infinitely greater than our waste of natural resources in the whole of our domain.

"I went to a baby show the other day—a show of colored babies. Bright-eyed, alert, in every way attractive, they were exhilarating. But the thoughts which they inspired were not.

"If any of those colored babies achieve the best of which it may be capable, if any tenement-house baby, whatever may be the color of its skin, achieves the best of which it may be capable, it will be in spite of what the city, State, and nation do not do for it, rather than because of what they do for it.

"It is my belief that we in the United States have been doing just exactly that which we pretend not to do, what we have solemnly declared we never shall do. We have denied to many very worthy human beings that dignity which, according to the theory on which our Government was founded, should be accorded to every human being. When we disregard the first and holiest tenet of our primary creed, then we are dragging down, not building up.

Individual Not Respected Enough.

"We respect the individual far too little, often not at all. If this settlement has any influence, and it has been generally credited with having done something toward the betterment of conditions on the east side and to the advantage of its citizenship, it is because we here respect the individual. We never classify in herds the human beings with whom we come in contact. We hope we never will.

"Human material cannot be worked up in mass, like clay. It is even difficult to separate it into groups. The tendency to thrust the non-prosperous aside as unworthy, or, at least, uninteresting, is wholly un-American, but is so common in America that in it lies a general threat.

"We promise opportunity to all, but do not keep our promise. If newcomers really have opportunity, they usually get it only after fighting for it. And not all individuals are fighters. I know a young working girl—a really delightful creature. The other day she told me of an old woman who sells potatoes in the push-cart market with such extraordinary imagery that I listened, fascinated. I am not certain that this telling indicated genius; but it may very well have done just that.

"The point is, there is no way of finding out. She is a working girl. If she has genius now, it may be crushed. The melting pot of the east side, in spite of all that has been done, still spoils much good metal.

"Here is something to consider: The greatest men and women of the world have not been notable for physical strength, have they? Well, physical strength, resistance, and endurance have always and are still usually essential to emergence from the tenement melting pot. Of course there are exceptions, but they are truly marvelous.

"I wonder how much we may lose by this? People tell me that it is too great a task to search for human diamonds in the mud. That is exactly what is done by those who find stone diamonds. They dig in the mud—into the blue clay of South Africa—and search there for them with tremendous effort. Too little digging is done in the human diamond-bearing clay of the east side. Extraordinary spirits rise; but it is very largely through their own dynamic force. They get too little encouragement.

"But in spite of everything, what I have seen among the people—the massed people—of New York makes me an optimist. The fine material is here. In spite of the American system which spoils much of it, much good is preserved. That any of the good is wasted is a tragedy.

"Extraordinary men and women emerge from New York's tenements. Take the famous cloak and suit trade protocol, which imperatively keeps peace between employer and employed. Its operation is largely in the control of the intelligence of the east side, and stands as one of the industrial triumphs of the time!

"Such ignorance as exists among the tenements—the east side may be ignorant, that is its misfortune, and our crowded districts have many intellectuals—is not the people's fault. They could learn if they but really had the opportunity. Talk with the women of the rear tenements upon subjects touching their own lives and you will always get reactions. Even if they talk in very simple language, they sometimes have big things to say.

"It was because the tenements shocked me that, twenty years ago, I went into this work. I had been in a hospital, seeking training as a nurse.

"After that I went to the Women's Medical College, to fill my training out by studying medicine. In the hospital I began to see; later, when I was enabled to go out among the people, my vision became clearer.

"My period in the wards of the hospital gave me tremendous stimulation. The patience and pathos of the sufferers, many of whom were victims of industrial accidents or occupational diseases, fascinated and distressed me. The unnecessity of a great part of their suffering stirred me.

"After I left the hospital some one asked me to talk of nurses' training schools, and I then offered to try the experiment of teaching in the tenements the principles of home care of the sick. In the hospital I had found a training which I longed to apply in the home.

Home Best Place for Work.

"And my life since has been so filled with interests that I have never wished to live anywhere else. I believed then and have since proved to my own satisfaction that the home is the best place for helpful work.

"If one has a little poetry in his soul and a bit of imagination he can visualize the city as the hospital, the district as the hospital ward, and the home as the unit. We have found the system which we have based upon such a visualization most effective."

That was Miss Wald's modest way of telling it. Jacob A. Riis, in writing his conception of her work, shows that he considers it a matter of vast moment to the whole community.

Horrified and impressed by an experience which she had just passed through, at a tenement house bedside, she at once set about the establishment of a nurses' headquarters, and that headquarters has grown into the Henry Street Settlement—an institution of manifold ambitions, of achievements quite commensurate with them. Said Mr. Riis:

"From the very start the poor became 'her people.' She took them to her heart and they gave her quickly their unstinted confidence and trust. No woman since Josephine Shaw Lowell has been able to do what she has done. They absolutely trust her head, her heart, her judgment, and her friendship.

"She arbitrates in a strike and the men listen; she sits as one of the Board of Sanitary Control in the cloak and suit trade that has wrought such wondrous good for the workers, and her judgment stands. When she pleads for housing reform, for playgrounds, for a united stand against child labor, her words carry authority.

"When politics make for better government the Nurses' Settlement is a recruiting station; when push-cart peddlers are blackmailed by the police, she will tell the Mayor the truth, for she knows. In the plotting and planning and winding ways of life on the east side there is one pilot whose chart can be trusted—Miss Wald knows."

It may be added that she has been an influence for good in New York's public schools; she pleaded for cooking and housekeeping instruction and secured it; she worked for medical inspection of school children and it came.

But to continue with this remarkable woman's views of the people she has worked among.

"We must know immigrants as folks, rather than as tables of statistics," she went on.

"I have said that they are of great possibilities. But, however moral and potentially self-reliant the majority of them may be, it seems to be incumbent on us to protect them from exploitation and to guide them in a measure during their first years of residence with us. This is as necessary to our own as to their welfare.

"Undoubtedly the greatest problem immigration offers to the country, and New York, is that of the incoming women. They form about 35 per cent. of the total immigration, a large number of them are unmarried, and perhaps because less effort has been made to distribute unmarried women than has been made to distribute unmarried men, a greater proportion of them remain in New York or go to the other great centres rather than to the farms and smaller towns.

"In every detail of our system as it stands, the immigrant woman, young or old, and more especially the young and pretty immigrant girl, must make shift in this strange country without those safeguards against disaster which it is a tradition of the nation that we throw around our own women.

"This is a grave peril to New York because of the great number of girl immigrants who come planning to remain here or, upon arrival, are deflected from other intentions into residence here. Recent procedure under the so-called 'white slave law' has accomplished something. The community has at least been awakened. But more must be done.

"A definite and inclusive programme is demanded by all the ethics of a moral society. Even with all the reforms in force, and with all those which have been definitely projected likely to be in force, much will remain to be desired.

"The Federal, State and municipal governments must co-operate in this, before the full protection of the immigrant woman and girl can be assured. Her importance to the nation which she seeks is obvious when we consider that she must be the mother of a large part of our future citizenship. Thus, setting aside morals and sentiment, a stern obligation is upon us.

"The alien is in more danger of moral contamination than the rest of the community and is more liable to exploitation. Concerning this, the report of Gov. Hughes's State Immigration Commission, (of which, by the way, Miss Wald was a member), stated:

"'Unless specially protected he' (the immigrant) 'is likely through inability to discriminate to locate in neighborhoods and houses which contain disorderly and immoral persons, to apply to unsafe agencies for employment and to frequent places of amusement which are injurious.'

"If this is true of the male immigrant, how much more true is it likely to be of the less self-reliant, less informed, more sought and more tempted girl newcomer? The girl or woman who immediately upon arrival must become a bread-winner is obviously especially endangered.

"This may be regarded as one of the most serious problems of the tenement districts of New York. Numerous societies exist which provide shelter and often find work for unattended and unmet girls arriving at Ellis Island, but in almost every instance the protection of these societies ends after the girls have left the homes to enter upon the first employment found for them. It was to meet this situation that New York State established its Bureau of Industries and Immigration of the Department of Labor.

"We have improved the laws which govern our employment agencies, but eternal vigilance in the enforcement of them is a grave necessity.

"But even now the girl who escapes the perils of the voyage, which are principally moral, and lands safely at Ellis Island, to be met by friends or relatives and taken into a New York tenement house home, has by no means passed beyond the reach of peril.

"The New York working girl may still find dangers in employment agencies; may find many at her places of employment; may find more during hours of leisure, for life here is but beginning to be organized so that any other than mercenary motives underlie public amusements.

"Women's trades unions have done and are doing much. When the history of this industrial period has been written I believe it will be shown that the girls who learned to stand together for higher opportunities and better shop and home conditions for all helped notably to keep alive the most basic essentials upon which our republican civilization stands.

"The shirt waist makers' strike of 1910 brought before the public in dramatic form the ambitions and the willingness which exists among immigrant girl workers to strive each for the good of the whole number.

"Thousands of young girls, 90 per cent. of whom are Russians and Italians, had entered the trade because it was the easiest to enter. Accustomed to poverty and oppression in their own countries, they at first accepted conditions without complaint. Accustomed, also, to fear and obedience, they for years suffered and were silent under imperfect systems and unworthy surroundings.

"But when the time finally came for the revolt they stood together with extraordinary unanimity for the enforcement of demands at once strikingly intelligent and reasonable. When one young girl was reproached because she had forsaken a job in which she was well paid, she answered:

"'This is not a strike for self. Only if we all stand together can we get better conditions for all.'

"When one skilled girl, with burdens on her shoulders which were far beyond her strength, was tempted with an offer of extra pay if she would remain at work, she answered:

"'They cannot buy my conscience with money.'

"Last year's strike showed incidents as noteworthy. Among these girl strikers were a number that had recently come from Turkey.

"There are not far from 90,000 trades union women in New York, 80 per cent. of whom are foreigners, mostly Russian Jews and Italians. The revolutionary spirit is within them and thus they have become a real factor in New York's industrial life.

Russian Intellectual Hunger.

"The effect of years of revolution upon the many Russian girls among them is to give them a solidarity which the American working girl does not possess at all. They have a definite vision of a better society in which opportunity for real life will be made possible; their intellectual hunger is as extraordinary as their love of beauty.

"Life to them is incomplete that offers nothing but hard, grinding, soul-stultifying labor, insufficiently recompensed to put better things within their reach. That they are willing to struggle to attain what they seek is evidenced by the attendance of hordes of them at night school four nights a week after a hard day's work. They must know, of course, that this will sap vitality and make them old before their time; but, however small it may be, they demand something of the glory and beauty of life.

"The divine discontent, the enthusiasm, the hope and the vision of the Russian Jewish girl and woman immigrant have been and are a vastly valuable contribution to America in general and the American labor movement in particular.

"Even the Italian working women, who are notably kept under the guidance and control of their men, whether fathers, brothers, or husbands, are beginning now to feel this elevating influence of Jewish women workers.

"The contemptuous attitude of the American people toward the immigrant has cost the nation much. An illustration of it lies in New York's experience with midwives. Although it was demonstrable that 50,000 childbirths every year were attended by midwives and that midwives attended at not less than 98 per cent. of all Italian births it was not until 1911 that a definite public plan for the training of midwives in city hospitals was taken up.

"Thus, through many years, midwives, untrained, unsupervised, were permitted to commit their crimes of viciousness or ignorance unchecked, uneducated. Our native population did not suffer, for it did not employ midwives.

"We must find no defense for our indifference in the fact that foreigners are exploited mainly by their own people. That argument was used by those opposed to or lukewarm in regard to the recent admirable campaign against white slavers. The American public through this moral indifference has condoned too many grave offenses. Why can we forget that in to-day's raw immigrant is really hidden to-morrow's citizen, enfranchised and powerful? For our own sake we should protect and educate newcomers.

"To many foreigners indolence in justice, which condones violations of the laws, failures to meet contracts, and that deplorable sort of thing, have come to constitute 'the American way.' Whose fault is this? Not theirs!

"An interesting aspect of the immigration problem is political assimilation. The Jewish immigrant, with his tradition of persecution, is naturally interested in movements of protest against exploitation and tyranny. You will find him in sympathy, especially the young immigrant, with the Socialist and other radical movements. But the Jewish immigrant adapts himself to our political life; he soon becomes, like the American, a political opportunist.

"His Americanization makes him more conservative, but always in sympathy with independent and progressive political tendencies. The east side has followed progressive, independent leadership, irrespective of party affiliations. The Jewish immigrant responds to an idealistic appeal, especially when that appeal is in favor of freedom from political dependence. The Americanized Jewish immigrant is not closely attached to the machine. He becomes an independent voter. When he moves from his first way-station into quarters that indicate growing prosperity it means increasing political independence.

"The east side is independent in political revivals. But the Bronx is independent normally. The recent election returns will show how strongly anti-Tammany was the vote in those Jewish districts which had been believed to have been captured by Tammany."

I asked Miss Wald to summarize, in some degree, the changes she had seen on the east side during the score of years through which she has watched it.

"Standards of living are definitely higher here than they were twenty years ago," she answered, "in spite of its increased cost. It was once said that if an east side building was provided with bathtubs the tenants would keep coal in them. I never quite subscribed to that.

"My belief has found notable corroboration in the fact that no municipal bath in the world has so great a patronage as ours on the east side, in proportion to the population which it is designed to serve.

"There have been improvements in the quality of the material coming to us. From Russia, for example, we are getting a much more open-minded class than once came to us from there.

"Perhaps because they emigrated rapidly and in large groups at first, virtually stripping their country of their class, Russian immigration now may show fewer splendid individuals from highly intellectual circles than it at first did. These early coming individuals constituted a notable intellectual circle. There were Gordin, the playwright; Abe Kahn of The Jewish Vorwarts, and many scientific men and physicians.

"But the general level of our Russian immigration is far higher than it was some years ago.

Vicious Conditions Here.

"Frequent recent statements to the discredit of the Jews of the east side indicate only the demoralization of our own conditions; prove the fact that these have now become so vicious that they can break down even the fine traditions of the Jew. That we should influence for evil the class of immigration which is so notably more susceptible to good than evil is tragic.

"The reduction in infant mortality in the tenements, so notable of late, could never have been wrought had we not had a fine physical foundation on which to work.

"And intellectually the east side is capable of anything. The standing of the east side youngsters in the schools attests that. The results among tenement house mothers of the work of the milk stations prove that. At our station we have not found a mother who could not be educated, or who did not want to be. Last year we had an infant mortality of but one-half of 1 per cent.

"It is my strong conviction that most immigrants who have gone wrong have fallen, first, because of the environment into which we blindly thrust them; second, because our treatment of them does not dignify, does not even recognize, the personality of the individual.

"The American is arrogant. To him an immigrant is a 'dago' or a 'sheeny.' That does great harm.

"On one occasion Judge Crane delivered a homely, friendly address to the women of our Mothers' Club. I was thrilled when, following it, the women rose, one after another, and told the things which interested them and those which they believed might help their friends.

"It must be remembered that these women, when they rose to speak, were talking in the presence of their social set. And they spoke about the mothers' problems in the New York tenements. They live in few and bad rooms, one of them explained. The streets on which their tenements abut are full of perils, physical and moral, for their young.

"If they keep their children shut in them, it but makes home hated as a penitentiary. If they send them to the street, gladdened by possession of a penny, it will probably be spent upon some gambling device of which the stakes are candy, or will buy in a shop something which will poison their stomachs, or introduce them to some person who will work havoc with their minds and morals. She found the problem of it all too overwhelming in its difficulty for her to work out.

"We listeners could but agree with her.

"Another mother told another story—heart-breaking in its tragedy. She had done everything she could for her boy until he was sixteen, and then he stole.

"Her analysis of what induced him to the sin was startling in its truth, extraordinary in its brevity. It was not, she said, that her boy had been bad at heart; it was that he had not been a hero.

"So the east side, the melting pot, is less perilous to New York than New York is to the east side.

"In that lies the whole secret of the situation. The east side never will contaminate and harm society; some method must be found by means of which society may be prevented from contamination of the east side. There is the whole matter in a nutshell. I am an optimist. I know it will be found."

BEWARE, MR. HOUSEHOLDER, OF VERSATILE LATCHKEYS!

I AM glad to see that many of the brownstone front houses in New York are losing their close family resemblance," a business man said. "The reconstruction will prevent such an awkward accident as happened to my wife a few years ago.

"We lived in those days in one of a row of brownstone fronts, which were built on exactly the same plan. You could not distinguish one house from the other, except by the number, and even the window draperies looked very much alike. Another point of similarity, which was unsuspected until my wife's adventure, was that our key would unlock every front door on our side of the block. This was a fact that caused a lot of comment when it became known. It never had occurred to any man to try his latchkey on his neighbor's door, and it remained for my wife to discover it.

"It happened that on the night of a wedding which my wife was very anxious to attend, I was ill and could not accompany her. Her brother acted as escort.

"'You will probably be asleep when I return,' my wife said, 'and I am going to come in so quietly that I will not wake you up.'

"'I'll hear you, all right,' I answered, and away she went.

"It was nearly midnight when her brother drove up in front of our house. He took my wife's latchkey and unlocked the front door. Owing to my illness he declined to come in. My wife closed the door carefully and silently crept upstairs. She was determined not to awake me.

"The light in the bedroom was very low, and my wife slipped over to her dressing table to prepare to retire. She took off her jewelry and placed it on the table. Then she slipped off her waist and loosened her hair. This was all done very quietly and without turning up the gas.

"A snore from the bed startled my wife, because she has always flattered me by saying that I do not snore. Concluding that I was not resting easily, she stepped over to the bed and then stopped short. Why she did not scream or faint, or both, I have never understood.

"Her eyes fell on a woman with blonde hair who was asleep. Turning her eyes over to the other side of the bed, she was horrified to see sleeping there a man with very black whiskers. I am smoothly shaven.

"She stood there for a length of time that she was never able to estimate. A suspicion of the truth dawned on her and as she looked closely around the room the suspicion became a certainty.

"She was in the wrong house. The bedroom was exactly like ours. It was furnished much the same. If the sleepers awoke and found her standing there she knew they would raise a row before asking for explanations.

"Her nerve was good. She grabbed her waist and wraps and backed slowly out of the room, keeping her eyes on the bed so that, in case either sleeper showed signs of awakening, she might run.

"The man with the beard tossed uneasily. My wife held her breath. Then he settled back to his snoring. When she reached the stairs she hurried down, opened the front door and closed it after her.

"Then she looked at the number. She had entered the house next to ours.

"She was in the street with her waist and her wraps in her hands and her hair hanging down her back. She ran up our steps and found that in her haste to leave the strange bedroom she had left behind her latch key and her jewels.

"I was awakened by our bell ringing loudly, and slipping into a bathrobe I went down and opened the door. My wife simply fell inside and fainted. You can imagine my feelings at seeing her come home in such a condition. When she recovered consciousness she told me the whole story.

"It did not surprise me that she had gone to the door of the next house, but I could not understand our latchkey opening it. I assumed that probably it had not been properly locked. It was evidently impossible for us to keep the story to ourselves. My wife's jewelry, some of it marked, was in the bedroom of the house next door. We decided not to disturb our neighbors at that hour.

"I arose at daylight the next morning and asked for Mr. Jones, our neighbor. I never had met him, but he knew who I was. I sent up word that I must see him at once. Down he came in a bathrobe, and when I told him the story of my wife's adventure he was skeptical.

"'Your wife was probably tired and a little hysterical,' he said. 'My front door was locked last night, and I am sure, if she had come into our bedroom as you say she did, she would have aroused us.'

"'It can be easily proved,' said I. 'Just go up and see if my wife's jewelry is not on your wife's dressing table'

"When he came down with my wife's jewelry in his hands his face was a study. It was a relief to me when he laughed, and I joined him. We agreed to keep this story to ourselves, but it leaked out. My wife and Jones's wife also knew it.

"Then we found that one latchkey would unlock both front doors, and that our key would unlock every front door on our side of the block. Whether this was due to a mistake or a joke of the builders I never discovered."

English as She Is Spoke.

"Have you anything that will cure corns?" asked the customer in the drug store.

"What seems to be the matter with your corns?" asked the polite clerk, who was something of a purist.

"SECRET DREAM OF AMERICA IS AMERICANIZED ENGLAND"

Wildly Excited Englishman Solemnly Warns His Fellow-Countrymen Against Our Invasion of Their Native Land ---Our "Money-Egoists" Should Be Locked Up, Says He.

"There will be no place for the anti-social man."

THE American millionaire has not yet been canonized by the Fathers of the Church, though he is enshrined in the hearts of his own people, who worship him with a reverence that is almost pure idolatry; the canonization may yet occur, and some day, perhaps, there may be pilgrimages to the shrine of an American Lourdes, where the bones of St. Rockefeller, St. Morgan and St. Carnegie will work miraculous cures, not on the palsied limbs, but on the empty purses, of the devout."

That remark occurs in a book which, from first to last, is a terrific denunciation of these United States and all the inhabitants thereof. It is called "The Real America," is by Alan Raleigh, and has just been published in London by Frank Palmer. Mr. Raleigh feels that Americans and their ideas are making awful inroads upon his native country, and that the time has come to give his fellow- Englishmen a clarion-voiced warning.

We Americans, absorbed body and soul in the pursuit of the dollar, are an awfully bad lot. Instead of being copied, we should be consigned without delay to the horrible doom that will befall us just as soon as the higher civilization gets the world in its grip. This doom Mr. Raleigh darkly pictures as follows:

Excessive devotion to anything, to the exclusion of all other interests, until body, mind and soul are absorbed and eaten up in its acquisition is a disease; it matters not whether the object be drink or women or dollars, the result is always the same, and that result is moral death. The life-long absorption of body and mind in the acquisition of wealth leads as surely to the destruction of all the nobler qualities of man as drink inevitably leads to the destruction of the body.

The inebriate murders his physical being, the confirmed money-getter destroys his soul, and in a higher and more enlightened civilization we shall treat the one as surely as we are now attempting to treat the other.

Both are anti-social, and in the future that is now dawning there will be no place for the anti-social man. The enormous accumulations of capital on the one hand and the continued poverty of the masses on the other, together with the spread of enlightenment and education, are beginning to open the eyes of mankind.

The money-egoist will have to reform, or he will be segregated in "homes" and "retreats" like the drunkard of to-day, and the rapid increase in the number of men who ride rough-shod over their fellows is only hastening the advent of that day.

Awful, Simply Awful!

As for the state of affairs which has stirred Mr. Raleigh to write his book, it is becoming, apparently, very wicked indeed. He solemnly calls attention to the fact that for eight centuries—ever since the Norman Conquest—England has been immune from foreign invasion, but that now she is in imminent peril of being overrun by invaders far more formidable than Normans or Saxons or Romans, viz., Americans and their poisonous ideas, which are causing fearful havoc among the dear old customs of Great Britain. Says the clarion-voiced prophet:

The War Lord of the Hohenzollerns may be fearful of the Yellow Peril from the East, but there may be even greater danger for the Old World from the American Peril of the West.

Let the Englishman realize quite clearly in what estimation the average American holds England and the English, let him for once clear away that mirage of delightful nonsense which he has contrived to conjure up as to how he and his country are regarded by the New World, and it will be better for him. And by that phrase "the average American" I do not mean the cultivated, semi-Europeanized Anglophile one chiefly meets and sees in England, and in whose tolerant approval England basks, but the native untraveled stay-at-home type of the race, that cocksure, never-wrong, boastful individual who is the typical unit of the ninety millions that make up the complex American nation.

This is what HE thinks of us. He regards Britain as an effete, worn-out monarchy, a country that is a "back number," as he tersely describes it. We are subjects, his people are "citizens," and therefore far higher in the scale of humanity. He is enslaved by big and sounding phrases.

But at the same time this antiquated despotic country is a very beautiful and very picturesque one, a land teeming with feudal castles, historic houses, and stately mansions, overflowing with precious works of art and all the treasures of the ages, embowered in beautiful gardens, and inhabited by a race which, in his view, is composed of a few degenerate nobles and idlers on the one hand, and a mass of pauperized workers who have not sufficient sense to come in out of the rain on the other; and holding these views, he regards England as an ideal land, not for a foolish invasion by a military host, but for peaceful penetration by his dollars and ideas, a country waiting to be snapped up by his gold, for that money can buy and does buy everything is his first article of faith, one so deeply implanted in his mind by past experience that nothing will ever uproot it.

London in Deadly Peril.

Mr. Raleigh then shows some awful instances of how this process of conquest is going on. Americans built the first London tube railway. J. Pierpont Morgan formed the big transatlantic steamship combine. America has deluged London with roll-top desks, typewriter girls, fountain pens, revolving chairs, imitations of Coney Island, ragtime.

Oscar Hammerstein provided "a splendid Opera House and also an excellent example of American petulance." John Philip Sousa took over a band playing "new and quite undesirable instruments."

Worse than all else, Americans are Americanizing the grand old English language. Mr. Raleigh writes with horror that the "u" is disappearing from words like "colour" and "favour," the "me" from "programme," the extra "l" from "traveller." "And I have even noticed," he solemnly avers, "the substitution of 'er' for 're' in centre." He continues:

"Foreword" takes the place of preface, "Fall" the place of Autumn, and "catalog" has even been seen; we have "heat waves" and "cold snaps," and a host of other expressions which, if unchecked, will in time convert the language of Chaucer and Milton into the hybrid, high-pitched tongue which takes the place of Anglo-Saxon pure and undefiled in the streets of Milwaukee and Kansas City.

Truly the Norman Conquest and all its woes have been eclipsed!

In order to arouse his fellow-countrymen once and for all to the horrible peril that menaces them, Mr. Raleigh trumpets forth this:

The secret dream of America is an Americanized England, to see London scrapped and rebuilt on the lines of a great Western city, its historic buildings transplanted to adorn the grounds of American plutocrats, tramcars and trolley cars running along every highway, skyscrapers surrounding the Bank of England—which will remain open all night—telegraph poles and sky signs disfiguring every street corner, departmental stores feeding and clothing the million, and a restless, nervous, dyspeptic multitude elbowing each other off the pavements, and over all, written in letters of fire, that sublimest precept of American civilization, "Get on or get out!"

The British Empire will become the British Empire, Ltd., capital, so many million dollars; the American Eagle will scream twice nightly from the Clock Tower at Westminster, the products of Great Britain will be forced on to an unwilling world by the aid of American "drummers," and the big stick of American diplomacy will be flourished in the face of mankind.

That is, if we permit it.

Right from the opening pages of his preface Mr. Raleigh girds at us. He points out that other foreigners who have come over here—some very distinguished ones—have been sparing in their adverse criticism of us because they had been entertained and made much of, and, consequently, have felt a reluctance to sink harpoons into their hosts, (that they may have really enjoyed themselves in America never presents itself to Mr. Raleigh's mind as a possibility). He, however, is restrained by no such considerations. He says:

Now the present author, being so obscure that he can say what he means and what he likes, having neither books nor plays to sell, nor congregations to consider, nor raven tresses to part with, nor a title to dispose of, and being convinced that candor is a jewel which is highly necessary in the relations of the two chief branches of the English-speaking world, is in a position to give a disinterested opinion of the nation we persist in calling "our cousins" and of the land they inhabit and it is his intention to do so.

Continuing his onslaught on the American who thinks only of getting rich, Mr. Raleigh says:

The degeneracy does not begin at the second generation, and the son is not the only one to blame; the degeneracy begins with the first generation—only there it takes a different form.

The intense egoism and the moral obliquity that so often accompany the acquisition of great sums of money are in themselves evidences of a low moral organization, and the successful father—the one who is honored—is himself a degenerate. In the son it takes a different form, that is all.

The morbid craving to get rich at all costs in the first generation is succeeded by a morbid craving for debauchery in the second; both are excesses, both show a warped humanity, both are anti-social.

It is a revolutionary idea, but I have not the least doubt that it is the true one. All great ideas are revolutionary, but then this world is yet in its infancy, playing with toys it scarcely understands, and all it fails to grasp it puts aside as revolutionary. Nineteen hundred years ago this eternal truth was first promulgated and taught, but only here and there has one perceived it.

In America the problem is more acute than anywhere else, because it is so widespread. Men go to America from every quarter of the globe to better themselves, to get money quickly—not to develop their minds and bodies and realize their destinies—and many succeed.

It is the land of opportunity—that is, of material opportunity. That is why the problem of the degenerate millionaire's son is so pressing there, and why the millionaire puts his son into harness in the factory or the workshop—when he can do so—so that he may continue the money-getting form of egoism, rather than adopt some other form of viciousness.

Some wealthy men have a faint glimmering perception of this truth; Carnegie has declared that it is a crime to die wealthy, and out of his immense fortune is scattering libraries broadcast over England and America. It is a form of salve and ointment for the sores of humanity, and incidentally an anodyne for the rich man's conscience * * *

That the American is a hard worker will readily be admitted by all who know him, and the development of the Continent is an unanswerable proof of his physical energy; but whether he works harder than the men of other races is an entirely different question and one that may well be doubted.

He is a quick worker and the impression gained by watching a gang of American workmen is one of relentless energy, but he does not last well; he takes it out of himself so much that he tires quickly and is very soon exhausted. After the age of thirty-five he is not wanted by employers. There is little in his nature of the plodding industry of the Dutch or of the careful methodical labor of the German, and while he is wonderfully ingenious, especially at devising anything to save labor, he does not possess such a perennial fund of original ideas as the French.

He is a "hustler" of the deepest dye, but hustling is not necessarily work, and one of his defects is to talk far too much about what he is going to do and how quickly he is going to do it; he is always up to his eyes in work, and so embarrassed by it that occasionally the work is left uncompleted; and that, one ventures to suggest, accounts in a measure for the half-finished appearance of many things in his country, the look of untidiness and slovenliness that arrests the eye on every hand.

He has no mind for detail, and the patient persevering labor that the arts and sciences exact from men is irksome to his restless nature, so that he rarely produces any really good or enduring work. He wants to see a thing done, it matters not how, as long as it is done, and for this reason a great deal of American work is shoddy and would not pass muster in Europe.

He is a splendid salesman and a superb commercial traveler, but as a manufacturer he is only second rate.

You may go into his office and find him entirely immersed in work, so busy with it, he will tell you, that he has scarcely time to sneeze, yet that same man will waste a solid hour talking to you about it.

He is a patriot of an extremely aggressive type, and were his country an infant State struggling to be free, instead of the mighty and independent one it is, he could scarcely be more clannish in his sense of nationality. One would almost imagine he went to sleep wrapped in the folds of the Stars and Stripes.

He will barely allow that there are other countries in the world, so obsessed is he with the supremacy of his own in peace and war, and should any dispute arise between him and his neighbor, he immediately talks big about "whipping" him and teaching him a lesson, serenely confident that he is able to do so.

He is the biggest bluffer God ever made.

New York—Ugh!

Turning his attention to our American cities, Mr. Raleigh is just as unfriendly as ever. New York is ugly and unfinished, a stroll along Broadway after dark is like "a pilgrimage through Dante's Inferno." He sums up his views on the American metropolis thus:

To sleep in an overheated room—replete though it may be with every luxury—to have a hot bath and then go out into the icy winds of a New York Winter; to fight for a place on the Subway with a score of others pulling you back; to sit all day with a telephone at one ear and an eye on a tape machine that is either making or breaking your fortune, with the infernal din of typewriters all round you; to scramble through a lightning lunch; to drink pints of iced water; to eat cakes that resemble nothing so much as hot leather; that is not the acme of civilized man, but it is the goal toward which modern America is tending.

Boston, which usually fares fairly well at the hands of captious visiting Englishmen—even Boston fails to worm praise out of Mr. Raleigh. He is displeased that it has produced nobody to succeed Longfellow, Emerson, Hawthorne, and Oliver Wendell Holmes, and has allowed to flourish in its midst something he particularly detests—Christian Science. But it is on luckless Chicago that Mr. Raleigh heaps his fullest measure of scornful epithets. He writes:

Have a good look at the faces and think; be a philosopher for once in a way—(probably you will be the only one in the whole city)—and tell me honestly if among the hurrying, stampeding thousands, almost trampling upon one another for their places, you find one face that looks happy or contented, or even satisfied with his lot. This is the crowd whose one aim is to get dollars quickly, how or at what cost it matters little; get them, that is sufficient.

Amongst all these crowds there seems to be but one type of face; a face that speaks of tense, restrained energy; pale, cold, nervous, regardless of all else but the pursuit of wealth; not necessarily wealth itself. That is the "standardized" face of modern America.

Looking neither to the right nor left, each one hurries forward, intent on but one purpose, and that to "hustle" as much work as possible out of the succeeding hours. An earthquake in the next street would scarcely stop his progress, a street accident would not stay him for an instant—there are no loiterers in Chicago; ahead of him lies some work into which the whole of his nervous energy is to be thrown, and he will go through with it at a rush, whether it be the mere sacking of an office boy or the formation of a new trust. Each of these men is working with a stop watch in his hands, ever listening to its remorseless tick. * * *

The phrase "if anything is worth doing at all it is worth doing well" has no meaning here. "Get it done somehow" takes its place.

And what has each man to look forward to at the end? For what is he working at this mad, insensate pace? Let me tell you.

At the age of 40 or thereabouts he hopes to be a millionaire, with a wife and daughters scattering largesse in Europe and possibly buying up the owner of some impoverished title for a son-in-law, whilst he grinds out the dollars in Chicago.

That is the summit of his ambition. * * *

If one wishes to see a true picture of the failure and hypocrisy of that monstrous cheat known as American civilization by all means go to Chicago.

Even Americans themselves are a little nervous about Chicago, and to the Europeans who visit it they say plaintively, "Please do not judge us by Chicago."

Nevertheless Chicago is the type of city which all America tends to emulate; every American city in its heart of hearts would like to be Chicago. It is only a case of sour grapes.

Mr. Raleigh has not a good word for our railroads, any more than for our cities. He is amazed at their wretched roadbed construction, their poor train service, their often empty boasts of high speed and comfort. He says:

"Handed over to an international commission of Europeans."

If you are a millionaire you can by paying for it have a greater luxury in trains in America than anywhere else; dining cars, sleeping cars, observation cars, drawing room cars, library cars, and every other variety of car is at your disposal. You can have a stenographer and a typist, a hairdresser (!) and a shoeshine artist to attend to your wants, but if you are only one of the great public and can't afford these things you have fewer trains, more accidents, less punctuality, slower speed and less comfort than you would get for the same price in England, where, according to the popular American idea in railways, "they have us beat."

Try both and see for yourself.

He also hands out this apropos of the employes one meets on American railroads:

The extent to which a presumably sane and courageous race like the Americans allows itself to be insulted and browbeaten by its officials is a remarkable example of the moral, or perhaps one should say immoral, effect of a uniform in a democratic country; even the military hierarchy of Prussia comes second in sheer rudeness to the officialdom of America.

Mr. Raleigh has no use for our hotels. They are presided over "by an insufferable being known as hotel clerk, who condescendingly permits you to stay on the premises." He has no use for our sports. Baseball is "a species of glorified rounders, played by two sides of professionals before an audience which exceeds in size and rowdiness the best efforts we can produce in professional football over here." Of our attitude toward athletic games in general he says:

The American is not a sportsman; indeed, he scarcely knows the meaning of that greatly abused word, for to turn what should be a pastime into business, and to have the desire to win at all costs, and to let chivalry, goodfellowship, and everything else that the word means to Englishmen go by the board, is not sport.

Mr. Raleigh ridicules the idea that Englishmen should look upon Americans as their cousins. "Blood is thicker than water" is to him a nonsensical phrase. Since America is now "a heterogeneous, complex nation, still in the making, no longer preponderatingly Anglo-Saxon," he urges his fellow-countrymen to "abandon this nonsense and recognize her for what she is, a strong, fearless, friendly, but not sympathetic nation, one with whom the ties of blood are now nearly extinct."

Have Mercy, Mr. Raleigh!

After running along for a while in a strain rather mild for him, and making the reader almost believe that the way is being paved, perhaps, for something bearing a remote resemblance to a compliment, Mr. Raleigh suddenly has a fit again and thunders:

When one looks at the America of to-day, even though the view be but a superficial one, with its insane worship of money and vulgar ostentation, its mismanagement and incapacity in high places, its hurry to get rich quickly at all costs, its bribery and corruption, its low standard of ideas and morals, its trusts and corporations which strangle its commercial life like the limbs of an octopus, its tainted justice, its scandal-loving press, its scamped and jerry-built cities; its packed State Legislatures, its many social problems which it seems quite incapable of solving; when one looks at all this and sees how far it has fallen short of the fair promise of less than a century and a half ago, and when one sees how little hope there is for the future, then, indeed, one may be inclined to agree with Bernard Shaw in his contention that America, being incapable of managing her own affairs, should be placed in statu pupillari once more and handed over to an international commission of Europeans. * * *

Instead of being pointed to as an example, it is almost more to the point whether she should not return to the swaddling clothes and the nursery.

A fitting way to conclude these excerpts from Mr. Raleigh's fulminations is to quote the words that he addresses "to the American reader":

What you really need more than anything else in the world is a good knockdown blow from some one who can hit hard and is not frightened of hurting you, in order to cure you of your fatal propensity for talking big and whipping creation, and to arouse you from your grossly materialistic slumber.

In that last affair with Spain—the only time you have ever crossed swords with a European nation except ourselves—there could never have been any doubt of your ultimate victory against the obsolete guns and antiquated tactics of the Spaniards; yet you had a shiver of uneasiness when for a few weeks the Spanish fleet disappeared into the unknown. What a good thing for you it would have been had your success been preceded by just one signal disaster—say the destruction of Boston or Philadelphia.

You need something of that kind to make you human.

GIRLS LEARN ART OF HOME MAKING IN MODEL FLATS

Old-Fashioned Theoretical Study of Domestic Science Discarded for Practical Courses in Managing an Apartment as in Every-Day New York Life.

DOMESTIC science has taken a new turn. No longer is it domestic science; it is applied homemaking, with the emphasis on the applied. It took the educators and the public some time to become convinced that girls needed to be trained in housekeeping, and that the public schools were the best medium through which they could receive that training. Now that cooking has been established as a part of almost every school curriculum, teachers have become uncomfortably aware that, however much children were enjoying the cooking classes, they carried very little of their knowledge into their east side homes. A change in method was necessary.

What has happened is that classes in applied homemaking have sprung up over night—five of them in Manhattan alone, two in Brooklyn. And applied homemaking is a very different proposition from domestic science. Applied homemaking is centred about a unit, an actual home such as the children are familiar with, furnished and run by the children themselves.

The tiny model flat which has just been opened at the Memorial House of the St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church in Sixteenth Street is the most recent and in many ways the most interesting experiment yet tried in this direction. Here ninety girls in small classes of eight are learning to furnish and care for a family of seven in a three-room flat.

"The flat," says Miss Jessie McCutcheon, the pretty little Scotch woman who holds the chair of applied homemaking at St. George's, "is not really a model flat. To pack seven people in three rooms is not a model arrangement. But in most of the families of the girls who come to us more room is impossible. This flat is a model of the kind to which the poorer people of this neighborhood are accustomed.

"That was the trouble with the domestic science which has been taught thus far in our schools—it wasn't concerned with the things that the children were familiar with and they would never dream of introducing these new-fangled ideas into their own homes. Teachers have begun to realize that, however well the little girls are learning to cook, those stuffed baked potatoes and those fluffy omelets aren't appearing on east side tables nor helping to solve east or west side housekeeping problems.

"We took a small apartment such as these children were familiar with and furnished it with such things as they had in their own homes. They see here something which is like their own homes, but, oh, how different! The things are the same, but it all looks as their own apartment never did.

"Why? Because there is no method at home. That is what we are trying to teach these little girls—youngsters of thirteen most of them—we are trying to make them apply system and forethought to their housekeeping. And that cannot be taught on paper. They must see, concretely, how to do it.

"Everything is simple enough and they see how it could be possible to use their own homes to better advantage. For instance, take the bedroom."

And Miss McCutcheon, garbed in a crackling white apron and a plain white cap, leads the way to a narrow room, about 9 by 15 feet. Four children occupy this room. It seems a good many, but Miss McCutcheon explains:

Practical Lessons for Girls.

"In their own homes these children are sleeping, pitifully crowded, three in a bed, and sometimes there are often four because they cannot afford an extra bed as the family increases. We show the girls who come to us how to manage with a double-decker bed like this one, which has one bed high above the other like upper and lower berths. Such a bed, without mattresses, costs but $4.50, and will easily accommodate four children, the older ones above in the upper bed. By sleeping with their heads in opposite directions, they get enough air.

"We tell the girls where all of these things can be bought, and give them as many practical points about purchasing as possible. We have limited this bedroom to that which was absolutely necessary, and have tried to make everything as compact as possible."

There is a chiffonier with five drawers, one for each child and one extra drawer. There are two plain, durable chairs costing 75 cents each. Then there is a home-made wardrobe with a shelf from the under side of which clothes are hung, with a shelf below for shoes.

"Every apartment," says Miss McCutcheon, "furnishes these wardrobes, the families supplying the cretonne with which to conceal the whole. I show the children how to utilize the upper shelf, keeping it tidy by means of boxes, made durable by covering them with wallpaper."

The walls are a neutral buff. The square rug on the floor, which cost $4.25, is blue and white.

"Almost every apartment, among those who can afford any floor covering at all, is carpeted. The carpet is put down when the family moves in and taken up only when it moves out. The girls soon see how much simpler and how much cleaner a small rug is.

"Then there is this small enameled iron washstand which cost but $1.75. I try impress on the girls the necessity of washing in their bedrooms. Usually the whole family troop to the kitchen sink for the morning wash, such as it is. Here each child has a separate towel, and under this little oilcloth-covered shelf you see the hooks for the toothbrushes."

Cross-bar curtains at the windows, topped by a ruffle of cretonne; a cover for the chiffonier, dimity spreads for the double-decker bed, and the furnishing of the bedroom is complete. Miss McCutcheon estimated the total cost of furnishing such a room at $25.

"Of course, that is an outside figure. Many of these things can be bought in east side shops, and not black-list places, either, at a much lower price than was paid for these by Mrs. Herbert Satterlee, who furnished this flat. This flat cost about $100 to fix out."

The living room, which is next the bedroom, is like many of the east side apartments, an inside room, ventilated and lighted only from the kitchen and bedroom. Here mother and father of the family are supposed to sleep. There is a double couch bed, covered in the daytime with a cretonne cover. There is a wardrobe, of the home-made variety, three chairs, a kitchen table made into a study table by fifty cents' worth of paint, and, finally, a big lined clothesbasket for the baby.

But it is the kitchen of which Miss McCutcheon is proudest. It is painted white from stem and to stern, the floor covered with blue and white oilcloth, and, you are assured, will wash, every corner and cranny of it. There are two stationary tubs for washing, a sink with a draining board, a china closet with drawers below, chairs and a gas range, the last rented by the year for $1. There is a shelf running around almost the whole room.

"I try to make the girls see how much room can be made in the kitchen, where most of the family life is centred, by cheap shelves. There, you see, are a couple of dozen glass jars. Those are for food to be put in this improvised Winter icebox."

And Miss McCutcheon draws back the white window curtain to show a box fastened outside the window and covered with a flap of oilcloth.

"Every east side family stores its perishable food here. Often these boxes are frightfully dirty and food spoils in them easily, because it is put out in paper bags and uncovered dishes. We teach the children to cover everything and to use as many of these cheap glass jars as possible.

"Then this is the kitchen table—a large one with double leaves, such as they can buy for a very small price in second-hand shops. I give a pretty thorough course in table setting. I make the girls plan a dinner, and in setting the table have everything ready so that the whole family can sit down to it, and not be jumping up for this and that.

Importance of Dinner Hour.

"It sounds like a small matter, but it is important. The dinner hour is the only time when the whole family gets together, where there is any chance for family life. I try to have the girls make a function, a pleasant home function, out of dinner, not a mere hasty eating of food put on the table helter-skelter."

Miss McCutcheon is not merely offering desultory instruction to whatever waifs may drift into the model flat. She has a regular course mapped out in twenty-six lessons from November to May; the course is printed on a small card and given to each of the ninety girls. As soon as a girl satisfactorily completes one lesson, the number opposite that lesson is punched. At the end of the year she receives a diploma.

This is the course of lessons as printed on the cards:

1. Explanation of model flat.
2. Air bedroom. Make coffee and toast.
3. Daily care of bedroom. Make tea.
4. Cook cereal. Set breakfast table.
5. Daily care of living room. Make potato soup.
6. Daily care of kitchen. Prepare cocoa.
7. Thorough cleaning of bedroom. Bake cookies.
8. Thorough cleaning of living room.
9. Cook corned beef and cabbage.
10. Washing lesson. Make starch.
11. Make corn muffins. Stew fruit.
12. Ironing lesson. Clean knives and faucets.
13. Make stew. Serve dinner.
14. Thorough cleaning of kitchen.
15. Bake gingerbread. Clean stove.
16. Daily housework.
17. Use of fireless cooker.
18. Review.
19. Cook macaroni. Make pea soup.
20. Review daily housework. Make griddle cakes.
21. Make bread pudding.
22. Preserving fruits.
23. Cook joint of meat with potatoes.
24. Spring housecleaning.
25. Make rice pudding. Stew rhubarb.
26. Make ice cream.

At the end of this course there is a regular written examination covering the entire year's work.

"That may sound rather hit or miss," explains Miss McCutcheon, who has been watching your face carefully as you read the card. "But it presents housekeeping problems in a natural way. You cannot teach housekeeping to children by a cut-and-dried theory. I have tried to make them feel that this is a real house such as they might live in.

"For instance, take lesson 16, daily housework. The girls have become familiar enough with the different parts of the flat and the different duties concerned to combine. I go through a whole day of housekeeping with them. Each girl gets up from bed, washes and dresses, puts her bed to air, gets the breakfast, does the work in the kitchen and living room—gets luncheon and dinner.

"I try to show the girls how essential it is for them to systematize their housework. We take all possibilities. We consider the woman who has to go to work. I show how she can, with a little system, leave her beds to air, stack her dishes neatly instead of leaving them on the table, cover garbage, and find things in pretty fair order when she returns at night. If the woman has washing or marketing to do, I show how important it is to finish up the housework first.

"I introduce as many time savers as possible. While steel knives are nice, I tell them they are not for the busy working woman who has no time to be polishing them. Better plated ones, even at a little greater price. No heavy lace curtains which catch the dust, but thin muslin ones which are easy to launder. No carpets to require much sweeping, no heavy spreads for the bed—if there are any, thin dimity ones. Very few pictures on the wall, instead of dust catching ugly collections of posters and picture cards. I despair of ever winning them to that, however.

"As you see from the course as it is sketched, there is laundry work, dusting and sweeping, and cooking of plain simple things—and all of this applied in a real home. Those are the things which young housekeepers need to know—all they need is a start in the right direction; the rest they will work out for themselves."

The children who make up the ten classes under Miss McCutcheon's supervision are for the most part Italian and Irish. When the hour for the class arrives, there is knock at the front door and the entire eight come in with a scraping of feet on the door mat. Hats and coats are hung behind the cretonne of the wardrobes; eight gingham aprons and eight gingham caps are taken down and put on and then there is a preliminary examination of the whole flat, to see if the preceding class left it in good order, before beginning upon the work of the afternoon or evening, as the case may be.

This is by no means the only model flat in the city, however. There are two others under the City Mission Committee of St. George's allied with the Memorial House flat. Each of these flats meets the problem of its neighborhood in a different way. One of them, which is temporarily discontinued but which will be reopened very soon, is at 130 Stanton Street. Here the neighborhood is largely Jewish. The instructor in charge is a young Jewish girl and all cooking is strictly kosher.

At St. Cyprian's Parish House, West Sixty-third Street, however, the problem is quite different. Here the model flat is used to train young colored girls to be maids and laundresses. The furnishings used are those of well-to-do people. The young girl who is learning to wait on table is made acquainted with the various pieces of the table linen; she learns to set the table, both for small family dinners and for formal affairs. Once a month a formal dinner is given in the flat, which is on the top floor of one of the brownstone-front houses occupied by St. Cyprian's, and the girl who is receiving individual training waits on the table.

Sweeping and cleaning, the care of bedroom and dining room are also taught. In the kitchen cooking lessons are given. Here the girls learn fine laundry work, and as the parish takes orders for laundry work this puts the flat on a self-supporting basis. The other two downtown flats are run at an expense approximating $500 a year.

Individual Teaching.

The girls who take the training in the St. Cyprian model flat are paid five cents an hour if they are in school, ten cents if they are out of school. There is no mapped-out course of instruction, individual teaching being given by the wife of Dr. Johnson, the rector of the parish, formerly by Miss McCutcheon herself. As soon as a girl is fairly efficient she is entered in the parish employment agency and placed very shortly.

This work in applied homemaking is not confined, however, to the churches and philanthropic institutions. Already at the Washington Irving High School there is a six-room apartment fitted up in the school building, just about ready for work to begin. This flat, which is under the direction of Miss Florence Willard, was started last February and is being furnished by the boys and girls of the school. All the carpentering work is done by the boys, shelves are put up, moldings placed, painting done. The girls do the sewing, curtains and hangings, for the most part.

This includes lessons in the buying of furniture, and the flat is being slowly furnished after expeditions into the shops by the entire class, each class in a body of thirty-two. The course is to be divided so that a month at a time will be given to laundry work, a month to cooking, a month to cleaning and caring for the flat, and so on.

This flat makes a special point of its artistic interior. The ingenious originators of the plan have secured sets of detachable moldings. These can be removed and the wallpaper taken off and replaced by paper of another color, which is tacked up into place underneath the moldings. This gives scope for training in the arrangement of color schemes.

Almost anything, of course, might happen at the Washington Irving High School. But the idea has taken hold of the Board of Education and plans are now under way for the establishment of a model flat within or adjoining every school in the city. While the plans are being considered by the Board of Estimate, private donation has made possible a model flat to be opened very shortly in Public School 7, on Christopher Street, near Hester.

This flat is to comprise four rooms and a bath, and almost the entire equipment for it will be furnished by the boys and the girls of the elementary schools, the trade, technical, and the vocational schools.

For instance, the boys will do all the necessary plumbing and piping for gas. They will make such furniture as chairs and sewing tables, ironing boards, and a clotheshorse for the laundry, a cabinet for the bathroom.

The girls will furnish table linen, sheets and pillow cases, curtains, towels, and so on, even furnishing woven rugs for the floors. Wallpaper is to be selected by the pupils, and they will decide upon color schemes for the rooms.

This experiment, which will be under the direct supervision of the Principal of the school, will be started with a class of forty-eight pupils in two groups of twenty-four each. The course, which takes the entire year, is merely to be called homemaking and includes a number of subjects. There will be an elaborate course in cooking, which will be done for the most part in the school kitchen, and will require six hours a week. Two hours will be spent in the laundry, where prospective homemakers will learn to wash and iron everything from unbleached muslin to the finest lawns and the most delicate laces. There will be an hour of chemistry, in which will be taught the means of detecting by simple tests adulterations in foods. The action of certain foods upon metals will be demonstrated to introduce such matters as ptomaine poisoning. Under the division of hygiene, first aid will be taught, as well as the care of clothing, of invalids and sick children, with a bit about sanitation and general household cleanliness.

But besides all these things that you would expect would be taught in a model flat, there will be arithmetic applied to housekeeping; marketing, the keeping of accounts, planning a meal with regard to the family income, and so on. There will also be English in the form of books about housekeeping, and here the children will have their first introduction to all the valuable material contained in the Government bulletins.

The Home's the Thing.

"We have finally come to realize how important this question of homemaking is," says Superintendent Straubenmüller, in speaking of this plan. "Eighty-five per cent. of our women in the United States are not employed in any gainful occupation. That means that most of them are taking care of homes, or trying to do it. Fifteen per cent. only are working women, and the wage-earning life of the women who make up that small percentage is but seven years.

"That shows us pretty clearly for what we must educate the great majority of our young girls. We talk a great deal about vocational training without realizing that as far as the girls are concerned we are putting all the emphasis on about one-seventh of our number and letting the other six-sevenths take care of itself.

"Homemaking is about the most important thing that we can teach the young girls in the public schools to-day. And when I say homemaking, I mean something broader than the mere putting of a house together and the keeping of it in order. That is the trouble with so much of our trade education—it teaches trade and nothing else. There is no background. Those who turn the stupid boy over to the trade school, saying, 'He isn't good for anything but a trade,' do not realize that brains are needed in a trade just as much as anywhere else.

"Now, in these homemaking courses, we teach English, we teach arithmetic, we teach hygiene, and the recognition of civic duties. We try to give the pupils some little training in the selection of beautiful as well as useful things. We try to give a broad foundation for their future life, and, after all, the best that we can do is to open the doors to them and show them the way to go about learning.

"But it must be understood from the start, that these model flats are not to be for the east side schools only. Poverty has nothing to do with ignorance of home-making. There are plenty of families living in their 'brown-stone fronts' who are practically ignorant of the fundamental principles of cooking, of cleaning, of keeping a house in order. Families who employ servants are often the most sadly in need of training.

"Our courses will be adapted to the class of children in each school, for each neighborhood has a little different problem to meet. But everywhere the object will be the same, for uptown well-to-do families as for those on Hester Street—to perfect the future housewife by arousing an interest in housekeeping as an art, by instilling habits of industry, order, cleanliness, and thrift. The rich need this just as much as the poor."

WHEN THE "COP" OVERREACHED HIMSELF

I AGREE with the late Mayor Gaynor's advice to the police, to 'be sure you're right before you arrest a man,'" said a veteran plain-clothes man. "Early in my career I made an arrest and I shiver every time I think of it.

"Three days after I was appointed a regular policeman I developed a craving to become a plain-clothes detective. Life on the regular force, pounding the sidewalks hour after hour, was monotonous. As I saw things then, one of two things was necessary. Either I had to have a 'pull' with some one 'higher up' or turn off a brilliant piece of detective work. Not having the 'pull,' I decided to win my promotion by my work.

"Before my appointment to the force I used to envy the policemen, with their blue uniforms, brass buttons, and glittering badges. Later I learned to hate the brass buttons, for they advertised me to the crooks. I wanted to capture a really big criminal, some desperate lawbreaker, but what chance had I with all that brass to warn crooks away from me?

"Then one hot midsummer's night, my chance came and I lifted myself from the dull routine of things, even if I didn't win promotion.

"I was working in a district given up almost entirely to warehouse and wholesale places. This night I was making my usual rounds, stopping at every door to turn the knob and give the door a shake.

"Just as I was stepping into a dark hallway I saw on the other side of the street an Italian with a bundle. My suspicions were aroused at once.

"As quietly as I could go in my heavy police shoes, I crossed the street and, keeping in the shadows, began to close in on the man with the bundle.

"We had a perfect right to stop men in that neighborhood who carried suspicious looking packages, and inspect them. 'Stop,' I called to the 'Dago,' 'I want to see what you've got in that bundle.'

"With a frightened cry the Italian took to his heels. Now I knew I was dealing with a thief.

"The Italian turned into a little side street, with me about thirty feet behind.

"In the police training school I had been taught to throw a club at a running man so as to trip him up. I slowed up a little bit, drew my club, and took careful aim.

"It was the best throw I ever made. The club wrapped itself around the Italian's legs, and he went down, the bundle rolling out of his hands into the gutter.

"'Now, Giovanni,' said I, 'you pick up that package and come to the station house.'

"At the mention of the bundle the 'Dago' let out a yell of fright. He backed away from the package. I got behind him and gave him a boost toward it. There was no doubt in my mind what he was up to. He intended to deny that he had the bundle. But I was too wise for that.

"Every time I got the Italian near the package he'd squeal and back off. A few caresses of my nightstick, however, finally made him pick it up.

"It was my first prisoner, and, take it from me, I was proud when I kicked open the station house door and walked my man up to the desk. My prisoner put the bundle on the desk, and then backed away from it. As modestly as possible I told the Captain, who happened to be behind the desk, how I had caught the man.

"'Good work,' said the Captain. 'That fellow is a crook. His face shows it. He's got stolen goods in there.'

"Then we examined the package, squeezing it, and pounding it with our hands. The Italian almost fainted when he saw us.

"The Captain was about to open the bundle when we saw on the back of it this label:

"'Dynamite—handle with care.'

"At that the Italian, who could not speak enough English to make himself understood, reached into his pocket and handed over a note which explained that he was commissioned to carry ten pounds of dynamite through the streets so that a job of blasting in the old subway could be finished that night.

"Now I shiver every time I think of how I chased that ten pounds of dynamite through the streets.

ENTHUSIASM THE SUBJECT OF SCIENTIFIC ORGANIZATION

The Man Who Has Filled Madison Square Garden with Cheering Thousands of Voters, and Has Brought Out Miles of Marchers in a Parade, Tells How It Is Done.

IT was the night of the great Mitchel mass meeting. About 50,000 people were trying desperately to get into Madison Square Garden, where 15,000 seats awaited them. And that very afternoon it had been predicted that the meeting would be a failure.

An overworked policeman turned to Charles H. Sherrill. "With a system like yours," he said, "I could elect a Chinaman President of the United States!"

And why did the policeman select Mr. Sherrill for this peculiar compliment? Because he knew that back of the Madison Square Garden meeting, and back of many a similar demonstration, it was possible for the diligent inquirer to find a lawyer named Sherrill, a lawyer whose chief recreation is the concentration and direction of enthusiasm.

Mr. Sherrill was interviewed recently by a TIMES reporter.

"When did you first become interested in the direction of political demonstrations?" asked the interviewer.

"Well," was the reply, "it was when I was a student at Yale. I organized the Depew Battalion. But it was in 1896 that I first began to study the matter seriously.

"In 1896, you remember, the country was divided on the money question. The East was solidly against the West. There was a great sound money parade in New York City. All kinds of people came out and marched—laborers, business men, and members of various professions. And they marched under difficulties, for some of the groups waited on side streets for two or three hours before they could be put into the line of march.

Studying the Problem.

"As I watched them I thought, 'Now, would it be possible to make these men parade if the issue was something less vitally interesting to them? Would they undergo all these hardships in an ordinary campaign?' It seemed to me that they would not, and that some method should be developed which would simplify and systematize parading.

"So I set to work to study the problem. I investigated the mobilization methods that were proving effective in France and Germany. I devoted much time and thought to the subject, and I applied the theories that I evolved when the time came for the Business Men's Parade of Oct. 31, 1908.

"There were 91,187 men in that parade, and they marched to the music of 124 bands. The parade started by the departure from 35 Pine Street at half-past nine in the morning of the grand marshal and staff, and James S. Sherman, reviewing officer, escorted by the Executive Committee. Upon our arrival at Worth Street, the head of the column fell in behind us. This was at ten o'clock. There was no break in the parade, but a steady stream of business men marched by the reviewing stand until nineteen minutes past six in the evening. This was long after dark, for the sun set at fifty-eight minutes past four, so many of the last divisions marched with torches. No division had to wait more than sixteen minutes to get into the line.

"The wholesale drygoods merchants were the first to start, their hour being ten o'clock. They passed the grand stand at ten minutes past eleven. Then the central drygoods merchants, 8,000 of them, started at fifty-three minutes past ten and passed the reviewing stand at ten minutes past twelve. The last division started at twenty minutes past four and its head passed the reviewing stand at twelve minutes past six.

"Now the places at which these divisions entered the line and the hours at which they started were not determined haphazard. Everything was carefully planned. Here is one instance of the sort of problem which confronted us. There were six thousand bankers and brokers ready to march with us. How were we to arrange for their entrance into the parade? Most of them would go out to luncheon at 12 o'clock. If we were to arrange for them to start before that hour they would not join us. On the other hand, if we appointed 3 or 4 o'clock, they would not wait, but would go home after they had finished their luncheon. So, in spite of much opposition, I appointed ten minutes to 2 as the hour for them to start, giving them time to get luncheon, but not time enough to get tired and go home. So we had a good representation of the bankers and brokers in our line of march.

"This," said Mr. Sherrill, taking a sheet of paper from his desk, "will show you how the thing was arranged. Every member of the Lawyers' Taft and Sherman Club received one of these maps. It shows, you see, the blocks of Pine Street, William Street, Nassau Street, and Broadway on which the lawyers were to assemble. The exact position of every one of the ten battalions is marked. The aids were to report to Col. W. G. Gates at 35 Pine Street at a quarter past 1, lawyers not already assigned were to report to the Tenth Battalion at the corner of Pine and William Streets at half-past 1, and the whole division was to start at a quarter to 2."

"Are the methods you employ in arranging a mass meeting like those you use in arranging a parade?" asked the reporter.

New Kind of Parade.

"Yes," he answered, "the system employed to fill the Madison Square Garden at the Business Men's Non-Partisan Anti-Tammany League's mass meeting is an offshoot of the one which put the big parade on the street five years ago. Some time ago it occurred to me that, except for Hanna's campaign, there had never been a serious attempt to change the vote of the country. The average politician uses a phrase which in itself is a lamentable confession. He speaks of 'getting out the vote.'

"That is, he is concerned only with the old vote, the established vote, the vote that already is certain. His idea of a political parade is a procession of men from the regular line political clubs, men who are already determined to vote with the party and who really stand in no need of the parade to quicken their enthusiasm. Generally the national headquarters merely observes the campaign.

"But such parades as that which took place in 1908, and such demonstrations as the recent Mitchel mass meeting, are very different in their effect. Parades not of professional politicians, big and little, but of business men, most of them not especially interested in politics—these certainly have their effect. Think of those 90,000 men in offices throughout the city, every one of them with a vote, thinking and planning for six or eight weeks before the parade! A torchlight parade got up on the spur of the moment in very picturesque, no doubt, but its effect is not to be compared with that of the parade which is carefully planned long in advance."

Mr. Sherrill has great confidence in what he calls his "signature system." Five years ago he was asked by Frank Hitchcock to organize a Business Men's League. He traveled all over the country organizing leagues in the principal cities. His method was to see a few of the prominent business men in each place, appoint them officers in the as yet nonexistent league, print a supply of stationery with their names at the top, and have them receive the signed enrollment blanks obtained by a postal canvass of the city. By this method he built up a tremendous organization. In Cincinnati alone 27,000 members signed.

And in arranging the Mitchel meeting his method was not dissimilar. On Oct. 20 he was asked to hold a campaign meeting in Madison Square Garden on Oct. 30. This was short notice. But he had his organizations ready, and by means of them, as has been said, he filled the Garden to overflowing.

The Business Men's Non-Partisan Anti-Tammany League was organized by the "signature system." There were sixty groups, consisting of the members of various trades and professions. Mr. Sherrill selected representative men in each branch of activity—Charles Hanson Towne and James Montgomery Flagg among the authors and illustrators, Otto Eldlitz and George S. Chappell among the architects, Harry Schreior and Edward L. Suffern among the accountants, A. S. Waitzfelder and Henry W. Schloss among the braid manufacturers, and so on down alphabetically to James R. Keiser and Edward S. Levy in the wholesale men's furnishing trade. These men were the officers of their respective organizations, they received the signed membership blanks, and the result was that sixty strong, enthusiastic organizations were ready to respond to the call for the Mitchell demonstration.

"I have always thirty or forty men on whom I can count," said Mr. Sherrill, "and each one of these men can get together a crowd on short notice. I can get 12,000 people together on any proposition.

"But the method of organizing a parade and the method of organizing a meeting are not absolutely the same. I admit I have not the same enthusiasm for the meeting as I have for the parade.

"The method of organizing a meeting is, of course, not military. I am by no means an admirer of the late James Farley, the strikebreaker, but I have learned some things by watching his procedure. You see, his problem was in some respects similar to mine—he had to assemble people under difficulties.

"At the bottom of my work there are two principles—to know the men and to keep my name out of the papers. I was very much pleased, some weeks before the election, when Mr. Mitchel met me and acknowledged that he had never heard of me before. It is a part of my business to give publicity to the leaders of the movement in the various trades and professions, but I have no desire for it personally.

How They Are Organized.

"You know I couldn't get up these affairs without a lot of assistance. It is the leaders in the trade who do the real work. For example, nobody can hope to organize the insurance men so well as the genially energetic George T. Wilson, the paper trade as Paul E. Vernon, the coffee people as A. Wakeman. The friendship and cooperation of at least a hundred such men are absolutely necessary.

Mention has been made of the notable precision of the Business Men's Parade of Oct. 31, 1908. In his scrap book, among letters from Senators, diplomats, Governors, ex-Presidents, and famous men of many nations, Mr. Sherrill keeps, and regards with peculiar pride, a communication from Inspector Schmittberger. The Inspector was not likely to grow overenthusiastic on the subject of processions—but after the Business Men's Parade he wrote to Mr. Sherrill as follows:

My dear Mr. Sherrill—I am very glad to hear that your association was pleased with the work of my men throughout your parade, and thank you for your kind communication in reference thereto.

It was one of the largest and best conducted parades I have seen in my thirty-five years' service. What interested me most was your time schedule for the start of the divisions. The many large parades which I have handled in this city had always the usual starting point at a given time, divisions falling in, &c. The trial of your time schedule appeared to me in the start as hazardous, but I flew from division to division in my auto and saw everything working so well, I admit I was anxious to know the author. You deserve a lot of credit for it, and I tender you herewith my hearty congratulations. Believe me, very truly yours, Max F. Schmittberger, Inspector, Fourteenth District.

Charles H. Sherrill.

First Mate of the "Osprey," Now Living Quietly in England, Tells of Hair-Raising Experience That Befell Him in His Seafaring Days.

William Hamman, who tells the following story, is living at Cadis Head, Eng. After being educated at Rugby, he took to the sea, settling down only after sailing vessels were almost extinct. During his life as a seaman he kept about him as many books as possible, and his library in the cottage at Cadis Head is considered remarkably complete.

I WAS first mate of the four-master Osprey out of New York with kerosene oil for Hongkong in 1872. There was little of note in the passage to the South Seas. The log book was a mere record of figures and tiresome computations. Capt. Vincent and I whiled away hours that ran into days and days that ran into weeks playing cribbage in the cabin and talking politics and news that was months' old and worn threadbare.

When the water went bad it only multiplied the uncomfortableness of things. We cursed the water, as was proper and natural in the tropics, and took to quenching our thirst with liquor until we should be able to make one of the Kermadec Islands, which we knew to lie a little to the northwest of us in about longitude 167 degrees west and latitude 31 south. To drink the water meant sure sickness and, of course, we could not, nor would we, subsist entirely on liquor.

On the second morning of our thirst we sighted a low bank of land in the distance and bore down on one of those little coral paradises which dot the Southern Pacific. Boats were lowered and the big water casks were taken ashore. For perhaps a mile from the water's edge the island was flat and shelved very gradually to the foot of great cliffs that towered like citadel walls high over the ocean. A stream wound through the surface of the plain, the heavy tropic verdure of its banks hiding the water from view except where the sun, filtering through leaves, flashed back from a ripple.

The water near the mouth of the stream would have been good to drink, but there was a possibility that it would not last as long in the casks as that which we might take from further up where air and sunlight reached it. Some hundred yards from the mouth of the creek, which twisted and turned upon itself in a marvelous manner, the whaleboat grated on the pebble bottom and came to rest. The Captain got into the dinghy with me, and four sailors rowed us cautiously up the stream, where the water soon became deeper again.

Palm walls, rearing on either side, gave the effect of winding through a tunnel. The darkness and the odor-laden heat depressed the spirits. There was a heavy sense of being alone in a vast world of silent vegetable life when we lost sight of the whaleboat around a bend, and we experienced a vague, distrustful feeling of something inimical lurking in the very air. Reason warned that the place must be teeming with the germs of fever and of malaria, but stronger even than that was a subtle something that urged one to be rid of the place, put one on guard, prepared for something unforeseen, terrible. I think there was not a man among us who did not feel the mysterious sense of approaching danger, and yet we were determined to push on until we should find water that bubbled over rocks and was made healthful by the action of air and light. Besides, none would have given in to the feeling of strange dread.

Suddenly rounding a graceful bend in the stream, we came upon a stockade built of great trunks of palms and logs, close to the edge of the water. The men rowing could not see it, but the Captain and I in the stern of the boat faced it squarely on the opposite bank to the one we were skirting. An unmistakable sign of permanent habitation, looming unexpectedly in that waste of morass, it startled us and our faces must have shown our consternation before we spoke, for the men let their oars rest and turned to stare where we were looking.

A quick pounding of wings and the whirring flight of a bird from the undergrowth startled us. The men clutched at their knives, the Captain lifted his rifle partly from his knees and I instinctively fingered my pistol. There was no reason to believe that natives would be anything except friendly. The inhabitants of such islands were usually disposed to be kind and to trade unless they had suffered recent outrage from some unscrupulous crew.

So we argued among ourselves, and then decided to approach the stockade and see if any natives were there. Through his trumpeted hands the Captain hallooed and received no answer. From the dense forest echoes rumbled back at us confusedly. From way, way off in the distance came the sound of a bark.

"We'll go ashore," said Capt. Vincent, "and see if we can rouse anyone."

None too willingly the men started to paddle to the beach. With a gentle grating the boat slid on to the bank and the Captain rose to step out. The men were in the act of shipping their oars. So quietly was the whole thing done that there was an air almost of mystery about it.

While the were bending over Rodgers, one of the [illegible] groaned deeply and slid forward on his face. There had not been a sound. With the rattle of the oars we had not even heard a soft whirr, but there in the back of his shoulder stuck an arrow, still quivering from the force of the impact against his muscles.

In a flash we had shoved the boat into the stream. It was horrible. We knew not even from which direction the bolt had fallen. In blind fury, while we pulled the arrow from poor Rodgers' back, the Captain fired point blank into the barricade.

With that there was a yell and a shower of arrows fell upon us. We could see that they were coming from the top of the barricade now, and the Captain and I fired at heads when they showed there. One insolent savage climbed to the very top of the wall, and, yelling, was fitting an arrow to his bow. I aimed carefully with my pistol, but almost in the very act of firing one of the barbed shafts cut into my hand, and the pistol, going off in the air, clattered to the bottom of the boat. My wound was in the flesh, the arrow merely having cut me in passing, and I snatched my weapon with the other hand, aiming as best I could.

Rodgers was not dead and he lay, grimly refusing to groan with the pain, in the bottom of the boat. The men churned the water, bending their oars to shoot the boat forward. The Captain and I did some execution with our weapons, but it helped little. Careening over, almost to the point of capsizing, we scuttled around the bend in the stream, out of sight of the stockade, and there, lined across the stream, were four canoes filled with grotesquely tattooed savages bearing bows and arrows and spears.

Cries and furious yells of the savages lent terror to their onslaught as they paddled down on us. Our men were silent. Strength and breath and alertness to the last degree would be needed if any were to come through the approaching clash alive. The eyes of the painted devils, glaring at us, seemed greedy for life. It was terrifying, but it roused a like spirit in us. The oppressive languor of the jungle had left us. We were animals, hunted but at bay, and ready to fight. Dim thoughts of safety if we should gain the ship, our real object of breaking through the line of [illegible] were lost in the fury of the primal instinct to fight, fight, fight.

As we swept toward the enemy I leaned far over the side and fired at one of the paddlers. He leaped in the air and fell splashing into the water. Captain Vincent tore the side out of one canoe with a shot from his rifle and it turned over to sink. The men who were thrown out struggled through the water, which was up to their arm pits, brandishing their weapons. In an instant we were upon them. A big black fellow lunged with an assegai, but our man in the bow raised his oar and the heavy stick thudded against the head of the savage. He sank beneath the surface.

Then the crash came. The canoes closed with us. I dropped one savage with the last shot from my revolver, then used it as a club. A pair of sinewy arms twisted about the Captain's throat, but as I dodged a thrust from a spear, I smashed the butt of my pistol on to the crinky head of the savage, who dropped into the water. One of our men was dragged from the boat and trampled into the stream. Then, as the natives climbed over the sides, the dinghy capsized and we were all thrown, thrashing and kicking, into the creek.

Of how the others fared, I know nothing. It was each for himself and we were all kept busy. Dodging, struggling, half drowned, we fought there in the water. When I dodged a blow my head would go under and I would gasp in the water and rise again only to strike out desperately at some head bobbing near me.

There was a shout. In a second of respite I saw the whaleboat rounding the next curve. I learned later that the men had got out into the water to push it ahead of them as a protection from the enemy's weapons, and when they had forded the shallow place and found the stream deepening had climbed into the boat again.

In no time the reinforcements were down upon us, smashing with their oars, slashing with their knives, and firing when they saw the opportunity. One by one they were fighting us free from the savages and dragging us into the whaleboat. All would have gone well had not another band of natives appeared at the edge of the stream, and, [illegible] from somewhere, [illegible] us. Three of our [illegible] three more were disabled. There were at least fifty of the natives with the reinforcements and flight was our only hope.

I was cut and wounded in a dozen places and lay half dazed in the bottom of the boat. The Captain was the last man to be pulled over the ride. The savages in the canoes from shore were fast bearing down on us. The men had all they could do to beat off those who clung desperately to the whaleboat, and just as the Captain was being dragged over the gunwale a dozen hands clutched him from the water and pulled him back. We deemed him as good as dead, and, with the natives swarming about us, splashed away down stream.

Those of us who were able clambered into the shallow water and pushed the boat before us. I clung to the gunwale and stumbled along some way, though I must have been more hindrance than help. Once in deeper water, we rowed as fast as we could, and, with the natives yelling behind us, gained the cove in safety.

The men were in no condition for work, and besides there was a lurking wish in my heart to attempt revenge for the Captain's death, so we did not put out of the cove. Late in the afternoon I was pacing the deck rather stiff jointedly when I noticed a black object in the water slowly approaching the Osprey from shore, disappearing, then coming to the surface still nearer to us.

The men regarded him with no friendly glances, and no sooner was he on board than he took a small round nut from his mouth and handed it to me, as I stood in front of the other men. With a little pressure the two halves of the shell parted and I found a tiny scrap of paper rolled into a pill, inside the nut. Tremblingly I unrolled the paper and read, scrawled in pencil:

"Feast to-morrow. Torture. For God's sake, come!"

Briefly, I explained the situation to the men, who already were aware of the facts. It seemed the Captain, whom we had left for dead, had been dragged ashore alive and was being held for a great religious ceremony to be celebrated the next day.

We lost no time in preparing for a night attack on the stockade. From the [illegible] of a large [illegible] of kerosene [illegible] there was a [illegible] the carpenter cut a circular piece of wood and planed the edges so that it was too loose to be replaced. This we inserted and made fast with paraffine, which made the cask airtight again. Several bits of rope about three feet long were soaked in pitch, and these we sewed into oilskin packages, sealing the seams with pitch.

Then we sat down to wait. Toward evening we heard barbaric music and chanting from the island and knew that the natives were drinking and dancing in preparation for the morrow's orgy. We did not fear for the Captain then, for we know they would keep him until the final moment for the proper death, but it seemed hours that we waited there for silence to tell us the natives had drunk themselves into stupor.

Our precious cask once in the whaleboat, we rowed cautiously to the mouth of the creek. There the last whispered consultation was held. No one was to be left alive in the clutches of the savages. If our scheme failed, we were to kill the Captain or any others who might be captured, rather than leave them to be tortured.

Halsey, a seaman who was a bullock for strength, and myself slid noiselessly into the black water and began swimming up the creek, pushing the cumbersome cask before us.

One moment we swam, the next we were able to walk, but inch by inch we forged ahead until we rounded the last turn which brought us in sight of the stockade. All was quiet. The savages were probably sleeping in drunkenness. Close against the side of the stockade we placed the cask, not daring even to breathe. I held my breath until it seemed my lungs would burst, then took another quickly, afraid of waking some one.

Gently, firmly, we pressed against the wooden plug. It had been cut large enough to let the air reach the oil so that there would be no danger of it failing to explode. The rope and matches in the oilskin cases were dry. We placed the fuses. Everything was ready.

Fear gripped me. Suppose the other men were not yet in position! It would spoil all if the savages had time to collect themselves after the explosion. On the other hand, every second of delay held a thousand chances of discovery.

Simultaneously, Halsey and I struck matches and lit the fuses of pitch. They burned fast, sputtering. Almost mad with fear of failure, expectancy, and hope, we hurried into the water and, with only our heads above the surface, watched the fuses burn. Just on the edge of the hole they seemed to hang fire for minutes, then [illegible] there was a [illegible] sion, great banks of smoke swept upward and outward, flames ran along the ground and some climbed the wooden barriers.

In the jungle down stream there was a din of yelling. The rush of our men for the barricade sounded like the trample of a regiment. Inside the stockade all was confusion. Men and women and children ran from the little doors in the wall.

Halsey and I leaped from the water, skirted the spreading patch of flames and climbed the barricade. From the top I fired at savages who were attacking some of our men who had managed to enter the inclosure. A big black fellow hurled a spear at my head. I dodged, but fell to the ground, striking with my knife as I fell. It struck something soft and stuck fast, being wrenched from my hand.

In one corner of the inclosure the Captain lay bound. In a second I had cut his bonds, crushing in a head with the butt of my pistol when a savage interfered.

"To the boat—to the boat!" I yelled. "The Captain is free!"

The natives were still struggling in confused masses, terrified by the explosion and the flames which were fast devouring the walls of the stockade and spreading into the forest. Halsey, who had dropped from the wall close behind me, helped me with Capt. Vincent, who was weak and stiff. Just as we were crawling through one of the low exits a savage dashed out Halsey's brains with a heavy club. I caught up a spear a native had dropped and felled the man with a stab in the side.

I do not know how the others made their way back to the boat. I saw two of our men drag the body of Halsey with them as they fought their way through the forest. Some one helped me with the Captain. It was a confused, kaleidoscopic whirl of blows and parries. Fighting for every step, we finally gained the boat. The half-drunken, muddled savages were all about us, but they were obliged to turn to saving themselves and their dwellings from the flames.

Halsey was dead. Two of the other men lay helpless for six weeks after the fight, but even the one death was counted better than that the Captain should have died in torment. We knew that Halsey would have thought it so.

As we rowed out to the ship, the flames swept upward and lapped about the tops of some of the palms. The sky was red, and the black smoke swirled in great rolls. The scene was one of beauty, one that would have been admired but for the poor mangled body that had paid for it.

NEW JERSEY MAKES TWO BIG PROBLEMS SOLVE EACH OTHER

Col. Edward A. Stevens Is Trying an Experiment With a Convict Camp Which Hasn't Even a Fence Around It and Through It He Is Building Much Needed Good Roads.

"DON'T WORRY CAMP."

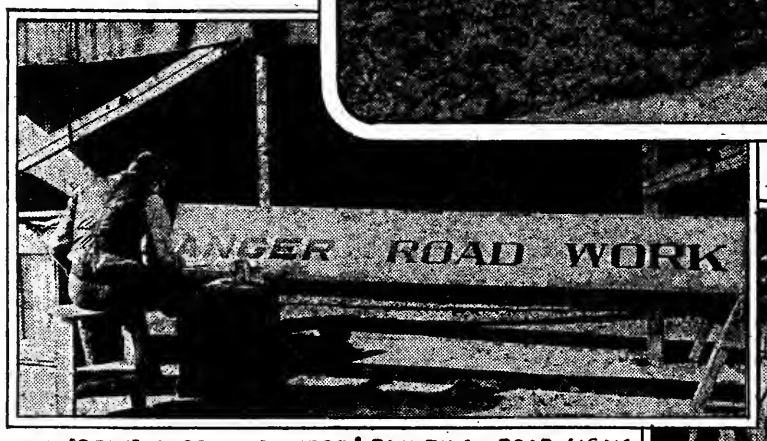
THE MESS ROOM.



A "DON'T WORRY CAMPER" PAINTING ROAD SIGNS

TWO OF THE CONVICTS AT WORK IN THE OPEN.

ONE END OF THE BUNKHOUSE.

ON the doorstep of a little gray house up in the hills of Northern New Jersey a man was sitting one day last week, placidly soaking up all he could hold of the glorious Indian Summer sunshine. Two cats beside him and a pump in the little house behind him purred contentedly in unison.

The man looked healthy, happy—and free. Not even a fence separated the grass plot in front of him from the highroad which swept past on its way to Newton. Yet there was just about as much probability of the pump behind him getting up and strolling off along that road as there was that the man himself would go.

Aside from that spot there was only one place on earth where the law said he might be. That was the penitentiary at Trenton. The man was a convict; one of thirty prisoners with whom the State of New Jersey is conducting an interesting experiment. The little gray pumphouse is one of a group of seven buildings. In the grass plot in front of them is a neatly painted sign which reads:

DEPT. OF PUBLIC ROADS,
STATE OF NEW JERSEY.
1st Division—Camp No. 1.

That is all right for official purposes. But it failed to measure up to the men's ideas of a name. So they nailed another board to the corner of the fence around an adjoining field, and on this board they painted, not quite so neatly, perhaps, but very clearly indeed, the inscription:

DON'T WORRY CAMP.

While the State is behind the experiment, there is one man who has more to do with it than any one else. That man is Col. Edward A. Stevens of the well-known "Castle Point" family of Hoboken. When Woodrow Wilson became Governor of New Jersey he made Col. Stevens, who had been his classmate at Princeton, Commissioner of Public Roads.

The road problem of the State is a big one because the highways are literally ridden to death by automobiles. The prison problem is equally pressing, for the penitentiary at Trenton is crowded far beyond its proper capacity. Don't Worry Camp is the first step in an attempt to make these two problems help solve each other.

Last Spring the officials of Sussex County bought five acres from a farmer and turned them over to the State as the site of Camp No. 1. And, by the way, if you want to antagonize everybody concerned with the project, just refer to the place as "the convict camp," and you will succeed. If there is one word that is taboo in the whole connection it is "convict." The place is the "State camp," and those in it are "the men."

No Blot on the Landscape.

The house of the farmer who sold the land is within 100 yards of the camp buildings. Yet neither he nor any of the people living near has made a single complaint of their new neighbors. The camp is not even a blot on the landscape. One of the men, a cheerful colored person jocularly referred to by his fellows as "the landscape gardener," has graded and seeded the front yard so that it looks as neat as the approach to a Summer hotel.

The men themselves cut down a tall, straight tree, painted the pole, set it, and every day hoist a big flag which makes a gay note in the picture. At the top of the grassy slope is the office building where the three foremen from the Department of Public Roads have their quarters. Back of this are the "mess hall," the bunkhouse, and several smaller buildings. The whole place is kept in apple-pie order, and one might pass it a hundred times without suspecting its real character.

The flag is not the only thing in sight that wears stripes. The men's garb is the regulation plain gray of the penitentiary; but in the daily life at Don't Worry Camp it undergoes many modifications. The man on the pump house doorstep, for instance, was in his shirt sleeves, and his prison cap was turned visor backward, so that he could get the full beat of the sunshine in his face.

"Convict" was not written in the look of his clothes any more than it was written in his ruddy face and smiling eyes. And it was the same with the groups at work a quarter of a mile down the road. The chief difference between them and an ordinary contractor's gang was that these men looked about ten times as clean as the others generally do. An observing person might have been struck by their evident preference for gray trousers. But aside from that peculiarity he would not have noticed anything unusual except their cleanliness.

There are thirty prisoners, five guards, and three foremen at Don't Worry Camp; and the life they lead there, judged by our present ideas on prison methods, is remarkable. If Col. Stevens has his way, it will be far more extraordinary in the future. But before explaining what he hopes to accomplish then, it will be best to describe what has been done already.

The camp was started last June. One building, now used for the mess room and kitchen, was put up by workmen from a nearby town. An artesian well was drilled and a pump installed. With the exception of that beginning and of the steam fitting and plumbing, the men have done everything else. They have built a bunkhouse, 76 by 16 feet long, with two wings, each 30 by 26 feet. They have built an office with two large rooms; also a pumphouse, a gasoline storage house, a repair shed, a shelter shed for the motor truck, a cement lined pit for the heating plant, besides innumerable smaller things, such as cupboards, shelves, tables, and so on.

They have painted three or four of the buildings, as well as a dozen big barricade signs for use in roadwork. They do every bit of labor about the camp, from cooking to running the great motor truck. Five men, including the two cooks, are detailed for the regular campwork. The other fifteen work on the roads. They have an eight-hour day. By putting in extra time on certain days they make up the week's total in five days and a half and get Saturday afternoon free.

There are no cells. The men sleep in the long main room of the bunkhouse, their cots ranged in two rows. There is absolutely free communication among them. There are no rules about silence at meals or that sort of thing. The men, the guards, and the foremen all eat in the same room and have absolutely the same food. The men may talk together at the table just as freely as the guards and the foremen may.

When work is done they may amuse themselves as they choose. Three well-worn baseball bats just inside the door bore silent testimony to many hours of good, wholesome recreation. A guitar and three other musical instruments hung from nails at the heads of as many cots. Well-thumbed packs of cards and a set of battered quoits were in evidence.

The foreman now in charge of construction work, a young road engineer by the name of Applegate, whooped joyously when asked whether the men were "allowed to talk in the bunkhouse in the evening."

"Not only talk, but sing and dance, too, if they want," said he. "We've got one of the best buck-and-wing dancers here you ever saw. And when our orchestra tunes up and the men get to singing together we sound pretty cheerful, I tell you! When I found that I was to go into a convict camp," speaking the forbidden phrase with an apologetic air, "I wasn't exactly tickled to death, you know. But, by George! this beats any regular contractors' camp I ever saw. It is cleaner than any I was ever in; and the men, as a whole, are more intelligent than ordinary road workmen."

Shotguns Unknown Here.

To the average outsider the chief interest in this experiment is the fact that a normal, wholesome life has been offered these thirty men in exchange for the regular prison régime. It is true that they have guards. The five keepers occupy one of the wings of the bunkhouse. This house is built in the shape of a cross, with the two short arms in the middle. One arm is the guards' quarters, the other contains the shower baths and toilet facilities.

One guard is on duty in the centre of the bunkhouse at night. Of the other four, one remains at camp during the day, the other three go out with the road gangs. Naturally they are armed. But they do not wear their revolvers conspicuously, and, as for the usual spectacle of a man with a shotgun, it is absolutely unknown around Don't Worry Camp.

A reporter for THE TIMES went out there the other day with Col. Stevens and Mr. E. M. Vail, the engineer in charge of the First Division, and therefore in immediate control of the new camp. The men were at work in three groups, widening a stretch of road and building a new bridge. They had built up the approaches and were getting ready for the concrete work.

Plenty of Activity.

Some were hammering and sawing, making the temporary frames for supporting the arches. Others were wading around in the stream, building a coffer dam, so that the piers could be constructed. Others were blasting rock or grading a sloping bank or finishing the surface of the new approach. One, a young chauffeur who had been mixed up in dealings with stolen tires, was running the big gray motor truck.

As the car containing the visitors ran by the various groups Col. Stevens and Mr. Vail called out cheerful greetings to the men. "Hello, Bill!" "Hello, Solomon!" And Bill and Solomon nodded and responded with apparently equal cheerfulness and goodwill. It was the finest sort of a day. The kind that would put anybody in a good humor; and perhaps that may have had something to do with the friendliness one felt on all sides.

But there was more in it than the sunshine would account for. When the car stopped at the bridge and the two road officials got out to inspect what was being done, there was no mistaking the spirit that prevailed. Most of the men talked to them as man to man, with the straightforward look which a man gives to his friend. They no more avoided the Colonel's glance than they dodged the sunshine.

Why should they? He came among them as the Commissioner of Roads and they were all on the same job. They were his workmen. There wasn't any sentimentalizing. And there wasn't any brutalizing. Here were men who were doing a man's work and living a man's life. A "keeper" in the background? Well, not even that exactly. One had to look carefully to find which of the scattered human figures came under that head. He wasn't aloof, a sinister threat in the background. He seemed, like everybody else, merely on the job.

But while there wasn't any sentimentalizing, there were little incidents which accounted for that man-to-man attitude between the Don't Worry Campers and their visitors. When the photographer pointed his camera at the motor truck, the chauffeur quietly climbed down and moved out of the picture. Well, a motor truck, even such an overgrown one, didn't seem a very exciting pictorial subject, and the reporter mildly suggested that the return of the chauffeur to his perch would add to the interest. The Colonel shook his head.

"No," he said; "that is for the men to decide. If they object to being photographed, that is their right. We respect their wishes."

This gives one clue to the reason why Don't Worry Camp got its name. Another very important one was discovered when the visitors came within sniffing distance of the kitchen where the big cook, whose white cap admirably set off his chocolate colored complexion, was getting dinner. The savory smells which emanated from that spotless kitchen would have teased the appetite even of a man who hadn't been working on a road all morning.

If any one thinks that all this sounds too good to be true, that there must be a fly in the ointment somewhere, he is right. There are, in fact, several flies. In the first place, there have been four escapes. Getting away is comparatively easy. The puzzle is not that a man should succeed in doing it, but that he should want to do it.

One of the men that got away had only a few months more to serve. Even from his own point of view it was a foolish thing to do. The explanation of why he did it is most interesting.

Why They Escaped.

There were two reasons for these escapes. One was direct, the other indirect. The first was the fact that the men had believed that they were to be paid for the work they did at the camp. When they found out that they wouldn't be, they thought they had a grievance. The money had, in fact, been appropriated for that purpose. But when it came to honoring the vouchers of the Department of Public Roads, the State authorities held that the statute permitting such payments applied only to convicts working under private contractors. The department was not a private contractor. Therefore, the men at the State camp could not be paid, and the appropriation lapsed last month into the State Treasury.

The other, the indirect reason, was the attitude of the men of the camp on the subject of an escape. They regarded it as no affair of theirs if one of their number got away. It made no difference in their situation. They lost nothing by it. In fact, in the case of at least one of the runaways, they were frankly glad to be rid of him. He was a "troublemaker," they said, and it was "a good thing when he went."

Col. Stevens has plans now which, if they can be carried out, will attack both these conditions. Already they are being put into the form of a bill which will be introduced at the next session of the Legislature. They are undeniably radical. But these are the days of radical departures in penal methods, and Col. Stevens has faith in those which he is urging.

Col. Stevens's Suggested Changes.

The two big features of the plan he would like to see installed are, first, a new system of financial accounting with the men, and second, the establishment of the camp on virtually a self-government basis. Col. Stevens has discussed his ideas with Joseph P. Byers, State Commissioner of Charities and Correction, who perhaps more than any one else is to be credited with the original camp plan. Mr. Byers thinks the new methods proposed by Col. Stevens are rather advanced, but he is favorably inclined toward trying them out.

If this is done, the camp will become economically as well as morally a success. The trouble now is that the "overhead charges" are abnormally heavy. There is too much dead labor in comparison with the productive capacity of the camp. Out of the thirty-eight men now there, the five guards, three foremen, two cooks, and three men on regular camp duty must be put under "overhead charges." On an average two more men will be kept from the road work by extra camp duty, occasional illness, or other circumstances.

This leaves only twenty-three men available for the productive work, that of the roads. Any business man will realize that such a proposition cannot be made an economic success. The road department has asked for ten additional men from the penitentiary. They can be accommodated now in the bunkhouse; and as the present quota of cooks, camp caretakers, and foremen can easily take care of them, the arrangement would be much better.

But the number of guards would have to be increased. The general rule is one guard for five or six prisoners. The guards are not only dead labor, but pretty expensive labor at that. With seven guards for the forty prisoners, the camp would have to carry a charge of $616 a month for their salaries alone, not counting the cost of their maintenance.

It is partly to get rid of at least a share of this burden that Col. Stevens wishes to establish virtual self-government in the camp. But that is not his only motive. He believes that such a system would be as much better for the morale of the men as for the financial showing. That this is no chimera has been proved out in Colorado, where the convicts have given a marvelous demonstration of what can be done by introducing the honor system.

Col. Stevens points to West Point, to Annapolis, and to the colleges and universities as examples of the fact that esprit de corps is more powerful than volumes of rules and regulations. He declares that the most potent influence in any institution is not the rules of that institution, but the spirit of the place. And he believes that his convicts can and will develop the power to govern themselves if it is put up to them to do it.

His plan, roughly, is this: He would reduce the number of keepers to not more than two. He would have the men organize their own government, electing their own officers. He would establish a just rate of wages. Against each man's wages would be charged the cost of his maintenance. This would include food and the other camp expenses, as well as the salaries of the keepers.

The men would be told that if there were more than a certain very small percentage of escapes, the guards would be increased to the usual prison ratio, and their salaries would be charged against the men's wages. In other words, if they made it necessary to have guards they would have to pay for them.

In this way it would be to every man's personal interest to keep every other man up to the standard of discipline and order. Col. Stevens believes that this general camp spirit would be the most powerful agency that could be devised for preventing trouble, including escapes. Even if one man out of ten wanted to run away, he would have hard work doing it when the other nine were determined that he shouldn't.

Out in Colorado a man escaped from one of the road gangs, which was on the honor basis. There was one keeper in charge. Two of the convicts went to him and said:

"See here! Of course you've got to get that man back. Now, we will either stay here and take charge of the camp or we will go and get him if you will let us."

"Well," said the keeper, "I think I'd better stay here. You go after him."

They were gone four days. Then they came back, bringing the runaway with them.

Another Fly in the Ointment.

As for the wages of the men, they would not receive them until the expiration of their term. If they had families, the money could be paid to these dependents. Otherwise the balance due the men, after the deduction of the cost of their maintenance, would be paid them when they received their liberty. In this way the State would be relieved of the burden of their support while they were serving their term and they would have something to start with when they were out again. The knowledge that they and their families were to benefit by their labor would in itself put a different spirit in them.

There is still another fly in the ointment so far as the present camp is concerned. This is the confusion which exists as to its control. The Roads Department, the State Prison Labor Commission, and the Board of Governors of the penitentiary share the responsibility, and therefore the authority. While it is evident that Col. Stevens would like to have the chance to conduct the experiment himself, he is quite willing to let somebody else do it. But he feels it absolutely essential that the management of the camp should be put under a single authority, which shall be made responsible for it.

A second camp is to be started near Trenton. This seems to indicate that the State authorities feel that the experiment is worth continuing. The coming of Winter will make little difference in the régime at Don't Worry Camp. Road work will go on regularly. A shelter shed is to be added to the group of buildings, and when the weather is too severe the men will work there, making concrete posts and road markers.

Expenses Should Be Less.

As before said, the present balance sheet of Camp. No. 1 is not altogether satisfactory. The cost of supervision (by the road foremen) is not counted, as that would be necessary in any case. But the two actual cost items of maintenance and guards' wages are, respectively, $472.50 and $440, making a total of $912.50 a month. Against this, on the credit side, is labor of twenty-three men for twenty-five days at $1 a day, or $575 for the month. By increasing the number of men to fifty, which could be done by enlarging the bunkhouse, this amount would be raised to $825 a month. But the two additional guards would bring the cost up to a total of $1,055.50, leaving the balance still on the wrong side, while the men would still be unpaid.

If Col. Stevens and those who are interested in his plans succeed in putting them into effect, it is believed that not only will the camp be self-supporting, but that the men can be paid without cost to the State. This would be a great achievement, especially when one considers that the State has to keep them in any case. The financial aspect is a matter of interest to the taxpayers of New Jersey. But the general public will perhaps be more keenly curious as to the moral outcome of the self-government part of the scheme. If convicts can be made not only to pay their way, but also to establish their own discipline and to maintain it, a new era in penology will have dawned.

It would seem as if Col. Stevens had underestimated the productive capacity of the present camp in counting all the labor at only $1 a day. The carpenters, the chauffeur, the man who was leading in the construction of the coffer dam, the men who were sharpening and repairing tools at the camp forge should, it would seem, have been credited with a higher earning figure. Certainly no one can claim that the balance has been figured too optimistically.

There is one other point in which the public is interested. It must not be thought that the men sent to the camp are a promiscuous lot. They are chosen on the basis of merit. There are hundreds of applicants at Trenton who want to be transferred to Don't Worry Camp. The chance to go is a reward for good conduct. That makes a picked group. But it also creates a better discipline in those at the prison. It gives them something to strive for. And somehow a little of the new spirit of the camp filters back to the men in the cells.

WALLACE'S DEATH LEADS TO NEW REVIEW OF DARWINISM

The Theory Which He and Darwin Promulgated Has Been Modified But Not Exploded—It Stands To-day Essentially as These Two Gave It to the World.

HAS Darwinism passed into the limbo of exploded theories?

The newspapers, a number of days ago, chronicled the death of Alfred Russel Wallace, the co-discoverer, or, more strictly speaking, the copromulgator with Darwin of the theory that bears only the latter's name. It is not much more than half a century since the epoch-making paper embodying the conclusions of Darwin and Wallace was read to the Linnaean Society. The almost universal belief then was in the fixity of species. It was believed that all creatures, including man, existed practically as they had been handed down to the earth in the beginning by the Creator himself. The revolutionary papers of the two evolutionists instantly raised a storm of opposition and denunciation that rapidly grew fiercer and more widespread.

But one by one the scientists, first of England and then of Germany, took their stand with the revolutionists. Huxley in England and Haeckel in Germany were the foremost advocates of the Darwinian idea. Long and fiercely the battle raged. Slowly the doctrine of evolution fought its way to general adoption, gradually acquiring supreme dominion, not only in the biological sciences, but in almost every domain of human thought.

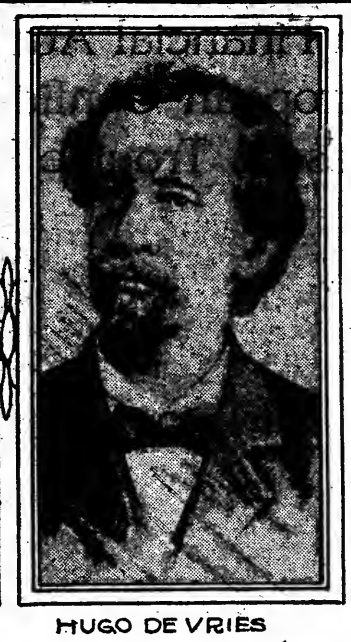
Now, however, we hear talk that Darwin and Wallace and the other Victorian giants are "back numbers," that their theories are "exploded." This seems to be more or less the opinion of the man in the street, as it is the printed opinion of the source of his information—the "popular" scientists who prefer sensationalism to accuracy, who prefer to announce that Darwinism has been "exploded" rather than that it has been "modified."

Neither Darwin nor Wallace believed that they had pronounced the last word in the doctrine they advanced. Both realized that there were gaps that had been spanned by hypotheses not sufficiently bolstered by ascertained facts. Darwin in his letter to John Scott says: "You speak of difficulties on Natural Selection; there are indeed plenty." This is only one instance of an admission frequently and frankly made by both Darwin and Wallace.

DR. ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE

THE CHEVALIER DE LAMARCK

CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN



HUGO DE VRIES

AUGUST WEISMANN

How Theory Has Been Modified.

It is mainly in spanning these gaps with new hypotheses bolstered by newly discovered facts, that the researches of the past fifty years, and especially of the past twenty, have modified the Darwinian theory. These researches have brought about a considerable shifting of emphasis in this respect and that; but the essence of the matter remains as it was originally thought out by those two master minds.

Samuel Christian Schmucker, Professor of Biological Sciences in the West Chester State Normal School, in his recent book, "The Meaning of Evolution," published by the Macmillan Company, gives an interesting non-technical account of evolutionary theories since Darwin. Says Prof. Schmucker:

In considering the value of Charles Darwin's work and its permanent effect upon the thought of mankind, we must be careful to distinguish between two phases of his effort. It was his aim to prove two propositions: first, that there is such a process as evolution; second, that he had discovered the method by which evolution is accomplished. Before his time there was no general agreement as to the fact of evolution. People generally thought the idea absurd, as well as irreligious. All previous efforts on the part of advanced thinkers to persuade mankind of the truth of evolution had been nearly without effect. Among the early philosophers the whole idea was purely speculative. They made no attempt to prove it, and the conception was without influence upon the thinking of the ordinary man.

This remains true until the time of Lamarck. This French genius succeeded in persuading not a few people of the validity of the idea of evolution. He probably could have convinced many more had it not been for the hostility of Cavier. Accordingly, Charles Darwin's "Origin of Species" fell upon a world entirely hostile to the idea, when it thought of it at all.

Within fifty years of the publication of this wonderful book, probably the entire scientific world is agreed that evolution, in some form or other, is the undoubted solution of the mystery of creation. The materialist may think of it as a mechanical process relentlessly working itself out without design or purpose. The theist will accept it as the plan by which Eternal Power steadily works. The devout Christian or Jew will see in it God's method of creation. The idea of development has penetrated every science that has to do with animals or man. It is even beginning to influence such inorganic sciences as physics and chemistry. We now hear of the evolution of the elements, and the evolution of forces. The world has been persuaded that evolution is true, and this is primarily the result of the work of Charles Darwin. It is astonishing that so great a revolution should have come in so short a time.

The other phase of Darwin's work was his attempt to find the agent which is bringing about the actual transformation of animals and plants. It was his idea that natural selection was the efficient agent which constantly eliminated all unfit variations, leaving only the best to carry on the work of the world and to reproduce their own fit kind. Many biologists since his time have doubted whether unaided Natural Selection will account for the constant advance in organisms.

Before continuing Prof. Schmucker's review of the questioning that later scientists have done anent Natural Selection, it might be well to give the author's simple resume of the theory as Darwin conceived it.

There are four underlying conceptions, each simple in itself, which must be clearly perceived before one can understand Mr. Darwin's theory of "Natural Selection." The first of these is known under the name of heredity. It is a matter of common observation that every plant or animal produces offspring after its own kind. Under no conditions would we expect a duck to lay an egg from which could hatch anything but a duck. No Plymouth Rock chicken mated with another of her own kind will ever lay an egg that will produce a Rhode Island Red. We may believe that the dog has descended from some form of wolf, but it is not meant that at any particular time in the past any wolf mated with a wolf ever produced pups that were anything but wolves.

Why this should be so is one of the most profound problems of biology. Nothing but the fact that the process has gone on under our eyes for so long a time could blind us to its marvelous character. To open the egg of a chicken and examine it by the most refined methods known to science is to find in it absolutely nothing that could be by the widest stretch of the imagination considered anything like a chicken. The biologist who has examined such eggs before and knows them in all stages of the process may recognize in an egg which had been incubated for a short time something which his previous experience tells him will become a chicken. But it has not the faintest resemblance to a chicken until later in its development. * * *

The second great underlying idea is known by the name of variation. We have just been dwelling on the regularity with which parents produce offspring like themselves. We must now draw attention to the fact that, while it is true animals must absolutely belong to the same genus or species, even to the same variety, none the less no animal is exactly like his parents. Furthermore, in a group of animals produced at the same time from the same parent each one will have at least some small point in which he differs from every other one in the group. Two animals may look alike at first to the undiscerning eye, but a keen analysis of the measurements of the various parts of their bodies will show distinct differences. This is quite as true among lower animals. * * *

It is variation in animals of the same parentage and same surroundings which, in the mind of Mr. Darwin, made evolution possible. He always favored the idea that it was the continuous accumulation of these small variations that finally produced the profound changes which mark the new species. He admitted the possibility of the occasional appearance of those more distinct leaps in variation on which the present school of mutationists so strongly insists; but he believed them to be less influential in the general trend of evolution than the slower but much more frequent variations. * * *

The third basal idea is that of multiplication. Animals and plants multiply: they do not simply increase, they increase in a geometrical ratio. Any one who has worked out one of these geometrical ratios knows how wondrously they mount up.

Fourth Basal Idea.

Prof. Schmucker here instances the fact that if every robin egg hatched out and every young robin lived to a timely death, the world would soon be overrun with robins. He continues:

It is ludicrous to think of such numbers, especially when we realize the hundreds of thousands of kinds of animals there are in the world, each of which is also multiplying, and it becomes evident at once that only an infinitely small proportion of all these creatures can possibly survive. This, then, is multiplication.

Here comes into play the fourth basal idea in Mr. Darwin's explanation. This is the part of Selection. When man produces new varieties of animals he does it by picking out from his flocks or his herds such as conform most nearly to his idea of what is desirable. These he mates, and from their progeny he selects the ones that suit him best. Generation by generation he gets his domesticated animals to conform more nearly to the standard of his desires.

Natural selection works in exactly similar fashion. Of all the eggs that are produced by the animals at large in nature an overwhelming proportion never develop at all. They dry up, are eaten by their enemies, find no suitable place or time for development and decay, or are overtaken by some other calamity. Of the animals which emerge from the remainder an overwhelming majority come to an untimely end within the first few days of life. Each has countless enemies which prey upon him, and these have scarcely devoured him before they themselves become the prey of some stronger creature.

Until Mr. Darwin gave us his elemental idea it was taken for granted that it was a matter of pure accident which survived and which yielded in the struggle and cares of life. It was Darwin who showed us that in this tremendous struggle against those of his own kind in the search for the same food, against the elements, in securing a mate, any animals possessing a superiority, however slight, must have some little advantage in the battle. Certainly where so many must utterly fail only those could possibly succeed who were well fitted to the circumstances in which they must live.

We used to think animals were destroyed by the "accidents" of life and no one could foretell accidents. Mr. Darwin made clear that it was not a question of chance. That which might happen to any individual animal might be what we, not knowing the process, called accident, and yet there could be no possible doubt that those who succeeded were better fitted to battle with life than those who failed, and that their success was due primarily to their being thus advantaged. Consequently, if generation by generation the so-called accidents of life are constantly eliminating the unfit in overwhelming proportions, not only must the positively unfit disappear, but even the less fit. The more keen the struggle, the fewer could survive and the fitter they must be to survive at all. This is Selection. These, then, are Darwin's four great factors of evolution: Heredity, Variation, Multiplication, Selection.

To return now to Prof. Schmucker's account of the evolutionary theories since Darwin:

There is a school of biologists, headed by Weissman, who have come to be known as Neo-Darwinians. These men have insisted that natural selection, if properly understood and developed, is quite sufficient to account for the fact of evolution, including the appearance of variations. Weissman himself is a microscopist of more than common skill. He is thoroughly accomplished in the most modern methods of killing, fixing, staining, and mounting. This worker's acquaintance with the intimate structure of the cell is probably as great as that of any other man in the world. Weissman asserts that he has seen inside the nucleus all the machinery necessary to explain how the father hands over his qualities to his children. He insists, equally strongly, that this process is such that no father can hand to his child any qualities which he himself did not have at least in potentiality at his birth. Everything the individual acquires during his lifetime is his own possession, which he may use and develop to the utmost extent, but it dies with him. His children, born after he possesses it, can no more inherit it than those born before. Weissman expressed this in his famous statement that "There is no inheritance of acquired characters." The biological world has had no shock equal to this since Darwin's time, and there are few other questions to which scientists to-day return with such constant vigor.

If what Weissman says is true, that no variation or development which comes to an animal during his lifetime can be transferred into his own germ cells and handed on to his children, then it becomes evident that we must find some cause of variation that acts within the germ cells. This is the difficulty which Weissman meets. He says that there are small particles in the nucleus of each cell; that these particles which he calls determinants, decide the form and the course of development of that cell; that when that cell divides to produce another cell it gives to this other cell one-half of each determinant. As a result the second cell grows to be like the first. This tells us why offspring are like their parents. There is nothing in the theory thus far to show us why offspring are not exactly like their parents. In other words, there is no accounting, thus far in the theory, for variation. When the biologist studies carefully the history of an egg while it is being formed, he sees that at one stage in its development it throws away not one-half of each determinant, but one-half of the determinants. When an egg does this it deliberately casts aside one-half of the possibilities of its own development. This throwing away is quite as effective for all its descendants. Any ancestral quality now lost is lost from the line forever. In the formation of the sperm cell set free by the male a similar throwing away of one-half the characters has taken place. The egg cell and the sperm cell fuse together. There are as many possibilities now as there were in either parent, but not all the potentialities of both parents. Half the possibilities of each have been thrown away and hence cannot appear in the offspring. By this constant process we get, in every generation, new combinations of qualities. This is the main cause, says Weissman, for variation.

There is, however, another possible cause. Each cell has enough determinants in it for many individuals, and it seems to be more or less a matter of accident which qualities shall come out. It has been suggested that as an egg lies within the gland, a blood vessel may bring blood to it in such a way that a determinant, lying in a certain position in the egg, may get the richest supply of blood, and hence develop at the expense of the less nourished determinant. By these two methods variation comes into an animal's life, if Weissman and his school are to be believed.

This is a serious blow, if true, to many theories of evolution. The great mass of evolutionists still feel that somehow there is an influence by which the environment produces variation. How the influences of the surrounding world can get down into the body of the parent and affect the egg is unknown. This is freely confessed by every biologist. All are agreed that Weissman's work has made us cautious, and prevented our lightly accepting a belief in the influence of the environment. Yet it is felt by many that slowly and gradually, in the long run, the germ is affected in the same manner as is the body of the parent. In other words, even those who are not followers of Weissman, have accepted the idea that there is little inheritance of acquired characters. Yet they return to the belief that somehow, in some way as yet unexplainable, the main cause for variation in animals lies in the situation in which they live, and tends toward better adaptation to that situation. * * *

A second strong objection was brought against the theory of Natural Selection. Darwin declared that small variations in favorable directions are selected and become the starting point of new and better things. It is soon seen, however, that the effect of unaided Natural Selection would be but to mix new departures with the old forms, and soon swamp out any progressive tendency. Whenever a genius appeared, instead of finding a corresponding genius with which to pair, it mated with the average of its own species. Hence its offspring were nearer the average than it was, and their offspring still nearer. Thus whatever advantage the genius originally possessed gradually sank into the common level.

It was Moritz Wagner, a German naturalist, who first insisted that if favorable variations were to amount to anything these possessors must not only mate with others of their same kind but must also be prevented from mating with the old average group. Accordingly, the belief arose that, under ordinary circumstances, variations returned to the common level. Wherever a varying group became separated by any barrier from mating with the rest of its species, and had only its own kind to pair with, a new species sprang up. This barrier might be a desert, or an impassable mountain range, an arm of the sea, or anything else that the animal could not, or would not, cross. * * *

George John Romanes, a British naturalist, has added to Wagner's idea of isolation, the expanded conception that there may be isolations that are not geographical. For this phase Romanes has coined the term physiological isolation. Something in the structure or habit of the animals with the new variation prevents them from mating with the older type. * * * Anything which keeps some members of a species separate in their mating from the rest will result in the course of a longer or shorter time, says Romanes, in the formation of a new species. * * *

Both in America and France there is a constant tendency on the part of zoölogists to return to the Lamarckian idea that it is the use of an organ that develops it, its disuse that makes it fade away. This is undoubtedly true of the individual, and although Weissman insists that it is useless to the species as a whole, many zoölogists are slow to relinquish entirely the idea that somehow these favorable developments become reproduced in the offspring.

Prof. Cope, the American paleontologist, was a strong believer in the effect of activity, both upon the individual and upon his descendants. He believed that the insistent beating of the foot of an animal upon the hard soil of the drying Tertiary plateau had influenced the production of a firmer nail, which spread around the entire end of the toe and made the hoof of the ungulate. He believed that the use of the teeth in grinding produced a stronger and better molar tooth, and that the offspring shared in this advantage. Since Weissman's time, however, every Lamarckian feels it necessary to suggest some method by which the altered body of the parent can produce modifications in the germ plasms from which the young are to spring. One of our later biologists begins to talk of some effect comparable with wireless telegraphy or induced electricity. He believes that organs in the adult, not necessarily by direct action, but by action from a distance, may alter the germ. Of this there is no proof at present. Others have suggested that just as the ductless glands pour into the blood chemical substances which materially affect the growth and development of other portions of the body, so similar enzymes, or other chemical substances, may be sent into the blood, which subsequently bathes the germ cells of the coming generation and produces the change. But of this, again, there is no proof. We may believe that acquired characters are transmitted, but we certainly do not have a very clear idea as to how it can be done.

One of the strongest objections to Darwin's idea of evolution by Natural Selection of small and favorable variations is that the process is too inconceivably slow to account for the enormous progress which has been made. The answer has been that our observation ran back so short a time that we really have no clear idea of how rapid evolution may have been. Again, it has been answered that transitional geological periods, in which there is much change in the physical geography of a country, will produce more rapid evolution than we at present are experiencing.

Hugo De Vries, of Amsterdam, believes he has found the answer to this difficulty. Outside of his botanical garden an American species of Evening Primrose had run wild. In looking over a number of these plants he found, every here and there, certain peculiar members of the species. They differed noticeably to the practiced eye from the rest of the group. When they were planted and crossed with each other, and the resulting seeds were again planted, the peculiarity remained constant in all the members of the collection. Here then we have a true variation, not large in amount, but at the same time quite definite, and which from the first remains true. Here are the beginnings, says De Vries, of new species. They are true from the first; they can live among other members of the species and still come true; they do not need isolation, at least in Wagner's geographical sense. These forms De Vries calls mutations. It is his thought that a species may run along uniformly for a long time, when, from some cause which he has not determined as yet, instability comes into the species and it varies in quite a number of directions. Each of these variations may be the starting point of a new species. De Vries believes that he has at least half a dozen mutants of this new Evening Primrose.

This theory of Mutation has been eagerly seized upon by many botanists. The zoölogists have not accepted it quite so enthusiastically. If this is the chief method by which species transform, it seems strange that we do not find more mutations than we do. Perhaps we do not look carefully enough; perhaps we shall find them a little later. Just at present it seems premature to believe that all evolution is by mutation, although quite possibly some of it is. The main apparent advantage of mutation is that it hastens the time in which a new species may arise.

HE HAS GONE OVER THE EVIDENCE IN 20,000 DIVORCE CASES

THERE are few men in the United States who have heard or read all the evidence in more divorce cases than myself," said the old Chicago divorce court newspaper reporter, who is now raising chickens on Long Island.

"For seven years, prior to 1910, I covered the default divorce calendars for one of the big morning newspapers of the Windy City, and I estimate that I heard testimony given on the witness stand in 9,800 cases. In addition, I estimate that I read the evidence given in 10,500 other cases.

"When I lived in Chicago, and I presume the system is the same now, Saturday was known in the courts as default divorce day. This meant that the majority of default cases were heard on Saturday, between 9:30 and 1 o'clock, default cases being those in which the defendant does not appear by attorney or otherwise, and therefore defaults in offering a defense. In these cases the complainant simply has to present, to the satisfaction of the Judge, the necessary legal proof required by Illinois statute in order to get a decree.

"The paper on which I was employed made a specialty of covering Saturday defaults, running a couple of divorce columns as a regular feature of the Sunday edition.

"On some lively Saturdays, when the calendars were heavy, I have seen six Judges sitting in the Cook County Court House, to hear nothing but default divorces. On one occasion, so great was the pressure on the divorce mills, I saw one Judge holding court in the Judge's chamber back of and opening from the regular courtroom, while another sat in the courtroom itself.

"It was impossible for one man under such circumstances to cover all the cases, or even a majority of them. I used to travel during Saturday from courtroom to courtroom looking for the good cases—those which contained features for a newspaper story.

"The cases were heard very fast by most Judges. I estimate that I used to listen to the testimony in at least eight cases an hour for three and a half hours each Saturday, which meant twenty-eight a week for fifty weeks annually for seven years. In Winter the mills were often speeded up, some courts would sit far into the afternoon, and my average was double twenty-eight. In July and August the divorce factory ran slowly. But twenty-eight weekly is a fair all-the-year-around average.

"Not all defaults were heard on Saturday, a few being heard during the week. The transcript of evidence given in such cases was usually obtainable on Saturday, as well as the transcripts of some of the cases heard on preceding Saturdays which it had been impossible for me to cover. I would always read a good many of these transcripts. I estimate that I averaged thirty transcripts each Saturday for fifty Saturdays annually for seven years.

"Looking back at it, the speed with which the courts worked is the main feature which stands out in memory. I have seen a Judge get through with as many as fifteen cases in one hour, an average of four minutes to a case. Two things made such a pace possible—the fact that there was no defense to hinder quick going, and that the Judge did [illegible] on the part of the fast Judges to examine the witnesses themselves, instead of allowing the lawyers to do so.

"Three witnesses were necessary under the statute in most cases, these being the complainant and two other witnesses to corroborate his or her statements. The Judges knew exactly the fewest number of questions to ask to bring out the bare facts necessary to prove an undefended case under the statute, and they would shoot these queries at the witnesses in rapid-fire style.

"The fastest single divorce which I ever saw tried was a desertion case before Judge Edward F. Dunne, now Governor of Illinois.

"When Judge Dunne established what I believe to be a speed record it was at a time when there had been some newspaper talk about fast divorces. I imagine he thought he'd show just what time could be made, and when this desertion case was called his chance came. The complainant and corroborating witnesses were intelligent, fast-witted Americans, who answered readily and with whom it was feasible to make a record. Judge Dunne asked the questions himself just as quickly as he could shoot them at the witness chair. I took the time of the trial. It was two minutes and a quarter.

"There were three chief characteristics about the applicants for divorce, as I look back on them en masse. The great majority were women, the great majority of the laboring class and the great majority were of European birth. On this latter point I recall that the list of cases on the default divorce calendar had a preponderance of names like Blaschte, Vavrink, Loesby, Gebo, Braulik, Barkmas, Pleczenas, Hamlicka, and Gutauckas.

"Then, as to the causes for all these matrimonial wrecks. Desertion was far in the lead as a ground for asking a decree. Next came cruelty. These two grounds were responsible for 65 per cent. of the cases I heard. Drunkenness was third and infidelity was fourth numerically in the tabulation of causes. These four causes represented 90 per cent. of the cases heard or read by me. There are four other grounds for divorce in Illinois, but they did not play much part in the output of the mills."

"RAILROADS YOUR ONE WEAK SPOT"—SIR GEORGE PAISH

Eminent British Financial Authority Finds American Conditions Sound, But Says European Confidence in Our Railroads Has Been Hard Hit—Foresees Trouble Unless Higher Rates Are Allowed.

SIR GEORGE PAISH of London, editor of The Statist, and one of the foremost British financial authorities, declared to a TIMES reporter last week that he fully agrees with the maxim credited to the late J. P. Morgan:

"The man who is a bear on the future of the United States is going broke."

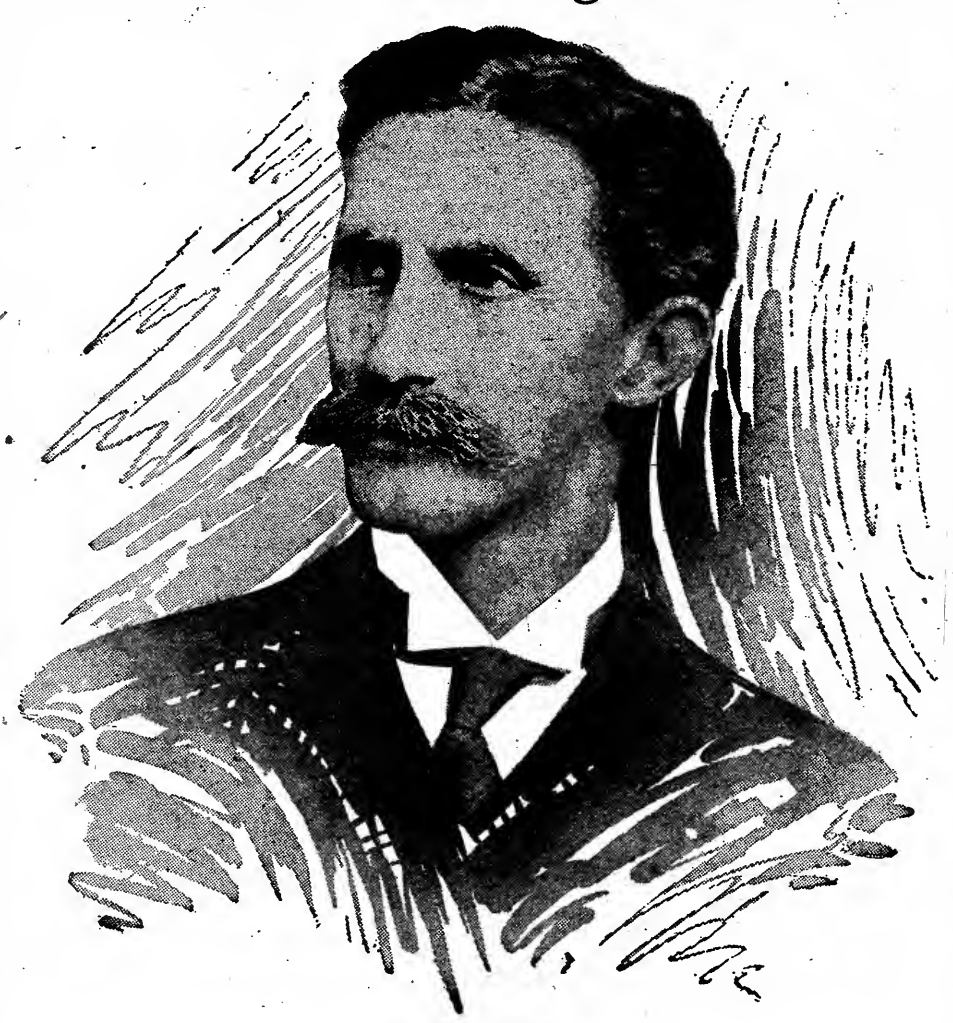
The distinguished Briton added that the present outlook is excellent.

Then he introduced a "But." "But the weak spot," he said, "is the situation with reference to the railroads."

And when he mentions railroads Sir George is surely qualified to speak. He won his knighthood in recognition of his work on the revision of the accounting and statistical systems of the British railroads, and has written largely on the railroads both of Great Britain and the United States.

This is his fourth visit to America, and he is now here for a tour of several weeks to study financial conditions. He has conferred with many of New York's leading financiers, and will have conferences with financiers in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington. At the national capital he is to see members of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Apart from the railroad situation," continued Sir George to the interviewer, "conditions here seem to be unusually sound. As to the railroads, they did not realize that the rate of interest on capital had risen to a higher level which was likely to be maintained at that higher level, and their desire to raise capital from the investor on the lowest possible terms induced them to put out a relatively large amount of short-term notes, which they expected to refund on favorable terms.



Sir George Paish.

Confidence Needed.

"These notes are now maturing in a period when the rate of interest is still higher than it was when they were issued and it is evident that some of them must be again renewed on terms less favorable than before.

"Indeed the financial situation of American railroads is such that it is of the greatest importance to themselves and the community that a greater measure of confidence in their stability should be imparted to investors to enable the roads to refund their notes and to provide the capital which they will need to take care of the traffic of the country in the next few years.

"Apart from the general economic conditions making for higher rates of interest and increasing the difficulties of raising cheap capital for the railroads has been the fact that railroad expenses are rising more rapidly than the gross earnings, and that net income to meet increased interest charges has been declining. Such a condition, of course, does not help the sale of bonds or stocks.

"Whether or not the railroads will be able to fund their notes and issue new capital for urgent needs will in a large measure depend on the Interstate Commerce Commission. If the commission in the coming rate case, in which the taking of evidence will begin at the end of this month, decides that the railroads are not entitled to higher freight rates, notwithstanding the great increase in operating expenses in consequence of the rise in rate of wages, then the railroads will experience much greater difficulty in securing new capital than will be the case if the commission permits the railroads to raise their rates to such an extent as to provide in part, at any rate, for the higher wage scale.

"Of course, the commission will have before it a very much larger volume of evidence than is at the command of any individual, and its decision will be in accordance with the evidence. I am, however, hopeful that the evidence produced will satisfy the commission that the railroads are entitled to increased freight rates and that in this manner a defect in the situation will be removed through the ability of the railroads to refund their notes and to raise the capital they require."

"What will happen if the commission decides against the roads?" asked THE TIMES man.

"In that instance I foresee very grave difficulties," said Sir George. "The railroads will be in serious stress to get the capital actually needed to carry on the transportation business of the country."

"Would an adverse decision by the commission mean a boycott against American roads by English and other European investors?" asked the reporter.

"I would not like to answer that question in that form," was the reply. "But I will say that English and European investors are holding back to observe the course of events in the railroad situation here. Confidence of foreign investors in American railroads has been very hard hit by the fact that the commission has not yet given power to raise freight rates, and by developments regarding the Frisco, the New Haven, the Rock Island, the Illinois Central, and other roads.

"The faith of the English investor has been severely shaken by the happenings of the last few months. The same is true of the French investor and of other investors on the Continent. It may be said that it is problematical whether these investors will put any more money in American railroads should it be decided that freight rates must remain where they are. If the commission gives permission to raise rates, that fact will materially aid the railroad companies to refund their notes or renew at a lower rate of interest.

All Right Elsewhere.

"As I have said, the American condition is otherwise sound. I think that the banking trouble of 1907 caused you to put your business in order and it has caused you to go slow for six years. You will move forward more solidly for that experience.

"There has been and is no inflation. Everyone for some time past appears to have been pursuing a cautious policy and a setback in world prosperity and world trade would not have a serious effect upon American prosperity.

"The United States has not had the high expansion in recent years which some other parts of the world have received. Argentina, Brazil, Canada and other lands have had intense expansion. America has not. It has not received the amount of capital other countries have, and therefore would not feel in the same way the lack of investments from abroad.

"Indeed in that part of the country in which the cost of living has risen faster than the rate of wages, a moderate setback attended by a lowering of the cost of commodities and a reducing of the cost of living generally, would bring in the long run increased prosperity rather than diminished prosperity. In other words a moderate reaction in trade would probably, because of internal conditions, have a greater influence on the prosperity of the West and South of the United States than on the East. The East has, in a measure, suffered from the rise of the cost of living, whereas the farming communities of the West and South have derived very great advantage from the high prices of food, cotton and other natural products.

"It is evident, however, that a reaction in international trade, due in part to the recent heavy war outlays in Europe and to the hoarding of money on the Continent and to the difficulties experienced in raising capital for many important works now under construction, will not be a very serious one, or of long duration.

"Already gold is tending to accumulate in continental money markets. Considerable sums have returned this year from South America to Europe. If the hoarding of money in France comes to an end next year in consequence of the issue of the various government loans awaiting a favorable money market to be placed, the stock of gold in the Bank of France will very largely increase. And it has to be borne in mind that the world will be producing nearly $500,000,000 of gold per annum at a time when the demand for gold will be relatively small. These conditions will bring about an immense accumulation of gold in all the international markets.

"In former times a great stock of gold in the banks has always brought a renewed expansion in international trade, and there is no reason for assuming that the accumulation of gold in the international markets, which is likely to occur next year and the year after, will not produce the same effect as former accumulations.

"In brief, I anticipate that the United States will not suffer seriously from the reaction in international trade, which now seems inevitable and will, after a short interval, resume the wonderful progress that was so severely checked by the banking troubles of 1907. I have found general optimism, over the long-range outlook, among financial men with whom I have talked, although here and there is a man who is pessimistic because affairs are not more lively at present. You may be sure that nothing can very seriously affect the prosperity of your country."

THE TIMES man asked Sir George whether he thought that the Mexican situation was likely to have much effect on financial conditions.

"I do not think," was the reply, "whatever may be the developments in Mexico, that financial trouble on this side will result. Indeed, whenever a country engages in a controversy with a neighboring State, the feeling of patriotism strengthens confidence rather than diminishes it. Every one is desirous of making some contribution to the success of his nation, whether it be by loans of money or by personal service.

"As to the merits of the Mexican controversy, I do not care to express any decided opinion. I find here a great many men who think that the United States would have acted wisely in recognizing Gen. Huerta, while others are equally strong in approving the policy of President Wilson. But all of them express their intention of loyally supporting any action that the President may take in the interests of the American people."

No Labor Trouble in Sight.

The interviewer asked Sir George how he views the labor situation in the United States.

"I don't see any serious trouble in sight," he said. "Your very prosperity has produced much of the labor unrest of which we hear. When times are good, when work is plentiful, when there are few idle men, when wages are high, labor is more exacting than when times are bad, when labor is plentiful and when work is scarce. If there is a moderate reaction in trade the labor troubles will disappear.

"Some labor difficulties are incidental to all progress. You have progressed so much that you are bound to have labor troubles as a consequence. But I do not perceive anything ahead in this regard which need cause grave concern.

"In England we have a good deal of economic unrest. It is due to the belief of the very poorly paid workers that they are not getting enough of the national wealth. An attempt is being made to meet the conditions by arranging a plan by which wages will be raised. The land movement will also have its effect in aiding to solve the economic problem."

Besides the American cities which he is to visit, Sir George intends to go to Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg. He hopes to be back in London by Christmas.

He has been editor of The Statist since 1900. He was born in 1867. He is a Fellow of the Council of the Royal Statistical Society, Governor of the London School of Economics, and served as a member of the Departmental Committee of the Board of Trade on Railway Accounts and Statistics. Publications by him include "The British Railway Position," "Railways of Great Britain," "Railroads of the United States," "Capital Investments in Other Lands," and "Savings and Social Welfare."

PERIL OF THE PETTICOAT

"THE swish of a petticoat," said the American Consul, "is enough to create a woman-sized panic these days.

"I don't blame them—I mean the officials," said the indignant visitor, who had just been refused admittance to Holyrood Palace. "But what have I got to do with it? I am neither a suffragette nor a suffragette sympathizer; neither am I addicted to the habitual wearing of petticoats."

"Of course not," said the American Consul, "but the lady who accompanies you, while she looks a perfectly mild and amiable person, might be a she-anarchist masquerading as the soft-smiling Mona Lisa."

While the visitor admitted that his wife was not absolutely as sweet-mooded as she looked, his indignation remained unabated. It seemed an outrage that one should cross the raging ocean and be denied admittance to a centre of historic interest like Holyrood Palace.

"I suppose it will be the same in London!" he snorted. "I won't be admitted to the Tower, or to the Museum, all because my wife carries a handbag which, I assure you, contains nothing but half the ruins of Scotland."

"You can always get a divorce," chuckled the American Consul. "But, seriously, you should have no trouble in England. The suffragette ladies there have sobered up a little. At no time were they as deadly as here in Scotland. Here we have had to close up everything. Beautiful and historic residences that it was the transatlantic visitor's delight to see have been closed to the public. They have burned railway stations and so forth. These can be replaced, but Holyrood, for example, can never be replaced."

"But," protested the visitor, "look at my wife. Her face radiates perfect goodwill to men—"

"I admit it," said the American Consul gallantly. "Peace and goodwill."

"Yet I drive to Holyrood. I knock at the great door. A man opens it, takes one look at my wife, notices that she wears skirts and carries a handbag, draws his face up as if it had been attacked by an astringent lemon, shakes his head, and says: 'Sorry, Sir, but Holyrood is closed to all visitors.' What am I to do?"

"I'll tell you a story," interrupted the American Consul, with a chuckle. "The other day Supreme Court Justice —— of New Hampshire came here with his daughter Miss E——, let us call her, who went with her judicial papa to visit Edinburgh Castle. Miss E—— stood up on the parapet to look down upon the city. A small bottle containing a dark brown syrup fell from her hand and was shattered on the parapet. There were a number of visitors around, also dozens of garrison soldiers. You have read 'David Harum,' I take it?"

"You mean—everybody ducked?"

"Everybody! There was no explosion. The dark brown syrup was—I shall not say chemically analyzed—but it was carefully examined. It was mucilage."

"Therefore, since the mucilage incident, the authorities are suspicious of American ladies, especially daughters of Supreme Court Justices—?"

"Not at all," said the American Consul. "In fact, it seems to me that being an American—whether suffragette or otherwise—is a guarantee that the lady can be trusted to do nothing more than, possibly, attempt to remove the entire historic ruin as a souvenir."

"Then—Holyrood?" said the visitor, eagerly.

"Let us see," said the American Consul, smilingly taking up his pen and drawing toward him a sheet of official notepaper.

He scribbled for a moment, then handed the visitor a bit of writing.

"Take that to his Majesty's Office of Works in Parliament Square," said he.

This was written on the paper under the formal letterhead of the United States Consulate:

"In accepting a permit to visit the Historic Apartments of Holyrood Palace, I hereby take responsibility for the good behaviour of the entire Party, and agree to make good any damage done by any member of the party.

——— ———,

"American Consul."

Armed with this, the visitor and his Perilous Lady drove to the Home Office. The official in charge there read it carefully, as carefully surveyed the lady of the party, let his eyes slowly fall upon her handbag, studied the peace and goodwill to all men that radiated from her brow, then wrote a letter.

He inclosed it in an envelope, which bore the words "On His Majesty's Service," sealed it tight and addressed it to "Sergeant Warder Law, Holyrood Palace."

At Holyrood the great studded door was opened about a foot, the letter taken and read, then the portal flung open just long enough for the visitor and his Perilous Lady to enter.

At the main portal other visitors—noble Britons—were demanding admission by right of all birth and tradition. But, alas! in vain.

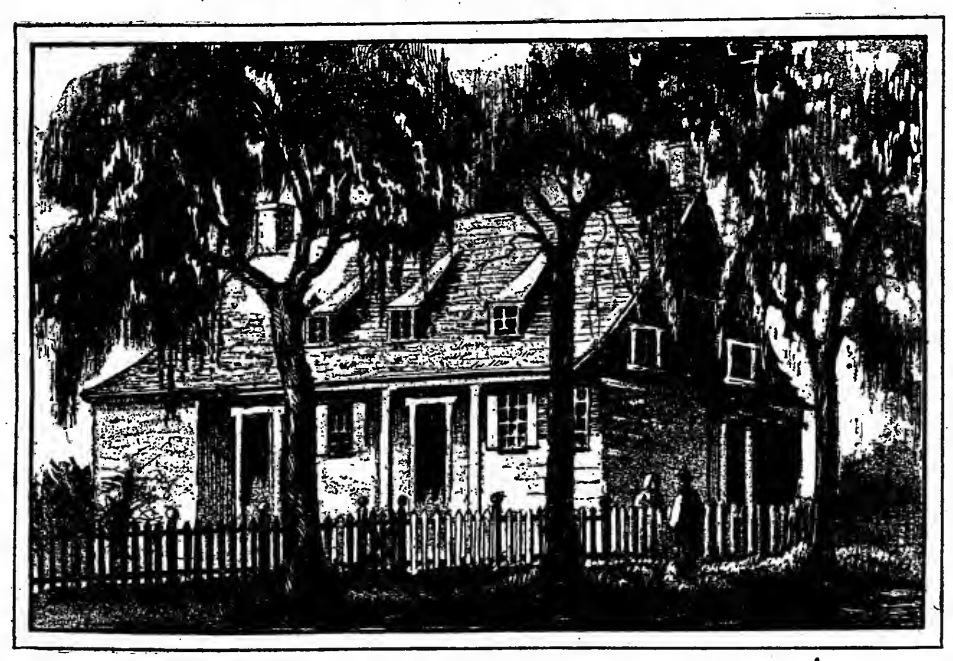
The peril of the petticoat was in the air, and the American female had proved herself at least sane, if not wholly safe.

OLD DYCKMAN FARMHOUSE TO BE PRESENTED TO CITY

Quaint Homestead, Last of Its Kind on Manhattan Island, Will Be Transferred to Isham Park and Turned Into a Museum.

THE last remaining farmhouse on Manhattan Island will be formally presented to the city within a few days. Commissioner Stover, who will accept the gift on behalf of the Park Department, has promised to provide a permanent site for the ancient house in Isham Park, overlooking the Hudson River, in the upper part of Manhattan Island.

The house is the old Dyckman residence, which has stood for over a century on a portion of the extensive Dyckman farm, now cut up into building lots and already showing the effect of the northward trend of population by the rows of apartment houses which are rapidly wiping out all trace of the broad Dyckman meadows. The curious old farmhouse presents an odd contrast to-day to these evidences of modern development as one catches a glimpse of it at the corner of 207th Street from the trolley cars running up Broadway. Had Broadway gone a few feet more to the west or 207th Street a bit further to the north the career of this interesting landmark which links New York with one of its earliest Dutch families would have been cut off suddenly, and there would have been no tale to tell of its presentation to the city and the preparations being made by the Daughters of the Revolution to turn the old place into a museum.



The Old Dyckman House, 207th Street and Broadway.

The house was built in 1784, and its appearance has undergone practically no change. It was the third Dyckman homestead, or rather farmhouse, for the old Dyckman family prided themselves on their skill as practical farmers and never assumed manorial magnificence, even in name, although they owned more acres than scores of old city families which have been credited with great land possessions.

Jan Dyckman was the ancestor of the Manhattan Island family of that name. History states that he joined his Dutch neighbors in the little settlement around the fort in 1666, when the town had just come under English rule. Perhaps that is one reason which induced Jan to get as far away as he could from the English rulers and yet remain on the island, for less than ten years later he was the owner of several hundred acres at the northern extremity, bordering Spuyten Duyvil.

There, for over two hundred years the Dyckmans lived, exemplifying to the minutest detail the traditional characteristics of the Dutch in frugality, industry, simple yet generous hospitality, and the art of minding their own business. When necessity demanded they served the city as Aldermen or constables, and they were always active in furthering the best interests of the early Harlem village.

Later members of the family added to the broad acres acquired by the original arrival, and at one time nearly the entire tract of fertile meadow land north of Fort George hill, as far as Spuyten Duyvil, was owned by the Dyckmans.

Holding their possessions intact for a longer period than their agricultural neighbors in the Bloomingdale section below them, the Dyckmans stuck to the life of the farm until the increasing population showed that flats were better for the property than cabbages or cherries, both famous Dyckman productions. Over twenty years ago the first large portion of the historic Dyckman tract was sold at auction, making one of the biggest real estate auctions in the history of Manhattan property. Other portions were sold later, so that now the present members of the family own but small slices of the ancestral farm.

The first Dyckman farmhouse stood in the upper part of the tract near Spuyten Duyvil Creek. It was a small house, later replaced by a larger building bordering on the Harlem a little to the east of the present Dyckman house at Broadway and 207th Street. It was burned during the Revolution by the British, probably in retaliation for the loyalty of the Dyckmans to the American cause.

The family lost no time in restoring their damaged property. One year after the evacuation of the city by the British the present home was finished. It was built by Jacobus Dyckman, the eldest of the nine children of William Dyckman. The latter died in the house in 1787.

Jacobus was at that time the chief owner of the large estate. He served the city as Alderman in 1822, and died in 1832. One of his sons, Dr. Jacob Dyckman, who died early in life, was Health Commissioner of New York City. On the death of Jacobus the estate went to his sons, Isaac and Michael. In 1854, on the death of his brother, Isaac became the sole owner. He died in 1868. He erected a more modern home near Spuyten Duyvil many years before his death, but this has disappeared.

The family burying ground stood until a few years ago within sight of the old Dyckman house. With its few neglected tombstones it was a curious sight from Subway trains. The cutting through of new streets eliminated the last vestige of the private cemetery, in which were buried members of the Dyckman, Nagel, Vermilyea, Davis, Odell, Post, and other families long associated with the region.

The present Dyckman house is now owned by Mr. and Mrs. John H. Judge. They bought it several years ago from the purchaser of the old place at one of the Dyckman auctions. It fell into good hands, for Mr. Judge has guarded the old place from damage as jealously as if it were the home of his ancestors. The interior has not been altered, and the remains of a huge well which supplied the kitchen with water in the old days may still be seen. The well, as Mr. Judge pointed out, will have to be left behind in the removal.

When the picturesque tract of land now known as Isham Park was presented to the city over a year ago by Mrs. Flora Isham Taylor and Miss Flora E. Isham, several New York antiquarians who have endeavored to preserve as many of the old things of the city as possible suggested that Isham Park, the entrance to which is but two blocks from the Dyckman farmhouse, would be an admirable place for the permanent site of the ancient home. It was recognized that with the rapid rise of apartment houses in the Dyckman tract the homestead would soon be ousted from its elevated position overlooking Broadway.

When Mr. and Mrs. Judge offered to give the house, free of cost, to the city, all difficulties were removed. Mr. Judge, however, has stipulated that the building must be placed on a satisfactory site in Isham Park. Park Commissioner Stover has promised this, but lack of appropriations has delayed the formal gift. When the Park Department provides and prepares the site, it was learned yesterday, the house will be moved at once and the custody of it will be handed over to the Daughters of the Revolution of the State of New York, of which Mrs. Everett Menzies Raynor of this city is Regent.

Mrs. Raynor said yesterday that the State organization was ready to appropriate $3,000 to pay for the expenses of the removal and fitting up of the old farmhouse, but nothing can be done until Commissioner Stover prepares the site. That is the only cause of delay, as estimates have been obtained on the cost of moving the house and setting it properly in its new location.

When the old house, which is a splendid example of early Dutch architecture, formally comes into the possession of the city, it will make the fourth historic building owned by the city and used as a Revolutionary or Colonial museum. The three others are the Van Cortlandt house in Van Cortlandt Park, Bronx Borough; the Jumel or, more properly, the Morris mansion, overlooking the Harlem River on the heights above 160th Street, and the fine Rufus King home in Jamaica, the grounds of which are also park property. The Morris house is especially interesting as having been occupied by Gen. Washington.

The Dyckman house is a typical farmhouse and its type is rapidly disappearing. A few good examples still remain in some parts of Westchester County and in portions of New Jersey, notably in Bergen County.

WILL FREE PORT SOLVE NEW YORK'S SHIPPING PROBLEM?

Former Congressman William H. Douglas Writes of Investigations Made by Chamber of Commerce of What Has Been Done in Hamburg and Elsewhere Along This Line.

The writer of this article, the Hon. William Harris Douglas, has been a careful student of commercial problems relating to our exporting and shipping business for many years. He is the head of the firm of Arkell & Douglas, Inc., which company exports yearly many millions of manufactured goods, and has branch houses in South America, South Africa, Australasia, India, and the Philippines. Mr. Douglas has served our city four years in Congress, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of New York State, and Councilor of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, member of the New York Produce Exchange, Maritime Exchange, Merchants' Association, and other commercial organizations.

By William H. Douglas.

SHALL our city, the metropolis of the Western Hemisphere, the greatest seaport of the United States, and we might almost justly say of the world, embark in a new enterprise for its welfare, having in view the enlargement of its commercial field of activity and the giving of new life to its shipping and manufacturing interests, by creating a free zone or port of entry for the world's products?

Some say we should. Others seem to think that owing to the quicker transit facilities between all parts of the world—which no longer makes it so necessary or important to hold large stocks at any central point to reach adjacent territory, further, by reason of the bonded warehouse system which enables goods to be stored without payment of duty until such time as the importer or shipper desires to take them out of bond, and also gives him the privilege of reexporting without payment of duty; and again the adoption by our own and other Governments of the drawback plan under which the raw product can be imported from all parts of the world to be used in manufacturing, and on which a rebate is allowed up to 98½ to 99 per cent. of the duty paid if goods are re-exported, and other up-to-date methods of handling business—no longer is the free zone idea as attractive or even essential as it was in the past to the expansion and upbuilding of a great shipping port.

To determine this important question careful consideration is now being given to it by our public officials, prominent merchants, and citizens generally, and the subject is being freely discussed as well by the press. The Merchants' Association has placed the consideration of this great question in the hands of its foreign trade committee, which held several meetings last Spring and early Summer, and which is proposing to resume its sittings shortly. The association has also taken the matter up in a practical way by having up-to-date statistics collected in Europe as to the efficiency and aid to commerce resulting from such free ports as have been established there for many years, and the intention is to hold public hearings on the subject, to the end that all those who might be interested can fully express their views. These sittings will enable the shipping interest, manufacturing, and other industries to state definitely to what extent they might be benefited.

U. S. Must Do as People Wish.

To all those who watch commercial affairs abroad it is clear that a restless activity prevails to a greater extant among all nations to advance national prosperity than at any time in the history of the world.

This restlessness is attributed, and due in part at least, to the higher cost of living, the demand of the poorer classes that they shall justly enjoy a fairer quota of the advantages and enjoyments of life for themselves and their families, which forces expansion to keep pace with these demands, and the United States, following the example of other Governments, must respond to the wishes of the people, and no longer complacently look on while exporters and importers and manufacturers and dealers strive unaided for world supremacy, but must take an active part in the struggle of its citizens and foster and encourage their efforts.

Paternalism by government for the people now equals the solicitude of the father for his family.

New York State has shown its enterprise and wisdom by undertaking the enlargement of the Erie Canal, which work, when completed, will enable s to tap the great lakes and 1,000-ton barge vessels may reach our harbor from the north without breaking bulk. This route will also offer our neighbor Canada even better facilities than her own for the exportation of her grain and other products. Let us hope our city will now do its share and develop its harbor facilities with a free port or otherwise as may be best, and if we are willing to spend the necessary money and her business men will co-operate we are bound to grow with stupendous strides as a seaport, and within twenty years nothing can prevent us from becoming the greatest emporium for trade the world has ever looked upon.

Our city, however, should take action quickly, or other of our enterprising countrymen will outstrip us and bring to their cities the benefits we should enjoy. It is true we are building some docks and arranging for barge canal terminals, but unfortunately our methods, or rather want of methods, in the improvement of our harbor facilities along twentieth century lines are of the haphazard piece-meal kind, which not alone is wasteful and extravagant, but which is destroying to some extent our water front, and, what is worse, placing an improvement of docks in one section, of warehouses in another, of terminal facilities in still another, of piers for city use in any available place, and thus creating a division of interest, causing expensive intercommunication, forcing rehandling and additional loading and unloading of merchandise before final distribution is reached. All this means added cost to the article when finally sold to the consumer here or when sent abroad. Private and public enterprises clash and confusion rules. This may be due in part to our political system with no defined policy in our Dock Department. One Commissioner follows another with naturally different views and ideas, and consequently changed recommendations are made. This can readily be bettered by taking the Dock Department out of politics and by creating a combined State and city commission to study these matters carefully, and thus reach a comprehensive policy of harbor improvements covering several years ahead.

Make Haste Slowly.

Within the last few months the grave necessity for some action has been shown by Commissioner Tomkins retiring from office, and presumably his well-thought-out views on harbor matters will now be permanently laid aside. The term of office of the present equally well posted and efficient Commissioner, Mr. Smith, expires Jan. 1, and he can hardly therefore do more than place his ideas on paper before his successor is named, unless he fortunately succeeds himself. The public will further note that Commissioner Smith is now advocating the building of a large dry dock at the expense of the city—nominal cost, two and a half to three millions of dollars, and likely cost at least four millions or more. The Mayor, it is said, indorses the idea. Without entering at length into the wisdom of this expense, it may be well to say haste should not be made, and we should first definitely decide whether the city will secure a proper interest return on the investment, and also if actual necessity exists. Further, whether private enterprise is not best for such an undertaking and where the dock had best be placed if built for ultimate general benefit.

The exploitation of the free port question at this time, even if not carried out, will do great good and show the importance of handling improvements more accurately for the future. If we have a free port it stands to reason all additions to our harbor facilities should be made with the clear intent of concentration, and the bringing together, as far as possible, adjacent to free port territory, of our new docks, dry dock if built, storage and all other facilities for the immense commerce, domestic and foreign, wa must handle in the future.

The popular impression of a free zone seems somewhat crude and many consider all our city is called upon to do is to provide the requisite space, dig channels and basins for shipping, adopt proper regulations for management, and the enterprise will then largely take care of itself, grow and prosper, and that this can be done at reasonable cost.

Such ideas, however, are entirely erroneous, and the creating of a free port on up-to-date principles and on a scale adequate for our present requirements with ample provisions as well for future necessities is a very difficult proposition, will necessitate the most careful working out, and the cost probably at the lowest calculation will reach several hundred millions of dollars, and it will probably require seven to ten years to do the work.

It is hardly to be expected that our national Government will furnish funds. In fact New York will probably have to face the rivalry of other ports, and might have difficulty in securing authority to proceed. The State and city will have to bear the burden of the expense, the undertaking being too large for private exploitation.

The object of a free zone is to provide space where shipping entering our port can discharge in part or whole, paying no duty on the cargo. Vessels in ballast to have free entry and be allowed to take cargo for other ports. Port regulations must be of the simplest character and all charges kept on the lowest basis, so that the cost to shipping would be considerably under charges if cargo was discharged at regular piers, and again the expense must be considerably less than vessels would be obliged to pay if they unloaded at our adjacent ports or ports of other countries nearest our shores. The chief object should be to attract shipping. Goods landed could remain in the zone indefinitely, exempt from duty. Privilege would be given to manufacture and goods turned out could be exported without hindrance. Should goods, however, landed or manufactured in the zone be sent into United States territory duty would then be paid. Every effort should be made to induce manufacturing plants to locate in the zone, and certain classes of industries would undoubtedly find it to their decided advantage to do so, especially if the goods manufactured were mostly exported, as the saving would be considerable through securing the raw material and bulky articles used in manufacturing at tidewater, avoiding inland carriage. Ground would have to be sold or rented for this purpose at reasonable cost, low rate of taxes provided, or absolute exemption from taxation. Warehouses, fireproof, (so insurance charges would be low,) of great size, with ample floor space, would have to be built to provide storage and sorting space, and they must be adjacent to or immediately connecting with the wharves, enabling vessels to discharge practically into the warehouse, thus saving expense, and storage charges should be fixed extremely low. A free port being established at the door of our great city, it is figured that skilled and unskilled labor could be obtained without difficulty on a favorable basis.

William H. Douglas.

The situation chosen for the free port is of the greatest importance, as, besides water advantages, it must be convenient to the railroad systems entering our city, so as to facilitate the delivery of merchandise into and from the zone to all inland points at lowest cost.

The zone would be used largely beyond question as the port of entry for goods which would enter into the city and adjacent territory for immediate consumption. The newest and most up-to-date machinery must be provided for quick and safe discharge or loading of cargo at lowest possible cost, as the saving of time is of the utmost importance to the owners of vessels who seek their fortunes by operating the ocean liner or tramp steamer on the high seas. Ample space for lighters is required so that ships wishing to discharge without going to the wharf to save cost may secure the necessary barges to promptly meet their requirements. Proper machinery and facilities must be furnished to make immediate and quick repairs to shipping, and at the lowest charge. In fact every known appliance in the way of cranes, engines and other machinery must be available for immediate use.

Free Zone Statistics.

The Hamburg statistics do not show, it is well to say, a rapid growth of manufacturing enterprises, but in our own case the result may be different. Industries of all kinds often seem to be brought to life without special regard apparently at the time of their starting to the most advantageous place in which to begin their existence. They often have origin in a small way in some town or village where labor is cheap, taxes low and material used available, and from such beginnings immense plants and industries result. They become identified with the locality, and later on, even if it is found removal might be for some reasons advantageous, it is extremely difficult to bring about the change, buildings being erected, the laborers having secured their homes near by, and local pride and other considerations standing in the way.

A careful search for information and details of the experience of other cities which have adopted the free-zone idea to some extent, so we may be guided aright, naturally has been eagerly sought for, but it is surprising what a small amount of reliable information is obtainable. The most important free zones existing at present are Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp, Stettin, Copenhagen, Genoa, Trieste, Hong Kong, La Plata, and a few minor places. It has also been suggested to create a free port in Montreal and at various places in France, Russia, and Spain, but nothing of importance has resulted.

Hamburg is the most remarkable of all free ports, and therefore we can discard consideration of the others and give some report of what that city has accomplished, based on information furnished in consular reports, and especially the book published on the port of Hamburg by Edwin J. Clapp. We must carefully bear in mind, however, that the growth of the free port at Hamburg has been slow and gradual, covering a period of over two hundred years, and that consequently it is still an open question whether, had said city spent the same amount of money in improving her port and facilitating her commerce, merely as a port of entry, she might not have gained almost as much as she has accomplished by the dual system.

Hamburg lies eighty-five miles up the Elbe, and one of her great problems and expenses was the expensive dredging necessary, which would be saved to our city, excepting the creating of the proper channels and basins.

Hamburg and Bremen entered the German Empire in 1871, but stipulated their right to retain their free ports outside of the Customs Union.

Hamburg is centrally located, has Germany at her doors, and the thickly populated adjacent countries, Holland, Russia, Denmark, Belgium, France, &c. The industries of Germany, which has grown to be a great exporting nation, are also brought within her sphere of influence by favorable Government railway tariffs.

The Elbe has been dredged from 6 to 6½ feet in 1840 to 1850 to from 26 to 27 feet depth at low water and 32 to 33 feet at high water.

The Hamburg-American Line, the great shipping industry of that city, started its career in 1847 and is now one of the leading carriers of passengers and freight in the world.

The city spent from 1850 to 1900 over eighteen millions of dollars in dredging the channel from the sea. There was no charge for dues on account of dredging expenses until 1902 to 1905. The city now collects a small tonnage tax.

All hoists are electrically worked. Her system of operation is with open basins cut into the land, leaving solid piers projecting and a line of mooring posts in the middle, to which ships can tie and discharge into lighters.

Germany has paid $10,000,000 toward the harbor improvements, and Hamburg pays $1,000,000 yearly to guard the free port and prevent goods crossing the border without paying duty.

About 3,000 acres of ground are used.

Hamburg's Special Privileges.

Steamers can lie alongside the quay walls and discharge by cranes into freight sheds. Ample shipyards are provided with all necessary appliances. The entire zone is surrounded by a customs line guarded by high iron palings. The water entrances and the land entrances are provided with custom booths, where goods entering the empire pay duty.

Hamburg is the only free port which enjoys the privilege of manufacturing in her zone. Goods manufactured, however, if sold in Germany pay duty on the manufactured product, while goods manufactured in the Empire only pay the lower duty on the raw products.

Numerous restaurants under State control with fixed charges are used to feed the workmen.

The newest basin was built in 1903—cost about eight millions of dollars and is leased to the Hamburg-American Line. Rental about four hundred thousand dollars yearly. Depth of water 32 feet 8 inches.

The river barges average 600 to 800 tons capacity.

A ship of 10,000 tons cargo can be unloaded in forty hours and loaded in thirty to forty hours.

Piers can be leased if desired.

The water surface was 1,576 acres in 1909. The entire water front is 41 miles. There are 14 miles of quays alongside which vessels can come. The largest cranes lift 150 tons weight. There are 138 miles of railroad tracks in the zone. Some 3,000 lighters, capacity 20 to 250 tons each, of which some 500 are covered. The railroad tracks are owned by Hamburg, but operated by the State railways. There is a small terminal charge for transportation of about twenty-four cents a ton.

Hamburg has a special warehouse system privately operated, partly State owned and controlled. This company fixes the tariff for storage, handling and sorting goods. Capital is between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. The company pays about 5 per cent. per annum. There is 5,417,725 square feet of storage space. About three-fifths is leased and balance open to all comers.

The immigrant feature of Hamburg's free port is an interesting one. It is situated on the left bank of the Elbe, opposite Hamburg, and completely separated from the city as a protection against disease. There are twenty-five buildings, accommodating about 5,000 persons. Each nationality is housed separately. The immigrant is sheltered from his arrival until departure. A physical examination is made before he enters the zone. About 25 per cent. pay nothing for these privileges. The balance less than twenty cents a day. The care shown to the immigrant makes Hamburg the popular port of departure of all Europe for places abroad.

The quay dues at State piers are twenty cents per metric ton. If vessels discharge partly over the side no charge for such portion of the cargo is made. These dues entitle the ship to the use of the pier, the shed, cranes, and crane men, and storage free on the pier for two days.

A ship discharging 3,600 tons would pay about $510 if discharged in midstream. If alongside dock the charge would be about $857.

Mr. Clapp's book only gives figures in details up to 1907. Since then undoubtedly numerous important improvements have been made. To show the great growth of Hamburg, in 1871 she possessed only one over-sea line, the Hamburg-American Line to New York City.

It may be well to remark that history shows every effort of a city or State in formulating plans to increase its commerce by free ports or otherwise was based on self-interest primarily, the building up of its own shipping and the establishment of lines with regular sailings to near-by and distant points, operating either sailers or steamers, flying the national flag and owned and controlled by citizens of the country, and only as a second consideration was the attracting to its ports of alien vessels.

Our own condition of absolute dependence on foreign shipping to carry our goods abroad, entailing upon us serious loss of trade and heavy moneyed tribute to others, also forcing us to pay higher rates than other nations to similar markets, taking away all initiative of our merchants, makes it essential, if we are willing to spend many millions for a free port in New York, that we at the same time should adopt in so doing some proper endeavors to enable us as a nation to take advantage ourselves of the opportunities we are unselfishly creating for others. To emphasize this point I quote a few extracts from Mr. Clapp's work. He says:

"The significance to a port of direct oversea connection with all parts of the world is perhaps better understood in Europe than America. When Hamburg exported and imported via London the English middleman invariably paid toll on all that passed through his hands. The German manufacturer paid more than the English to get his goods to market.

"Exporting industries and regular steamship lines are indissolubly bound up together. The advantages of regular line service can be partially attained by foreign companies coming in to serve a port, but foreign companies come in only when there is already enough indirect trade between the terminals of the new line to assure its success. They offer no service to create that trade. They do not speculate. They are ready to withdraw the moment the financial success of the undertaking becomes doubtful. This is not true of a native line financed and believed in by the merchants and capitalists of the seaport. Even if the foreign line becomes fixed, it never attains that degree of personal acquaintanceship, trust and consideration which obtains between merchants and a line domiciled in their own port. Finally the educative and advertising value of steamship lines is lost if a country's products are not carried abroad under its own flag.

"A great steamship is a splendid evidence of the industrial power and ability of the nation it represents. A marked characteristic of the Hamburg and Bremen lines is the large proportion of their stock held by local merchants, capitalists and bankers. It is estimated one-half the stock of the Hamburg-American Line is held in Hamburg, and over half the stock of the North German Lloyd is held in Bremen. This explains the establishment of lines that promise no immediate profit. It explains the extent to which outside companies have been compelled to abandon Hamburg. The close community of interest between banks, merchants, and steamship lines has been a source of strength to all three."

The entire career of Hamburg shows the nursing of the Hamburg-American Line and efforts to force trade in all directions. Incidentally, it might be said this line has been very successful in obtaining subsidies from the German Government, and the real starting point in German shipbuilding was the subsidy given in 1885 to the North German Lloyd to run vessels to Australasia and China, vessels to be built in Germany. Ninety thousand men are now employed in German shipyards.

Germany carries 50 to 60 per cent. of her own trade. America carries about 6 per cent.

Will It Pay?

Before we can decide definitely as to advocating a free zone in New York we must first determine whether we will gain sufficient advantages to warrant the effort, or if it would not be best to devote the money to increase our present system of wharfs and terminals.

Second—Will it be possible for us to obtain the many millions required to carry the undertaking successfully through?

Third—We must use wisdom in selecting the proper site, and at least 3,000 to 5,000 acres would be necessary.

Fourth—Can we attract sufficient manufacturing plants to the free zone to warrant this being a distinctive feature of the enterprise?

Fifth—Will it be possible by means of a free zone not only to attract foreign shipping but to uphold our own maritime interest?

Sixth—Are we willing, if the money is procurable, to expend it for general benefit without looking for any adequate interest return, which would be difficult to obtain?

These questions answered in the affirmative in part or whole would unquestionably justify our city in taking action, and in any case the agitation of this subject should bring to the front and make known to our citizens the fact that we are not in the first rank as a seaport, and either through the establishment of a free zone or in some other way let us hope that the enterprise and foresight of England, Germany, and other European nations will be emulated by ourselves, so we will become an up-to-date port, and not fall back in the struggle of all countries now for commercial and maritime supremacy.

MUSINGS OF THE GENTLE CYNIC

The people who live up to their ideals are generally satisfied to remain poor.

The fellow who is fired with enthusiasm is seldom the one who is fired by the boss.

All the world's a stage, with mighty few intermissions to go out between the acts.

Intimate knowledge may be a magnifying glass, but some men positively dwindle under it.

The breath of scandal is the ill-wind that blows nobody good.

Don't strike a man when he is down. Even an idea will seldom do that.

It would take nothing less than brass knuckles and a blackjack to knock the conceit out of some people.

There must be some sort of neutral ground between a married man's warning and a bachelor's advice.

All men are fools, but they wouldn't be reminded of it so often if they remained single.

Love in a cottage is all right, provided it also supplies a town house for the Winter.

Some people are never satisfied. Many a fellow is still looking for trouble when he already has an automobile, a motor boat, and a wife.

There is nothing in the world a man gets used to so quickly when he once starts as making a fool of himself.

Some men are so sensitive that they would rather have you shoot at them than laugh at them.

From a woman's point of view, to be compelled to suffer in silence takes all the pleasure from it.

Possibly we close our eyes to our own faults on the same principle that the ostrich buries its head in the sand.

Time would hang mighty heavily on the hands of some people if they should succeed in getting out of debt.

The fellow who is all wrapped up in himself is generally a bundle of conceit.

The Good Book tells us that man is made of dust, but somehow or other he always seems to want more.

HEIRLOOMS EXPOSED FOR FIRST TIME TO PUBLIC GAZE

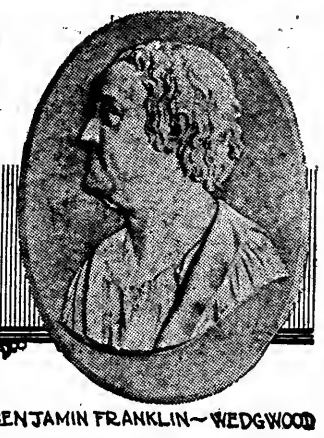
WEDGWOOD PORTRAIT of WASHINGTON

WILLIAM DE PEYSTER—1790—PORTRAIT BY PEALE

A QUAINT FRENCH SILHOUETTE.

COMMODORE PREBLE "FATHER of THE NAVY"



BENJAMIN FRANKLIN—WEDGWOOD

IN one of the rooms of the old Van Cortlandt farm house at the entrance to Van Cortlandt Park there is being held a most interesting exhibition. Its interest is not at first apparent, for it is concerned largely with Colonial portraiture, and the miniatures and silhouettes of that period of our history are a twice-told tale. But a little examination discloses the fact that the exhibition is genuinely unique, for almost every portrait is here encountering the atmosphere of museum and exhibition room for the first time in its history.

Drawing upon the many scattered branches of their organization, the Colonial Dames of America have been working since last April to secure the privilege of exhibiting this small collection of family portraits and heirlooms. Most of them have never until now left the walls of the houses where they were first hung, and many of them have quaint and romantic stories attached to them.

The gem of the collection is the famous "Pruyn Washington," which, in all the years since it was painted by Gilbert Stuart himself has never been subjected to the indiscriminate gaze of the public. This is Washington's family portrait of himself and hung on the walls of Mount Vernon during his residence there. At his death it fell to the share of one of his four nephews, George Steptoe Washington.

This Mr. Washington lived near Falmouth on the north side of the Rappahannock, and the portrait occupied a prominent place on his walls until the civil war. Then his homestead was suddenly filled with Union troops. To save the portrait Mr. Washington hastily ripped it from the frame and placed it underneath the carpet in one of the bedrooms. As luck would have it, General Hancock chose to occupy that room during his stay in Falmouth and tramped unwittingly back and forth over the Father of His Country.

A Last Resort.

After the war was over it was hard lines for the Steptoe Washingtons. There is no expression of sentiment on the part of the owner, but his state of mind can be pictured when he finally had to roll up the portrait which he had guarded under so great difficulty, and send it, with one of Washington's four swords, to his cousin, Col. Richard D. Cutts, with a curt request to sell. It was a last resort, and the only means of recuperating his devastated farm.

Col. Cutts, in accordance with the request, sold the portrait in 1868 to John V. L. Pruyn of Albany, and it has hung in the old Pruyn home on Elk Street ever since. Old Mrs. Pruyn had requests innumerable for the loan of this portrait, but she steadily refused, showing it only to the favored among her many guests. On her death a few years ago the portrait passed into the hands of her daughter, Mrs. William Gorham Rice, who finally consented to its exhibition in New York.

No reproductions of the portrait have ever been made. It presents the Washington familiar to us in the many Stuart portraits, but it is perhaps one of the best that has ever come from that artist's brush. It shows a Gen. Washington full of life and vigor, with a ruddy coloring and a very ruddy nose. It is in excellent condition, despite its adventure beneath the carpet of the old house at Falmouth.

Wedgwood's Washington.

The Father of His Country holds first place, of course, at the exhibition, and there is a group of silhouettes and numerous smaller portraits of him. The most interesting among them is Josiah Wedgwood's portrait, the famous medallion which was circulated all over France and England at the time of the Revolution.

This was made by Wedgwood at the instance of Voltaire, and as there were no portraits of Washington at that time in England, a classic type of face was selected which seemed to embody the principles for which Washington stood. For the medal in bronze from which the portrait exhibited was modeled an inscription was made as follows: GE. WASHINGTONER GENERAL OF THE CONTINENTAL ARMY IN AMERICA, and on the reverse side was the legend written by Voltaire himself.

WASHIN, REUNIT PAR UNE RARE ASSEMBLAGE LES TALENTS DU GUERRIER & LES VERTUS DU SAGE. (Washington combines by singular union the talents of a warrior and the virtues of a philosopher.)

Wedgwood himself was at first a warm advocate of the American cause but shifted his point of view when sentiment threatened to interfere with business. He wrote to his partner Bentley concerning this very portrait:

> My objections to striking medals from the bronze you sent me rather increase. It would be doing no service to the cause of liberty in general, at least so it appears to me, and might hurt us very much individually. Nay, the personage is himself at this time more absolute than any despot in Europe. How then can he be celebrated in such circumstances as the Patron of Liberty?

This medallion of Washington, which is in the white biscuit upon the blue background usual to the Wedgwood portraits, is one of the most prized in the famous collection of Robert T. Haines-Halsey of this city, a collection larger by three times than any other in the world.

There are other examples of this notable collection here shown for the first time and concerned with persons of Colonial connections, which are vastly interesting.

There is one delicately executed portrait of Honora Sneyd, the capricious lady who sent André recklessly into the army. Honora, who appears a bit angular and sharp in her portrait, was passionately loved by the young and handsome André. As Trevelyan himself has pointed out, she could not have had much discrimination, for she turned the young André down quite flatly in favor of Richard Lovell Edgeworth, becoming the second of his several wives. André, set on something reckless, rushed off to join the army and to forget Honora.

Mr. Halsey has also culled from his Wedgwood collection his valuable Franklin portraits, most of them modeled from the wax likenesses made by the famous Mrs. Patience Wright. Mrs. Wright was a worker in wax, residing in Great Britain for the greater part of her life, although an ardent American in spirit. She was a personal friend of Benjamin Franklin, and it was largely through her efforts that portraits of the American statesman were made tremendously popular in England.

The best-known and, incidentally, one of the rarest portraits of Franklin is one which Wedgwood made from a model by a Frenchman, Nini, the manager of some terra cotta works, who was Franklin's host during his nine year's stay in France. It shows Franklin as he arrived in Paris in December, 1776, wearing his round fur cap.

Pitt on Crockery.

In the Wedgwood collection there is also the portrait of William Pitt, concerning whom the crafty Wedgwood wrote just after the "Great Commoner" had repealed the Stamp act and America was shouting his praises:

> • • • What do you think of sending Mr. Pitt upon Crockery ware to America? A Quantity might certainly be sold there now & some Advantage made of the American prejudice in favor of that great man. Ld. Gower brot his family to see my works the other day & asked me if I had not sent Mr. Pitt over in shoals to America. • • •

Most of these portraits are in the familiar white on Wedgwood blue, but there are a few examples of the solid jasper in shades of green and red which made Wedgwood famous and which will appeal to the connoisseurs of the ceramic art.

Washington is also represented in some very interesting porcelain figures, belonging to the Halsey collection. Two of these were contemporary portraits made in France and representing in a most amusing fashion the ideal of the American Liberator current in France during that tempestuous period. In one, Washington is represented as trampling on the British lion, which lies abject and penitent beneath his foot. It is a most extraordinary lion, brown with darker spots, and in shape much like a lizard. One foot occupied with the lion, the other treads down the British flag, and in the liberator's hand is, of course, the Declaration of Independence.

A second porcelain shows much the same figure, with the American eagle beside him, overshadowing the arms of Great Britain, neatly cracked in two. There are also figures supposed to represent the great Franklin of the time, in the Staffordshire work of Ralph Wood, whose father was Enoch Wood, maker of the famous blue and white Wood china.

Next to the Wedgwood collection, in interest, is a small group of miniatures sent out for the first time from the old Ver Planck home in Kingston. Two of the miniatures are undoubtedly from the brush of the famous miniature painter, Jonathan Trumbull, and have been in the family since their execution in the eighteenth century. The present members of the Ver Planck family send an unusually romantic tale connected with two other miniatures by Malbone, the well-known miniature artist, who was a friend of the family and who presented them with a small signed sepia portrait of himself, which is also exhibited.

The Malbone miniatures show Guilian Crimmelin Ver Planck, and his very lovely wife, Eliza Fenno Ver Planck. According to the present members of the Ver Planck family who vouch for the truth of the story, a miniature had been made of Mrs. Ver Planck as a young and girlish bride. Not long afterwards, in 1817, she died.

Ver Planck's Whim.

The young husband mourned for her and kept the miniature before him for many years. One day it disappeared and nothing further was ever heard of it. Guilian Ver Planck came to be an old man, and finally after his death the younger members of the family found the miniature with which during the later years of his life he had kept alive the memory of his young wife. But it was not the original miniature which they had known and which had disappeared. This was the picture of an older woman, a more mature person than the girl-bride of the early portrait. This was the one painted by Malbone, the one which is exhibited in this collection. It was Guilian Ver Planck's effort to have his dead wife grow old along with him.

Another of the portraits yielded up to the Colonial Dames is that of William de Peyster, long in the De Peyster family of New York City. It is the work of Charles Wilson Peale and was painted in 1790 when Mr. De Peyster was 53 years old. It depicts a hale and rosy gentleman, whose fifty-three years sit lightly on his shoulders. This portrait has never before been exhibited.

A third valuable portrait of the group exhibited is that of Commodore Edward Preble, "The Father of the American Navy." This portrait is also by Peale and was done after the encounter at Tripoli. The Commodore is represented with a map of Tripoli in his hand.

The silhouettes shown in this small exhibition bear the names of many of the best-known New York families, many of them being of famous personages such as the Duke of Wellington and Horace Walpole, many of them being family portraits. There are two silhouettes of Mr. and Mrs. Alston contributed from the Alston family in South Carolina. Mrs. Alston is better known as the famous Theodosia Burr, who was romantically forced to walk the plank. Legend has pictured as a slight and lovely girl but family portraits in Colonial times seldom prevaricated. The silhouette was made some years before Theodosia's little adventure and she was then matronly, to put the matter kindly—and headed straight for a double chin.

A Group of Old-Timers.

There is a miniature of Lemuel Wells, beautifully executed on silk, the last proprietor of Philipse Manor House. There is also one of the quaint little French landscape silhouettes which were used at the time of the French Revolution to cover the pictures of the King and Queen. This is an excellent bit of silhouette work showing a very breezy day on which ladies' skirts are lifted to show the fine lace petticoats and in which the scissors must cut very fine capers among the branches of the trees.

Two interesting miniatures are those from a well-known Colonial family of the South, showing Ichabod and Nathaniel Wattles. The miniatures were made of paper pasted over the painted background, while bits of the old silk made the coats and the fine ruffles of Ichabod and Nathaniel.

There is also on view some of the bits taken from the old Adrian Van der Donck house, the foundations of which were discovered a short time ago by workmen excavating in front of the Van Cortlandt Museum. This old farmhouse, which adjoined the Van Cortlandt homestead, was probably built in 1648, and a great many old treasures were dug up from among the ruined foundations. There are bits of Delft china, an old silver button thought to have been made in Zeeland, several keys, some wrought iron hinges, a Dutch pipe, a gold seal ring estimated to be 400 years old, and a quaint little pair of rusted scissors.

This collection has been gathered from many parts of the country and represents the work of a special committee of the Colonial Dames, of which Mrs. James Creelman was the Chairman. The committee was made up of Mrs. Willis E. Hall, Mrs. Charles Warren Hunt, Robert T. Haines Halsey, and Miss Irwin-Martin, all of New York City.

AMATEUR CRITICS DISCOVER A MULTIPLICITY OF FLAWS IN NEW YORK

Letters Shower Upon New Help-Your-City Complaint Bureau with Strictures Varying from Disapprobation of Fifth Avenue Air to Censure of Restaurant Catsup.

FROM a criticism of the quality of the air on Fifth Avenue to a complaint of the quality of the candy on the Bowery runs the range of the communications which are being received by the recently established Help-Your-City Complaint Bureau of the Bureau of Municipal Research.

The man or woman who wants to voice an objection, reasonable or unreasonable, about any condition anywhere in New York City, is turning to the new bureau these days for an outlet to his or her feelings. The bureau is receiving on an average of ten complaints daily, and in the two months of its existence has had over 600 complaints. Of these more than 400 have been investigated, with the result that 80 per cent. of the complaints are shown to have been well founded.

Many of the complaints, when substantiated, are sent on to the proper city department having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the communication. Others of the complaints are dealt with direct by the bureau. City officials have promised their cooperation with the new organization, and it is expected by the bureau executives that ultimately such a need for a municipal complaint bureau will be proved that the city will establish one.

Brooklyn has already found a municipal complaint bureau to be valuable. In 1902 James A. Rooney was appointed as Supervisor of the Bureau of Complaints, and to date has handled 25,000 complaints. In the Bronx, under President Miller, citizens have been encouraged freely to make complaints and suggestions.

One of the odd complaints received by the Help-Your-City Bureau comes from a resident of Roanoke, Va., who is paying a visit to New York. He writes demanding that an analysis be made of the air on Fifth Avenue, between Twenty-third and Forty-second Streets, and declares that the air is not fit to breathe because it is so vitiated by the exhaust from automobiles.

Complaints cover a wide geographical area, all sections of the city being represented. Criticisms have been made of the insanitary condition of drinking fountains in Battery Park, of the pavements along Nassau Street, of the blocking of sidewalks in the lower downtown district.

From the east side have come complaints that sweet corn is wrapped in newspapers, that impure candy is being sold, that the tenement house law is being violated, and that comfort stations are insanitary.

People on the west side have complained of the paving on Eighth Avenue, of overcrowded moving picture shows, and of the failure to allow the public to use the grass in Riverside Park.

One person complains that electric lights burn after 8 A. M. on the boulevard from Pelham Manor to Bronx Park; another objects because members of the school athletic teams have no dressing rooms in Van Cortlandt Park and are forced to dress in saloons. Complaints have been received about torn-up roads in Rockaway and inadequate sewers in Woodhaven.

Some of the other complaints filed are as follows:

The gum and chocolate vending machines in the Subway stations frequently fail to work, the consumer thus losing his penny. I compute that I pay on the average 1 1-6 cents for each piece of gum or chocolate.

Inspect sauce and so-called catsup in the eating places in New York and Brooklyn.

I would like a subway from Long Island City to Staten Island. I travel two and one-half hours down there and two and one-half hours back every day.

Gentlemen: I want everything improved. There never was so much wrong and so much corruption in these United States as there is now, maladministration, graft, &c. It is time to make New Year's resolutions and to stick to them. To materialize: There is Eighth Avenue below Fifty-eighth Street in a disgraceful condition. Instead of breaking and patching up good pavement, why not mend this avenue? I believe there is more mud there than in all of South America. Get busy.

If a library is a good place, why close it at 9 P. M.? Theatres keep open to 10:30 to 11 P. M. Working men and women don't get through until 6 or 7 P. M.

Make it possible to choose candidates for all offices intelligently by giving to each voter when he registers a list of the nominations of all parties for each office. At present there is no way of getting complete lists until Election Day.

Use public schools as polling places. The rental alone in Manhattan paid for four primaries for one election amounts to more than $250,000.

In handing out transfers, conductors usually wet their fingers in saliva. This tends to spread disease, and to my mind in the pay-as-you-enter cars a little sponge in water could easily be kept, which would obviate the habit, which endangers the public health.

Why are gas lamps on certain streets of Brooklyn extinguished before 5:30 A. M.?

I am a student in a high school in Brooklyn, and find the ventilation in classrooms extremely insufficient, rendering perfect attention impossible and all mental work difficult.

See that the Seventh Avenue car line runs cars down Seventh Avenue and Broadway between 6 and 8 P. M. Ten cars pass, and not one goes down Broadway.

Please fix my street. It looks like a road 600 miles from nowhere.

Fifty per cent. of the voters who register at polling places do so between the hours of 6 and 9 P. M. Suggested change—to have five nights in one week for registration and all day Saturday to allow night workers to vote.

Want the trolley cars run off the Brooklyn Bridge down Park Row and down Broadway to South Ferry. This will cause immediate relief at the bridge. Get busy.

I am a busy woman and have traveled about the city for the past fifteen years. Of late I have had occasion to visit on Central Park West about two evenings a week, and have been annoyed to find that there is not a street number lighted so that it can be seen from the cars, and the conductors do not call out the streets. Last night, from 145th Street to Ninety-third Street, the conductor had not called out one street. Some years ago there were lighted signs on the Park side, but now they are dark. I think there should be a rule that conductors should call out every tenth street at least.

I wish you would stop the rowdyism in Sixty-fifth Street, as it sometimes endangers people's lives.

Is there no law forbidding tenants to allow wash on fire escapes of apartment houses? You can see it most any day of the week on a certain avenue on the west side in a most fashionable neighborhood, and it looks ugly.

On the east side they have fake scales in order to sell their products cheap. You can see them faking the public every day.

Close the saloons on Sunday.

Why not have frosted bulbs for the electric lights on street cars? The lights as they are hurt the eyes.

The dispensaries of the city are abused by the well-to-do getting free treatment, in direct violation of the law.

Why do you allow steam rollers to litter up Quincy Street, Brooklyn, when the work is being done on Bedford Avenue?

Stop automobiles driving up Park Avenue, between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Streets, on west side of avenue.

The Help-Your-City Bureau has printed a large number of complaint blanks which it is planning to distribute widely among citizens. Executives of the bureau hope to get churches, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, labor unions, and business men's clubs to maintain regularly help-your-city complaint boxes. It is also being planned to place complaint slips in theatre programmes, and to install complaint boxes in drug stores and in railroad and ferry waiting rooms.

The idea for the experiment of the Help-Your-City Bureau was suggested to the Bureau of Municipal Research some months ago by George H. F. Schrader, who wrote:

> What show has any citizen of New York against the police, in fact against any other department that extorts money from him? Where can he get a hearing, where complain? Certainly not at the station house, for it would do little good.
>
> I have often wondered why there is no general complaint office in New York, and a separate one for the Police Department. You cannot expect people to go to Headquarters or to a station house to lay their grievances against the police before the police. They lack courage, are even afraid; but if an office which removed people's dread were opened where people, rich or poor, could go with some assurance of secrecy and confidence, and complain about policemen, extortion, abuse, &c., they would do so. Take the people into your confidence. If a municipal complaint department cannot be maintained, then let us have a private one.

TAKE POPCORN SERIOUSLY! UNCLE SAM DOES

LOTS and lots of folks look upon popcorn as something fit only for the circus, the Summer park, and now and then the church fair or sociable, or maybe a child's birthday party. In other words, people, as a rule, do not take popcorn seriously, either in the home or as an article of trade. And that is where they are making a big mistake. After a great deal of research and experimenting, the Department of Agriculture is in a position to prove it.

The popcorn investigations of the department have been conducted by C. P. Hartley, the physiologist in charge of corn investigations, and J. G. Willer, scientific assistant in the Corn Investigating Bureau. So well have they performed their work that Secretary of Agriculture Houston has had the reports printed in book form and liberally illustrated, for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the people of this country the joys and profits that attend the scientific and judicial cultivation of the little popping cereal.

"Among the things that add pleasure to country life," the department officially states, "popcorn should be given a prominent place. For affording a pleasant and healthful treat for the family during the long Winter evenings and the holiday season it probably has no equal. The crisp popcorn is dear to the children's palate, and the 'popcorn and Christmas hemlock spurting in the fire' have been enjoyed by both old and young for many generations. If every farm home would keep a supply of popcorn and a popper, convenient fewer nickels would be spent for less wholesome knicknacks and more enjoyable evenings would be spent around the family hearth."

But popcorn, in addition to affording a healthful and entertaining diversion for little ones, also has considerable value as a food, and if properly prepared, the Department of Agriculture is authority for the statement that it is far superior to many of the widely advertised so-called breakfast foods now on the market. Likewise popcorn is something that it pays to grow, although the department states that "no farmer should expect to become rich in a few years by growing popcorn"; but it adds that "if the good years are averaged up with the poor ones this crop will be found to pay about as well as field corn."

In a nutshell, popcorn, as a paying proposition for the market, depends largely upon the producer's ability to grow it of a good quality, store his corn properly, and market it advantageously.

"If it is desired," the department advises, "to grow popcorn as a field crop, the surplus stock that is not wanted for home use can usually be sold to local merchants at a fair price, or a profitable local trade may be built up by supplying it direct to consumers. Both of these methods should enable consumers to get a first-class article at a lower price than it would cost on the general market. And this practice is to be encouraged, as it enables consumers to make their own popcorn confections and thus have them fresh, in which state they are at their best."

Indicating the high profits that may be had in the judicious marketing of popcorn the figures of the Government show that an outlay of between $1 and $1.50 for popcorn will produce about $30 worth of popcorn in the form of five-cent packages. Furthermore sufficient corn to make $30 worth of five-cent packages can be grown on a piece of land 40 feet long by 20 feet wide.

Now, if you happen to have a little piece of unused land, and take a notion to prove for your own satisfaction that popcorn is a profitable industry the Department of Agriculture is in a position to tell you how to do it, and this is the official "how to do it."

In order to succeed best with popcorn for home use it should not be left until the field and truck crops have been planted, but should be planted early, so it will have a long season in which to grow and mature. If harvested in an immature condition it will not give as flaky and crisp popcorn balls as can be made from fully ripened corn.

A good time to plant is when the oak trees begin to show their new leaves. A warm, well-drained location, free from marshy places, should be selected. A sandy loam, if available, is best. The soil should be plowed or spaded to a depth of eight inches or more and the surface of the plat thoroughly pulverized before planting. The rows should be about three feet apart. A small furrow two or three inches deep is sufficient. The kernels should be dropped eight or ten inches apart in the row and covered to a depth of about one inch. The planting should be done before the moist soil in the furrow has had time to dry out.

New popcorn may be used for popping as soon as it has dried out sufficiently, and if properly stored it should be ready for use by the time the Christmas season rolls around. If old popcorn does not pop because of being too dry, the popping quality can be somewhat restored by moistening or sprinkling the corn with water, and if it is too dry for this treatment the corn should be soaked and then spread out to dry for two or three days in the sun.

Do not take too much popcorn at one time, not more than enough to barely cover the bottom of the popper one kernel deep. Hold the popper high enough above the fire or heat to keep from burning the kernels or scorching them too quickly. The right degree of heat for best results in popping should make good corn begin to pop in one and one-half minutes. This should give the maximum volume increase in popping. If it begins to pop in less time, or if a large quantity of corn is put into the popper, it will not pop up so crisp and flaky. If it takes much longer for the popping to begin, the heat is probably not great enough or the popcorn is of poor quality, or there may be other interfering causes, such as drafts of cold air.

To preserve the snowy whiteness of the popped kernels, the flame must be kept from striking them. This can be done by placing a plate of iron or a stove lid between the corn and the fire if a wire popper is used, or by using a pan popper if popping directly over a flame.

If the popcorn is in first-class condition and the heat properly applied one pint of unpopped corn should give fifteen to twenty pints of popped corn.

Night

THE day, with slow, reluctant feet,
Has slipped behind the purple hills,
And night steals out, with laughter sweet,
To drop her stars in limpid rills.

Out where the cool brown sand bars lie
The sea creeps in, a limpid thing,
Trailing in long, low, aimless sweep
Its white foam, like a wounded wing.

High overhead the frozen moon,
Like some pale ghost, takes noiseless flight—
A troubled spirit, ever doomed
In penance thus to haunt the night.

ART AT HOME AND ABROAD

De Ridder Collection, Most Important That Has Come Here in Years, to be on Sale Soon.

THE de Ridder collection has now reached the Kleinberger Galleries in New York and will be placed on exhibition toward the end of this month.

The statement that the collection is the most important that has come to New York for many a year is not in the least exaggerated. We seldom have an opportunity to see so much delightful Dutch work of the seventeenth century brought together in one gallery as we soon may see in this stately assemblage of the works of Rembrandt, Hals, Terborch, de Hooch, Metsu, Steen, and the others of the famous group. For the past two years these pictures have hung in the Staedel Museum at Frankfort, neighbored by the excellent examples of the Dutch masters in the permanent collection there.

There are three Rembrandts. One is a portrait of a gentlemen of the Raman family, dated 1634, and representing the sitter as a rather formal person in dark clothing with a white ruff and a wide-brimmed black hat, one of those portraits in which the artist followed the custom of his time. A second Rembrandt is a picture of a girl at a window, supposed to be Hendrickje Stoffels, of rich impasto and strong contrasts of light and shade.

Then there is the little head of Saskia as Flora, one of the ingratiating versions of the artist's first wife in the days of her youth, bright and clear in color with the soft waves of red gold hair that cling about the enchanting head at Dulwich.

There are two portraits by Frans Hals from the collection of Count André Mniszech, which also furnished two examples of the same master to the Morgan collection. The most important of the de Ritter pa'r represents a well-to-do Dutch lady in black silk, Frau von Middlehoven; the second is a three-quarter length of a woman in a rich dress, and there is a third Hals, a man holding a wine glass, which comes from a Florentine collection and is dated 1634. Of these, the young woman with the humorous, crooked mouth and merry eyes recalls the subtle psychological research of that ironic Laughing Cavalier in the Wallace collection. Accomplished and effective as the execution is, in this portrait it is dominated by the human expression, so delicate in its restraint, so candid and intimate in its revelation of character and temperament, and in color it has the full splendor of the "black and white" style of the painter broken by a ringing note of yellow and red in the gloves.

These are the features of the collection upon which special emphasis has been laid, owing to the importance of the artists, the popularity of their work with American collectors, and the difficulty now experienced in obtaining fine and well-authenticated examples.

The minor Dutch masters in the collection claim equal tribute, however, their quality raising them to a plane upon which they may very well venture to compete with their companions of a greater fame. The Metsu, for example, "A Lady Taking a Letter from a Servant," (a gem that once was sold for 26 florins, and twenty years ago brought 320 guineas at the Hope sale,) inspires Dr. Bode to the following encomium: "Metsu may vie in such pictures as these, of which, unfortunately, only about a dozen are preserved, with Terborch's best depictions of social life, while he excels them in the richness and animation of his subjects and the impression of comfort and ease which he conveys. Another Metsu shows a lady holding a greedy little dog, which cranes its neck toward a plate on which a servant is placing some freshly cooked food. These are the Metsu of the best period, after he had removed from Leyden to Amsterdam and had gained in self-command and refinement of observation and execution.

Jan Steen, another Leyden artist, and one from whom Metsu learned much, is liberally represented. A picture which once had its home in a New York collection sails into its former harbor. "The Siesta," which went at the Yerkes sale for over $16,000, is here once more, bearing testimony to the more sensitive and peaceful side of the artist's robust genius. Nothing could be more tenderly conceived than this outdoor scene, a table with bright fruits and vegetables, a pleasant landscape seen through the arch of an arbor, a girl in the foreground asleep, her tired blonde head resting against the table, a little dog sharing her languor, and an old man in the background quietly reading. Another Steen of importance is "The Music Lesson," which is supposed to be a portrait of the artist and his wife. The woman in a red velvet jacket is playing a flute, her expression quaintly anxious, the man leans toward her with an admonishing finger and gay, quizzical eyes. Still another is the beautiful composition, "Grace Before Meat," from Sir George Donaldson's collection, and a fourth is the interesting picture called "The Drawing Lesson," in which a drawing master is correcting a young girl's work in a studio. The studio is typical, with casts standing about, a cherub hanging by a wire from the ceiling, and a large canvas standing on the floor against a trunk. "In the Drawing Lesson," says Dr. Bode, "the versatile but unequal artist is as rich in detail and careful in drawing as Gerard Dou, as free and picturesque in treatment as Adriaen Ostade, as fresh and touching as Gabriel Metsu, and at the same time remains Jan Steen." What other artist of the time would combine so much skill in composition, so much sprightly care in the treatment of details, so much understanding of the sweetness and beauty of home?

It is no slight pleasure for lovers of this school of so-called "Little Masters" to have opportunity to study Steen in several examples of his finest style and most appealing mood. He has at his best the singular tenderness found allied with the sharpest wit. His sentiment never degenerates to sentimentality, but when he gives it free expression he reveals a depth of feeling unknown among his companions in the field of domestic genre. He combines many characteristics in his work and unites the early intsrest in the life of the people as it may be observed in public places with the later interest in the individual and the family. His humor is rollicking, his feeling for innocent pastimes and the ways of animals and children is of the kindliest, his satire is merciless, and his love of nature appears in his pre-Raphaelite attention to the delightful detail of a trailing vine at a window, or a lusty rose tree clambering up an arbor trellis. It would be an easy matter to collect a group of very miserable Steens, heavy and coarse in execution. It is quite another matter to bring together so many in which vivacity of color and touch are present in liberal measure.

If Steen was a variable in Dutch art, Terborch was a constant. Grave, aristocratic, easy, and unassuming, this remarkable artist never released his restraining hold upon himself, and painted with the same fine severity in his old age as in his youth. He is represented in the present collection by six fine examples, among them a portrait of Jan der Graef, standing, his gloved hand resting on his stick, his hair floating in a soft dim cloud about his head, his whole appearance that of a distinguished personality, removed from foppishness by the cool dignity of his bearing, a miracle of elaborate simplicity and discretion. The companion portraits of a man and woman also claim special attention for the magnificent color in the orange and red draperies. In "The Lute Player" also the color is superb, and it is interesting to compare the muffled yellow of the woman's jacket with the singing yellows of Steen's pictures.

There are two examples of Pieter de Hooch, masterpieces of his prime. One, a mother and child in a room which opens out to another room, shows him playing his favorite game of contrasting lights with a deft and competent hand. The other is a garden scene. A figure is passing up a garden path to a typical Dutch house. The lovely color and surface, the harmony of the tone, the beautiful delicacy of the brushwork combine in an effect of irresistible charm. There are also two important group pictures by that rare master Gonzales Coques, and a magnificent Bol, a "Girl at a Window." This last recalls the Dulwich girl by Rembrandt, but is freer and gayer in feeling. The girl is a big young girl with great strong hands and large features, all of which play their part in her broad, infectious smile.

These are only a few of the treasures of a collection which is composed chiefly of small pictures as rare in quality as they are restricted in size.

Etchings by Artists New and Old.

At the Braus Galleries a number of Lee Hankey's drypoints have been brought together for the first exhibition of his work to be seen in America. This accomplished etcher is one of the most original among the moderns, yet he suggests more than one predecessor. The massing of his light and shade and the plastic quality of his modeling, together with his power to combine aquatint and linewith expressive effect, bring him often quits close to Goya, although nothing in his work approaches the ferocity of Goya's imagination or the freedom of his technique. This Spanish quality in his treatment of valuss is united to a large simplicity of outline and a nobility of gesture that bring Millet to mind. When we add to these a thoroughly English and modern sentiment and a rather subtle individuality, the importance of Mr. Hankey's contribution to the field of black and white becomes apparent. In "The Cave" we get his best characteristics. The lovely weaving of light and shade over the nude figure and the strong simplicity of the structure, the exquisite tenderness in the expression of youth in the supple figure, and the unity of the tone are intensely stimulating to the aesthetic sense. In this figure and in the almost equally beautiful "Wood Nymph" one feels the pulsation of life in the modeling.

In the nursing mother of "The Courtyard" we get a more intimate note that, nevertheless, is a shade less lifelike. In the lights that fall so sharply on the mother's drapery there is a sense of artificial illumination. The "Light in the Cottage" is free from this defect. A woman is holding a child on her lap. The child's skirts stand out stiff with starch, and one is conscious of the fresh, clean newness of its little person from head to foot. The woman's blouse, on the other hand, sags as it would with much wearing, her apron has been many times washed, the texture of the material is perfectly rendered.

None of these examples of Mr. Hankey's work competes, however, with the "Old Woman's Head." This subject has had every variety of interpretation since the day of Rembrandt's mother, but it reappears in this example with entire freedom from convention or obvious reference to the past. The splendid old head, with its big nose, its half-open mouth, its sunken eyes, its scant, white hair as soft as a child's, avoids every hint of the sad repulsiveness of failing powers, while keeping to a strict realism. The beautiful attributes of age, its resignation and gentleness and concentrated experience are there.

Mr. Hankey's work, although new to America, is well known in Europe, and is represented in the public galleries at Budapest, Liverpool, Belfast, Glasgow, Vienna, and Paris, and a portfolio of his etchings is in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

"Mother and Child." From Dry Point, by Lee Hankey.

At the galleries of Kennedy & Co. is a collection of etchings and drypoints by David Young Cameron, with seven or eight plates not in the Rinder catalogue of the artist's works. The breadth and sensitiveness of Mr. Cameron's vision and the technical felicity of his workmanship have long been recognized by amateurs and critics, and it is interesting to find in the catalogue an extract from Rinder's larger catalogue giving an account of his origin and connecting his racial and ancestral inheritance with the special qualities of his work. Whether we consider his descent from the Gentle Lochiel, the only mild member of a clan of which the dominant trait was fierceness, as significant or not, it is easy to recognize the magnificent Scotch qualities of intelligent industry and stubborn perseverance in the following account of his efforts to release himself from a mercantile career.

"Before and after office hours, from 7 till 9 in the morning and from 7 till half-past 9 in the evening, Cameron was at the Glasgow Art School, laboring at the rudiments of craftsmanship. Within four years he freed himself from the routine of the counting house. In 1885 he entered the Edinburgh School of Art, and the same year joined the now extinct Scottish Atelier Society, where the late Arthur Melville was among artist-visitors from whose advice students profited. In 1887, Mr. George Stevenson, a friend of Sir Seymour Haden, commended some of Cameron's pen-and-ink drawings, and suggested that he should try to etch. In the house of this cultured amateur—who from 1881 till 1888 was a Fellow of the Painter-Etchers, and exhibited at its inaugural exhibition and several times later—Cameron first had an opportunity to study fine prints, and to Mr. Stevenson he owes the only instruction he ever received in the art of etching." With the etchings is shown an interesting painting of "Old Saumur" with a lightness in the shadows and a generally atmospheric quality lacking in the etching of the same subject.

A very fine collection of Rembrandt etchings is on exhibition at the galleries of Frederick Keppel & Co., with a large number of the Biblical subjects, and several of the portraits, beggars and landscapes, including the "Golf Player" of the last period and "The Little Polander" of the first. It is late in the day to comment on the artist's mastery in this field, but the following extract from Mr. David Keppel's preface has a note in it of fresh observation:

"The degree to which Rembrandt confined himself to the absolutely essential things was brought home to me a year or so ago in the following manner. In company with a famous European expert I was looking over some drawings ascribed to the master. I noticed that he examined with great care all the corners and less important parts of the drawing. If he found one line that was not absolutely full of life and meaning he threw the drawing aside, saying that it could not be by Rembrandt."

The exhibition of color etchings in the Stuart gallery of the New York Public Library has been replaced by a fairly representative collection of etchings by Frank Brangwyn, of which Mr. Weitenkampf says: "The boldness and freedom of these plates, and their size, make them quite predestined to serve as wall decorations, and this fact is emphasized somewhat by the manner in which they are displayed here. In Brangwyn's work it is perhaps less the line that is in evidence than strong and effective contrasts of light and shade, rendered in a large way, with vehemence and with big decorative effect. Much in this is due to manipulation in printing. Yet there are smaller plates by him, in which there is delightfully delicate biting in the background, indicating the ever-proper adaptation of means to end."

The exhibition will be on view until the middle of next January.

Other Exhibitions.

The exhibition of modern pictures at the Schultheis Galleries contains several of special interest. There is a coast scene by Alfred Stevens, executed with his peculiar perfection of surface quality, but quite unusual in composition. Between a dark gray sky covering more than a third of the panel and a strip of reddish foreground covering more than half of the remaining space, lies the sea, a band of jeweled blue with sparkling little waves. This division of the composition into three strips with clearly defined boundaries and almost no irregularity of outline has an effect that becomes ingratiating with familiarity. Each detail of the charming little figures walking on the wet sands tells at its fullest value, and the band of blue is admirable between the reddish orange and the gray. Another beautiful picture of only a few square inches in area is by Willam van der Berg, a girl in a red cap, an olive gray dress and a white collar, holding in her arms a gray stoneware jug into which she is putting a branch of ruddy leaves. The color has restraint and the relations among the color values are considered with a discrimination that comes to the artist straight from his forebears of the seventeenth century. There is also a group of ducks by A. Koester, a modern Dutch landscape painter who obviously has felt the influence of William Maris, but has kept to his own idiom and has escaped the banality of imitation. Among the American painters Jane Peterson is most favorably represented.

The Thumb Box Sketches by the Woodstock artists, which are on exhibition until Nov. 25 at the Belnord Modern Art Gallery, are, in the fashion of the moment, little pictures made for the public rather than memoranda made for the artists. They are fresh little pictures, however, in most instances free from the dreadful curse of overworking. Cecil Chichester is happy in his effects of sunlight. One delightful study shows sun patches on the walls of a house, further enlivened with green shutters and with red flowers in the foreground. Alan D. Cochran shows a nude figure out of doors that has a nice quality of color, John W. Bentley grasps the construction of a hillside with a sureness that shows genuine research, and Marion Bullard gets the sense of depth in snow and the value of patches of color against a snow background with marked success in her "White Day."

The lectures on art in the extension course for teachers at the College of the City of New York are given on Monday afternoons at 4:15 o'clock by Mr. Louis Weinberg. The remaining lectures for November are "Velasquez and the Spanish School," on Nov. 17, and "The Flemish and English Schools," on Nov. 24. On Dec. 1 the subject will be "French Art Before the Revolution"; on Dec. 8, "Classicism and the French Romanticists," and on Dec. 15, "Constable and the Barbizon Men."

AN AMERICAN STATESMAN

Horace White's Life of Lyman Trumbull Full of Disclosures of an Interesting Period in National Politics

THE LIFE OF LYMAN TRUMBULL. By Horace White. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. The Riverside Press. Cambridge. 1913.

A NATION, like a man, has a happy tendency to forget troubles, especially if a goodly degree of success follows them. "The Life of Lyman Trumbull," by Horace White, is valuable for its trustworthy disclosures of the inside history of American national politics in three momentous periods—that of resistance to the extension of slavery, that of the war for the Union, and that of reconstruction in the decade after the close of the war. From near the beginning of the first of these periods to the close of the last, Trumbull was a United States Senator from Illinois. He was a leader of great ability, of stanch loyalty, of generally sound and impartial judgment in a body that contained many eminent men. Until near the end of his career he was pretty steadily on the winning side, and he had much influence in shaping the policy of the Republican Party. He delighted in his work in the Senate, and had little ambition for higher office. He refused a foreign mission—that to England—and the only time that he seems to have considered a Presidential nomination was in 1872, when election was practically hopeless; unless, indeed, he may be said to have considered—and rejected—the possibility of the Presidency when he cast his vote for acquittal in the impeachment of Andrew Johnson for President.

Yet the story of the life of this eminently successful man has a special value, perhaps its chief value, in its intimate revelation of the difficulties, the errors, the intrigues and ambitions that attended the wonderful achievements of his day. Not that Mr. White does not give in just perspective the picture of Trumbull's contribution to these achievements. But, perhaps because the achievements are fresh in our knowledge or memory, the obstacles tend to engage most our attention. Particularly impressive is the trouble that Mr. Lincoln had with the office seekers. Their name was literally legion and they were of all sorts, from those fighting for Cabinet offices to those squabbling over Post Offices. The story of Simon Cameron and the War Office, with its traffic for votes in the National Convention and its weary tale of contracts, is about as sordid as anything in our political annals. It is true that President Lincoln had forbidden the Chicago bargaining, but finally he carried it out. Nor, according to the view of Trumbull, who was intimately associated with him, was Lincoln the man to spurn such negotiations save on the ground of expediency. He was a shrewd—a very shrewd—politician and manager of men, according to the standard of his day which, on the whole, was much lower than the standard of our day. He had the tremendous task of reorganizing the Government in the midst of civil war, primarily through his own party, which was only recently formed, was poor in men of experience, was a minority in the nation, and made up of varying and often conflicting elements. It is plain now that in making his appointments he thought more of consolidating public opinion and building support on which he could safely lean than he did of the specific fitness of his appointees for their places.

Trumbull had less taste and less gift for this kind of work than Lincoln, but he co-operated in doing it and maintained to the last close friendship with the President. But Lincoln never was to him a heroic figure. In the estimate of his character, written for his son, the Senator is very guarded in his praise and bluntly attributes to Lincoln motives and methods not of the highest. In the Senate, however, Trumbull was a faithful and very effective ally of the President. He came to the Republican Party from the Democratic camp, as Lincoln came from the Whig camp, and his native tendency was toward more radical views and shorter cuts in action, as was often the case with Republican-Democratic recruits. He felt deeply that slavery was the essential cause of the war and he was deeply anxious that the negroes should be protected as far as possible. He was the author of the Thirteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, was the chief advocate of the Civil Rights bill, and supported negro suffrage.

In the hot contest with President Johnson, Trumbull at first sided with the more radical Senators, but on the impeachment he voted for acquittal, one of seven Senators who "dared to do the right as they saw the right," and sacrificed his political future in doing so. During the first Administration of Gen. Grant Trumbull tended more and more away from the path his party pursued, and finally joined the "Liberal Republican" movement of 1872, and worked zealously, at first with many misgivings, for the election of Mr. Greeley. He retired from the Senate in 1873, at the age of 60, and resumed the practice of the law in Chicago, easily winning the leadership of the bar in Illinois.

The portrait Mr. White has drawn is a very attractive one, and not the less so that it is frankly a labor of love—which does not prevent it being discriminating and impartial. The distinctive trait we should say is loyalty. Trumbull had remarkable gifts in debate. He was cool, ready, pointed, and resourceful. He had penetrating judgment and a firm grasp of his case. He had not Lincoln's humor, but he had a clarity and vigor of statement which often gave the effect of humor. In discussion, as in personal intercourse, he was candid and courteous and instinctively a gentleman. Though associated with what in his active days was "the West" he was essentially a New England type, a descendant of the family which in Revolutionary times produced Gov. Jonathan Trumbull of Connecticut, whom Washington loved and trusted and to whom he gave the name, since traditional, of "Brother Jonathan," and John Trumbull, the famous painter. The value of Mr. White's volume is greatly enhanced by his own intimate knowledge of the period in the affairs of which he bore an active part.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE PROGRESSIVES AND SOCIALISTS

THE PROGRESSIVE MOVEMENT: ITS PRINCIPLES AND PROGRAMME. By S. J. Duncan Clark. With an Introduction by Theodore Roosevelt. Fifty cents. Boston: Small, Maynard & Co.

SOCIALISM means many things to many men for lack of such an exposition of its aims and principles as this book supplies for the Progressive movement. That the exposition of the movement is authoritative can not be doubted when vouched for by the personal conductor of the movement. Both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Duncan Clark insist upon the difference between Socialism and the Progressive movement.

Socialism, strictly speaking, is based upon Marxism and its objective is class betterment. The Progressive movement is not a one-man movement, and it is not based upon class consciousness. It is a mass movement for the common weal, the good of all. It is designed to secure to capital stability and a reasonable reward, as well as a living wage to labor. It is designed to limit or end child and woman labor as much for the benefit of others as of those dependent upon society for help, because self-help is prevented by society. The conservation of social force, and its direction toward the betterment of all members of society is the objective of the Progressive movement. It is impossible to withhold a tribute of admiration for its aims. The ethics of the movement is admirable and well expounded.

Perhaps it may be remarked with all sympathy that the aims of the Progressives are costly, and that their scheme makes scant allowance for meeting the bills. And not all the bills are financial. The Progressives are so ardent in their amiable purpose that they are willing to scrap our institutions, giving to an irresponsible majority power which might be more safely intrusted to an individual, but which nobody would dream of intrusting to any man. The book is inspiriting reading, and it can only be wished that its dreams may come true.

GROWTH OF ENGLISH

Amazing Development of the Language as Shown in the New Standard Dictionary's 450,000 Words

By JOSEPH JACOBS.

THE NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Prepared by more than three hundred and eighty specialists and scholars, under the supervision of Dr. Isaac K. Funk, Calvin Thomas, Frank H. Vizetelly. Funk & Wagnalls Company.

HOW dictionaries have grown during the last two hundred years! The first English dictionary worth considering was Bailey's, which appeared in 1721 and was by no means displaced by Johnson's in 1755. My father's library, I remember, had a copy of a new edition of Bailey printed somewhere in the 40's of the last century. The first edition of Bailey contained about fifteen thousand words, and the New Standard contains nearly thirty times as many, running to 450,000 words. In the interim between Bailey and the present day several new kinds of English have actually been brought into existence. Besides American-English there is Austral-English, recorded by Morris; Afrikander-English; Canook-English; Anglo-Indian English, which gave us one of the most readable dictionaries by Yule; and Pidgin-English, studied by Leland and others. Besides all these forms of spoken English there is the vast body of English dialects, now recorded for all time in Joseph Wright's monumental work, but practically unknown and unused by Bailey or Johnson. Fancy Johnson including Scotch words in his dictionary! Slang has been made the subject of a seven volume dictionary by Henley and Farmer.

In addition to this, science and technology have been learning to speak their cacophonous lingo with increasing volubility in their technical and artificially formed language, which probably exceeds the more natural outgrowth of English in its native country and affiliated lands. An absolutely complete English vocabulary would probably approximate a million words. There are no less than sixty thousand botanical species, and it would be absurd for a dictionary to give all of them, though the New Standard contains the simpler forms like "Ranunculus." Gould's glossary of medical terms is a substantial volume of over a thousand pages; and so one might go on through all the arts and sciences; Prof. Sylvester alone added hundreds of new words to mathematical phraseology. The editors of the New Standard claim to have rejected 63,000 words; but one only wonders at their moderation. These words were probably only marginal or doubtful words out of whole classes of words from the larger vocabularies of dialect and science which were ruled out of court on general principles.

Of course, nobody uses or knows all, or even the greater part, of this vast accumulation of verbiage. Max Müller contended that an English plowman only uses four hundred words, which is probably far below the limit, for students of applied psychology since his time have recorded three thousand words, used by children of three years old. Shakespeare's vocabulary, as recorded by Schmidt, amounts to about fifteen thousand words, including the longest word in the English language, "honorificabilitudinitatibus," (duly given in the Standard though docked of two syllables) if one can quite call it English. It would be interesting and useful if these vocabularies that have been collected by psychologists of recent years could be brought together and compared. We should then be able to judge the comparative usage of different classes of words, and it might be worth while for a future lexicographer to print the different words in different type, according to their relative familiarity; most of those contained in the New Standard Dictionary would have to be printed in diamond, the smallest type used, while "and," "the," and "be," would, on this scale, have to be put into scarehead type.

I have made a few rough experiments with the

New Standard Dictionary as to the number of words which ordinary folk can recognize at first sight. I find that the average well-educated American or Englishman can control from thirty to thirty-five thousand words; my own range is somewhat larger, (fifty thousand words,) while a learned jurist of my acquaintance would appear to be fairly familiar with fifty-five thousand words. Perhaps a professional dealer in words like Dr. Vizetelly the able managing editor of the New Standard, or Prof. Kittredge might be able to recognize at first sight from sixty to seventy thousand words. It would appear, therefore, that the New Standard contains ten times as many words as even persons with unusually wide vocabulary would ordinarily know.

There is obviously a limit to this expansion of vocabulary for a single-volume dictionary, and the New Standard Dictionary has probably reached its limit. Even in the Bible paper edition, which is a pleasure to handle and a delight to the eye, it is impracticable impossible to make continued use of it without some support. Yet, as the publishers fairly enough point out, one does not take a typewriter or cash register on one's tab and why should a dictionary be treated more casually? I suppose it will be regarded as a matter of course for the future that the dictionary of the encyclopedic type will always have its own stand. Some of the bulkiness of this and similar dictionaries is due to the fact that they stretch to some extent on the field of the encyclopedia and deal not alone with words but with things. The long and useful lists of coins, weights, colors, and the like, (the last rather awkwardly placed under the rubric "Spectrum") really transgress the fundamental principle of dictionary making, which declares that we should be able to find everything in dictionary order. This is the more to be since the chief characteristic of the New Standard, as compared with its competitors and its own previous editions, is to carry all its information in one alphabet.

There is indeed an immense improvement here due, as I understand, to the supervision of the managing editor, Mr. Vizetelly. Instead of having Biblical names in one supplementary list, a gazetteer in another, personal names in a third, noted names of fiction, &c., in a fourth, and so on, in the New Standard Dictionary we have all these in one alphabet, and you need not worry your brains to think out which of the different lists the particular word you are looking for is likely to be found. The amount of research time thus saved is by no means inconsiderable but the economy of irritation and ejaculation is still more satisfactory. The New Standard still retains a few survivals of the older practice; its foreign words and phrases are given in a separate alphabet probably because it would be ambiguous to have them in what is peculiarly an English dictionary. But, by the nature of the case, these are "foreign" phrases found in English books, and they might easily have been included in the general alphabet. The list of population statistics is also separately alphabetized, needlessly in order to get the latest figures. But this sometimes leads to absurd results, as when we get the population of Nutley without any information, whether it is the Nutley of New Jersey, South Dakota, or England. It is fair to add that in the majority of these names, the location is given in the body of the work. Altogether these exceptions serve only to confirm the rule, so widely laid down in the New Standard Dictionary, that a single alphabet is a boon and a blessing to all consulting it.

The New Standard Dictionary also contains what professes to be a History of the World Told Day by Day, in other words, a calendar of the year with the historical events of every day from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, arranged in chronological order. It is difficult to see what use this can be to any one, except journalists at a loss for editorial topics, who will be enabled to show off their erudition by stating that 300 years ago to-day something or other happened. To the ordinary man who wants to know when such and such an event did happen, this is of absolutely no use. With a little trouble, the large amount of information contained in this appendix could have been run in the general alphabet, instead of the plan of Haydn's or Haydn's "Book of Dates."

The growth of the Standard Dictionary in this matter of vocabulary has indeed been phenomenal. It is less than twenty years since the first edition appeared with its 304,000 words, at that time by far the largest English vocabulary contained in a single volume. Yet in this comparatively small space of time the words given, and for the most part defined, have grown to be half as many again. Advantage has, of course, been taken of the immense advance in English lexicography during that period and to the production of dictionaries of special English, to some of which I have referred above. But there is evidence throughout these pages of independent search in the press and literature of the day for the new aspirants for inclusion in the English vocabulary. We find recorded here the latest instruments of science, like the "ultra-microscope," or the latest medical fads like "opsonins," or "hormones"; we have given here "bobble skirt," with an excellent illustration; and the "tango" is aptly defined as "a dance, originally merely a diagonal shuffle, which has been elaborated and now contains a whirl, a dip, and a swing." We are also informed that it is a Spanish-American term and that a variant form of it is "tengo." Even such a specially New York term as "white wings," for the gentlemen who clean up our streets for us has been duly noted (under "white"—not under "wings"). If one wants to know what a "spug" is, one finds it here. No praise can be too high for this side of the New Standard.

I fancy that less care has been taken in bringing the proper names of the dictionary up to date. Wisely, or unwisely, these include a contemporary "Who's Who"; yet I fail to find President Poincaré, though his cousin, the great mathematician, is duly recorded; Le Bon, the founder of crowd psychology, seems to be lost in this crowd; in Germany Maximilian Harden, the leading journalist, and Houston Chamberlain, the leading Chauvinist, fail to appear; in Italy ex-Prime Minister Luzzatti and Ernesto Nathan, the masterful Mayor of Rome, have slipped through the meshes. Even the celebrities of the past have been sometimes harshly dealt with and dismissed to the limbo of non-appearance. Bailey, the first English dictionary maker of importance of whom I spoke above, has been ungratefully cast overboard; Britishness, the Lincaway of modern Germany, ought not to be unknown even to Macaulay's schoolboy; "Prince Charlie," who, according to Mr. Buchan, narrowly escaped becoming King of the United States, eluded my search for the date of his death till I found him under the "Stuarts"; why not under "Charles" or "Charlie" or "Charles Edward?" Illustrations such slips will happen in the best regulated of dictionaries, and the New Standard gives us so much that it is rather ungenerous to take an Oliver Twist attitude toward it. By the way, in the account of that hero, (under "Oliver," not under "Twist,") it might have been added that he "asked for more," a locution which has come into the language from the novel.

One feature of the older edition has been extended and expanded till it almost constitutes a new art of definition. It was a maxim of the older scholastic logic, "Demonstratio optima definitio," which might be roughly translated, "You can best define by pointing with the finger." Consciously or unconsciously the managers of the New Standard have adopted this slogan and have, for every common concrete noun, given an illustration. There are over 7,000 of these scattered through its pages, and, small as they naturally are in most cases, they are admirably clear and really illustrate. I am not thinking so much of the full-page inserts, which are more in the nature of pictorial adornments, but of the small insets which really illustrate the vocabulary. Thus, for example, it is scarcely necessary to read the text if one wants to find out what "chaparejos" are; the cut accompanying the word explains it to the sight; it might have been added that the Arizona cowboys call them "chaps." Mechanical devices, however complex, are best explained by this means. One could almost build a biplane from the elaborate detailed picture of one given on page 198 as an illustration to the rubric "aviation." As a mere matter of printing, the clearness of these cuts is a great triumph of typography as Bellows's French Dictionary was in its small size and clear use of diamond type.

One innovation of the present edition of the Standard Dictionary rubs my fur up the wrong way, if I may so express it. Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls have chosen to add to the ordinary spelling of common words what is known as the simplified spelling. Thus we are given "scool" as an alternative spelling to "school." Now, a dictionary is supposed to represent the current usage of the majority of educated people using the language. There are probably 200,000,000 people in the English-speaking lands, of whom about 120,000,000 can read and write it, more or less. I venture to doubt whether 100,000 of these would prefer to write "scool" to spelling "school." If so, to give this latter as an alternative spelling is to transgress the wise principle laid down by Dr. Funk in the first page of the preface:

> The chief function of a dictionary is to record usage; not, except in a limited degree, to seek to create it.

It is, however, fair to add that, in most cases, where the simplified spelling is given, a sign is put somewhat on the principle of the Scotchman who declared that "Glasgie is a gran' place to get awa' from." But this sign is not always given. I flatter myself I have read as much as most people about Æsop, having needed him in my business, and I hereby make affidavit that I never saw "Esopian" or "Esopic" spelt with a plain "E," as is given here in its alphabetic order, without even the alternate reference to the diphthong, where the proper spelling would have been found. However, this is not the place to discuss the merits or demerits of simplified spelling, and, besides, one must not use bad language in public print.

Having given utterance to this private grumble, I hasten to add that, taking the new edition as a whole, it is difficult to see how it could have been bettered as a practical working tool. It gives what one wants in the place where one is most likely to look for it; it puts the most usual usage first, and the etymology last, which is the last thing most people want to know about; most other dictionaries do the opposite. Phrases are treated almost as fully as single words. It even gives slang, though I do not find, either under "dog" or "try," the American version of "Fiat experimentum in corpore vili," though under "demnition" it anticipates Mr. Sulzer in "going to the demnition bowwows." It is just scholarly enough without being scholarly overmuch. The attempt has been given up to illustrate by quotations except the comparative few of the first edition, to which no additions of consequence seem to have been made. It would have been impossible in the space to give sufficient quotations, the main object of which is to show the history of the word which the Standard for practical purposes leaves for the most part out of account in definition and arrangement. Only proper names have a front capital, which enables one to pick them out with greater ease. The synonyms and antonyms of the first edition remain a useful feature, which enable one to get the individual word which Flaubert declared to be the object of all literary art. In short, for the present at least, Funk & Wagnalls's New Standard Dictionary is the fullest and most practical single volume dictionary of the English language.

JOAN THURSDAY

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

"Joan Thursday" is an intimate story of stage life on Broadway, relating how one girl got ahead in her chosen profession. Those who know admit that it is a true indictment! And the critics generally regard this as an important contribution to American fiction:

"A novel that places Mr. Vance in the front rank of American writers."—Chicago Evening Post.

"Good, honest work, better than any other Mr. Vance has yet done."—New York Tribune.

"Mr. Vance has made no mistake in joining the ranks of the realists."—Boston Transcript.

HARPER'S BOOKS

The Passionate Friends

By H. G. Wells.

The heroine in this great story is no mere creature of the imagination—she is part of life itself. Mr. Wells says some sharp things about our right to live our own lives, and he tells us how one man and one woman did it. "The Passionate Friends" is a good story—and much more.

A Changed Man

By Thomas Hardy

A new book to arouse the keen interest of every Hardy lover—and every reader of stories. These tales are like condensed novels—rich in Hardy's genius and idyllic of the Wessex country. We mingle in the lives of the romantic milkmaid, the dragoon, the knight, Alicia and the shepherd who saw.

The Way Home

By the Author of "The Inner Shrine." (Basil King.)

The pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Church, Brooklyn, devoted one of his evening addresses to "The Way Home." Several other clergymen have also preached about it, which may seem strange to you until you have read it, for "The Way Home" deals primarily with love. It is a frank story of single life, married life and business life.

The Coryston Family

By Mrs. Humphry Ward.

Heckling a woman is a ticklish sport, especially when the woman is Lady Coryston. And, sure enough, she lifts it to the heights of a battle of ideas in this, the finest story Mrs. Ward has ever written.

Partners

By Margaret Deland.

The postmistress lost her job after twenty years because she delayed the mail to help her neighbors. This story is about the girl, her mother—and those neighbors! It couldn't be called "Partners" unless there was a man, too, and the love story Mrs. Deland tells is one of genuine sweetness.

The Main Road

By Maude Radford Warren

VILLAGE LIFE

Miss Cholmondeley's Exquisite Work in "After All"

AFTER ALL. By Mary Cholmondeley. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

FEW who read "Red Pottage" have forgotten that remarkable book, or have ceased to hope that its author would publish a new novel. And now the book has appeared, and proves delightful reading, though it lacks the effect of something quite unusual which made the earlier story so unforgettable. Miss Cholmondeley is a born writer, however, and her books give one a charming sense of ease and finish; they possess, so to say, a graceful personality, something in the very warp and woof that wins and attracts, apart from the actual incidents or characters of the narrative. Though "After All" may not be so big a book as its immediate predecessor, it is one it would be a great pity to miss.

Most of the story passes in an old English village, though there is a brilliant glimpse of Paris and another of Teneriffe, among its flaming tropic flowers under the white sun.

Very skillfully has Miss Cholmondeley carried the deeper flow of the story under the light and simple chittering of village life. We seem to be intent upon the fussy enthusiasms of one of the aunts, or the more solemn emptinesses of the other; to be listening to the opinions of the Miss Blinketts (sic) or the struggles of the choir with a new anthem; yet all the while Annette and Roger are being revealed in their growing love, and Janey's little tragedy is unveiled, and we hear the coming and going of the footsteps of life.

The book is as unmistakably the work of a woman as one by Jane Austen. It is a woman's view of life we get, deep and rich though it is. Even the descriptive passages, which are enchanting, reveal the woman in the details they emphasize. That is one of the great charms of Miss Cholmondeley's books, and probably one of the explanations of the immense feeling of sincerity they produce. It is life as it is translated by a woman we get from her; and what other view should we get, since a woman is writing? Nevertheless, there are few women writers who are so distinctly and happily of their sex as this Englishwoman.

The story tells of a young girl who, in the despair and madness of her first encounter with one of life's ugliest revelations, is on the point of drowning herself. There she stands, staring into the Seine, rebelling with all the force of a gentle, deep-feeling, truth-devoted soul against lies and treachery and outrage.

And to her comes a man who knows slightly, a rich, inconsequential young Englishman, always ready for an adventure. Here is his description:

> He had the good looks, which he shared with some of his horses, of extreme high breeding. He was even handsome in a way, with a thin, reckless, trivial face, and a slender, wiry figure. He looked as light as a leaf, and as though he were being blown through life by any chance wind, the wind of his own vagaries.

Blown across Annette's path, he carries her away to Fontainebleau and to the beginning of her real story. As far as he goes he but flits across the girl's experience, throwing a momentary shadow upon her, and then vanishing, leaving her as free and untouched as when he met her. But this shadow persists. Annette, simply and gravely, as she accepts the rest of life, accepts it too, and is quite ready to take whatever consequences may ensue. But Dick Le Geyt has been the means of bringing Annette the friendship of an unusual woman, and this woman will not suffer a shadow to assume reality, possibly to wreck the girl's life.

> "It's the same as if I had," said Annette. "I meant to."
>
> "It is not the same as if you had," said Mrs. Stoddart, sternly. "If you mean to do a good and merciful action, and something prevents you, is it the same as if you had done it? Is any one the better for it?"

So Annette goes to the English village and the aunts.

There is nothing of the novelist's hero type about Roger. A thickset, slow-moving, slow-thinking Englishman, who turns purple under emotion but whose honesty the stars in their courses could not affect. It is a long while before he realizes what is the matter with him, but when he does he goes forward with the affair methodically.

> "Shall I do it now?" Roger said to himself. He made up his mind to speak when they reached the firs, now close at hand, with a low gray house huddled against them. He had never proposed before, but he stoutly supposed that if others could, he could.

But, stolid or not, Roger is good to know, good as the solid earth under one's feet, as high noon, as a strong arm when one is tired. And things happen to Roger that reveal to him what is and what is not worth while in life. He is not altered by the events which befall him, he is uncased, shaken free, realized. It is an achievement.

One lingers, chuckling, over the villagers, as one chuckles over "Cranford." The two old maids in the Hermitage, which is set so low that, looking from their parlor windows, they could only guess at the identity of the passers-by by their legs; and Mr. Black, the "handsomest vicar in the diocese," as the Miss Blinketts had heard affirmed "by one who knew a wide sweep of clergy, and was therefore competent to form an opinion." Then there is Mrs. Nicolls, who washes the clothes and determines the gentility of all the dwellers in Riff.

The grim household where Lady Louisa lies paralyzed trying through the prison of her disease to reach and rule her children as she had always done, that household where Janey is imolated day by day, where Harry at 23 plays children's games and is put to bed by a nurse; this, too, is presented with astonishing reality. And all the varying types, each in his or her little circle of personal importance, reflect forms of egotism, each quite unconscious of his own selfishness, but very much alive to that of the others. Against this background of self-seeking minds and hearts, Annette's utter generosity shines like a light; beautiful, too, is Janey's achievement of sacrifice, the author, Stirling a revelation, and Roger's awakening. But Roger, though slow to understand, was never selfish.

The book is a good book and a true book, with amusing insights into foibles and peculiarities and a fine comprehension of nobility, the sort of story to hand to some one you like with the words, "enjoy this."

"You Can"

A collection of brief inspirational essays by George Matthew Adams are published in a book called "You Can." The essays all relate to success which the author confidently promises to those who are willing to pay the price. "You can make success sure," he remarks to his readers, "by work, sacrifice, enthusiasm, unselfishness, and self-control." (Frederick A. Stokes Company. 75 cents.)

Edith Wharton

Has Scored Another Great Triumph in Her New Novel

The Custom of the Country

Leading Reviewers Place it Beside "The House of Mirth"; Declare it "Triumphant Fiction"; "A Graphic Story of Modern Life"; "Undine Spragg a Memorable Figure"

New York Herald:

"Apart from its quality of interest, 'The Custom of the Country', possesses a distinct value as a graphic picture of modern life both here and abroad, written by an experienced pen from an entirely new point of view."

Chicago Record-Herald:

"'The Custom of the Country' must take its place beside 'The House of Mirth' as representing Mrs. Wharton's art at its best. The novel is written with a flashing vivacity of phrase, crisp dialogue and entire naturalness of characterization. All the people are alive, but Undine Spragg is memorable; it would not be surprising, indeed, if her name became a synonym for the modern American type of Becky Sharp."

Miss Gilder in The Reader.

"This is the best story that Mrs. Wharton has written since 'The House of Mirth.' It belongs to the same class and is equally absorbing."

WOMAN'S GENIUS

What It Has Achieved in Scientific Discovery

WOMAN IN SCIENCE. By H. J. Mozans. D. Appleton & Co., New York. 1913. $2.50.

SPEAKING of the woman of genius, it was Goncourt who flippantly asserted: "Il n'y a pas de femmes de génie: lorsqu'elles sont des génies, elles sont des hommes." Long before Goncourt, and as late after him as our own enlightened day, this has been the pet fancy of those who argue the intellectual inferiority of woman to man. The woman who achieves in any field outside that of homekeeping, is regarded as the sporadic exception, a curious hybrid, and in no way a "true woman," thus outside the discussion. The more lenient of the discursists grant that the woman genius is not impossible, but that her creative power exercises only in matters emotional, that of abstract reasoning in any marked degree her mind is incapable. Hence women novelists, poets, and actresses here and there, but women scientists, women inventors, hardly ever.

A little general aid from the anthropologist and the psychologist, and the statement usually manages to stand unchallenged, the chief reason being that none has heretofore taken the trouble to collect the achievements of women in the field of abstract knowledge, and discount the difficulties with which women have had to struggle. There have been a few monographs in French, Italian, and German, a handful of magazine articles of recent date to pit themselves against the sweeping statements of the generalizers, but the valuable work of compiling the complete record of woman in science has been practically untouched. Dr. H. T. Mozans's present volume, "Woman in Science," is assuredly no labor of the market. Its pages are the outcome of long days at the University of Athens, of months at Bologna, Padua, and Pavia, of years of delving into the recorded lives of the great women of civilization. And not only does Dr. Mozans review the achievements of woman in mathematics, astronomy, physics, chemistry, the natural sciences, medicine and surgery, archaeology and invention, but he discusses her capacity for these things, a capacity which has been kept from realization by a too-confining environment.

This struggle with the inhibitions of an environment, created for her largely by the dominant sex, should, in Dr. Mozans's opinion, be discounted when remarking upon the relatively small number of women who have won fame in the field of science. A review of that struggle shows a more or less hostile attitude toward woman's education in all the leading epochs of the world's history, and whenever that attitude shows the truce, woman breaks through and captures the Theban or the French Academy Prize, as the case may be. The Athenian society which made a place for the hetaerae—those whom we should now rank among the demi monde—and which opened to them the doors of culture and higher knowledge, brought forth seventy-six women poets—to consider but one field of their endeavor. As Dr. Mozans points out, "when we remember that the Renaissance produced only about sixty female poets, though in a more extended territory and with a much larger population, and that none of them could approach the incomparable Sappho, or even many of her pupils, in the perfection of their work, we can realize the splendor or the achievements of the female intellect in the Hellenic world during the golden age of feminine poetic art."

But the ladies of Athens, those who were of the very flower of that State, were child-bearers and housekeepers only, seldom seen and never heard in public, following the advice of Penales when he said: "Greatest will be her glory who is least talked of among men, whether for good or evil." In the Roman Empire the attitude was different, and women responded gloriously to the opportunities offered them for intellectual development, calling forth the crabbed old Cato's disgusted remark: "We Romans rule over all men and our wives rule over us."

It is an interesting chronicle which follows the women of intellectual inclinations through the Middle Ages with their famous abbesses and warriors, through the Renaissance when women attained distinction in the Italian universities, through the days of the famous salons of Ninon de Lenclos, Mlle. de l'Espinosse, and Mme. du Deffand, to more recent times. Here the woman still has the struggle with an environment imposed by man; in England, Oxford and Cambridge are closed to her; in the United States she has had to put up a twenty years' fight for recognition in the medical colleges on the same footing with her masculine colleagues.

It is an artificial barrier which woman has had to break down in order to gain access to the education awarded the man. Not for a moment will Dr. Mozans countenance the argument of woman's innate inferiority to man as indicated by the size of her skull and the weight of her brain, and he offers the anthropologically minded a neat refutation of the theories usually advanced in proof of the assertion that woman is at best a half-grown, undeveloped man—man midway in his mental, moral, and physical development.

In spite of the restrictions which the man's idea of what a woman ought to be have placed about her activity, woman has fought her way to the front with her brother chemists, astronomers, mathematicians. The array of recognized women scientists which Dr. Mozans has presented, in page after page, in chapter after chapter, of their worthy and eminent work, should do more to still the chorus that harps on woman's lack of reasoning power.

But the hardest blow Dr. Mozans deals is to Proudhon and his fellow-followers, who claim that "women have invented nothing, not even their distaff." Practically all the essential comforts of home, claims Dr. Mozans, are due to the inventive genius of woman; woven cloth and the looms to weave it so, knives, flour-making devices, ovens, chimneys, salt, earthenware vessels—all originated in the woman's quick mind. Then follows an imposing collection of the patents granted to women during the past few decades, when the woman inventor has come into her own—a list including not clothespins and baby jumpers and hair crimpers alone, but cut-offs for hydraulic engines, coke crushers, processes for concentrating ores, devices for unloading boxcars, machines for driving hoops on barrels—hundreds of inventions which indicate a lively rush of women to such fields of invention as metallurgy, as civil, mechanical, and electrical engineering.

Again Dr. Mozans comes back to his initial assertion, that it is lack of opportunity rather than lack of intellectual capacity which has kept the woman on the edge of the field of science.

The reason for the sudden crop of woman inventors is not only the enlarged opportunity for general education, but the breaking down of the prejudice which has long existed against women having anything to do with the development of the mechanical or industrial arts. This breaking down process, rapid in our own young country, slower in those of the Old World, points to an era of the woman of genius. Quotes Dr. Mozans:

> Woman's long struggle for complete intellectual freedom is almost ended, and certain victory is already in sight. In spite of the sarcasm and ridicule of satirists and comic poets, in spite of the antipathy of philosophers and the antagonisms of legislators who persisted in treating women as inferior beings, they are finally in view of the goal toward which they have, through so many long ages, been bending their best efforts. Moreover, so effective and so concentrated has been their work during recent years that they have accomplished more toward securing complete intellectual enfranchisement than during the previous twenty centuries.

Not a word all this time about votes for women, for the writer wisely discusses science and not politics, but we have our suspicions as to where his sympathies lie. But he closes his scholarly and most courteous volume with a freshened hope—if such as Mme. Curié, Sénya Kovalevsky, Caroline Herschel, Della Nuttall, and Mme. Gaetano are not worthy to rank with Euler, Faraday, Liebig, and Leverrier, surely it is rare to prophesy that with the present increase in the opportunities at every woman's door none will make a use of them which will place a woman's name foremost in the annals of science. Dr. Mozans points out that in spite of feverish intellectual activity Germany waited long to produce a Goethe or a Bach; that France was empty of genius for many years before Napoleon and Molière. Our apparently sterile state of intellectual development is but temporary, he holds, and when the flowering of culture arrives women will have come pari passu with men, their companions, and the fruition will be double fold.

Modern Battles

ISLAM'S GROWTH

System of Propaganda Adopted by Mohammedans

THE PREACHING OF ISLAM: A History of the Propagation of the Muslim Faith. By T. W. Arnold, M. A. Charles Scribner's Sons.

IF every Christian trader and merchant, every Government clerk, schoolmaster, doctor, soldier, engineer, or workman who goes out to a non-Christian country regarded it as his duty to convert at least one man or woman to his beliefs, Christianity would witness a propaganda similar to that employed by Islam during the past thirteen centuries. As Mr. Arnold observes, the absence in Islam of the professional propagandist, apart from some recent attempts made in conscious imitation of the Christian missionary societies, the absence of any kind of priesthood or ecclesiastical organization has left the spread of Mahammedanism upon its individual believers with the result that one-eighth of the earth's population, scattered from Morocco to Zanzibar, from Sierra Leone to Siberia and China, from Bosnia to New Guinea, turns now each day toward Mecca, crying its simple statement of faith: "There is one God, and Mohammed is His prophet."

Recognizing the varied demands of the student of religions and of the casual reader, Mr. Arnold has given his digest of historic and polemic data in terms that blend scientific accuracy with an interest that takes on the color of romance. His work is marked by some features which distinguish it from preceding studies of the subject. He has not considered the persecutions, but has been satisfied with chronicling the details of the peaceful propaganda. And for this he has assumed the premise of the universality of the Islam creed from the beginning, accepting the statement of the Koran that Islam shall raise up one witness out of every nation. This position is at variance with that taken by scholars who consider Islam to have been ordained for Arabia alone, and who claim that its universality came about through unforeseen circumstances rather than design. In addition, he labors to refute the common conception that Islamic conversions have been made en masse through violence and force, believing instead that Mohammedanism is being spread through preaching and persuasion. In the light of his arguments, any reference to a "holy war" in the Near East, for example, becomes the merest contradiction in terms without basis in fact.

The reasons for the success of Islam, as Mr. Arnold gives them, are as follows: The simplicity of the creed, that it is so concise, so stripped of all theological complexities as to be within the grasp of the ordinary understanding; the simplicity of the Mohammedan's religious duties; the fact that each believer considers himself an apostle of the faith. At the present day, he tells us, there are two factors underlying the missionary activity in the Moslem world:

> The first of these is the revival of the religious life, which dates from the Wahhabi reformation at the end of the eighteenth century; though this new departure has lost all political significance outside the confines of Najd, as a religious revival its influence is felt throughout Africa, India, and the Malay Archipelago, even to the present day, and has given birth to numerous movements which take rank among the most powerful influences in the Islamic world. * * * Side by side with this reform movement is another of an entirely different character, viz.: The Pan-Islamic movement, which seeks to bind all the nations of the Moslem world in a common bond of sympathy. Though in no way so significant as the other, still this trend of thought gives a powerful stimulus to missionary labors; the effort to realize in actual life the Moslem ideal of the brotherhood of all believers reacts on collateral ideals of the faith, and the sense of a vast unity and of a common life running through the nations inspirits the hearts of the faithful and makes them bold to speak in the presence of the unbelievers.

Of the many branches of Moslem activity which Mr. Arnold describes, none are more striking than those now being pushed in Russia and in the Malay Archipelago; the first because the field of endeavor is controlled by an established faith wherein Islam has existed legally only since 1905, when the Edict of Toleration was promulgated; the second because it touches on our government of the Philippines, as has been shown by recent press dispatches from that colony to the effect that religious leaders of the Mohammedan faith have been consulted by the United States authorities. In Russia, especially in the Caucasus, thousands of natives who were nominally Christians previous to the Edict of Toleration have openly made their profession of the Islam faith, with the result that the Greek Church is doubling her activities in that region. Moreover, traders coming out of Kazan into Siberia are hearing the faith to the Mongol tribes, who are accepting it in such numbers as to alarm the Holy Synod. There are twelve million Mohammedans in the Russian Empire, a fact that is inciting the ranks of the orthodox to increased missionary activity.

The history of the Malay Archipelago furnishes evidences of a continuous Mohammedan growth. Arabian and Indian traders who first carried Islamism thither adopted the language and customs, married the native women, and by working with greater ability and more harmony than the natives established on a firm political and social basis Moslem communities which have gradually increased in power. Those settlers did not come like the Spanish in the sixteenth century, nor did they use the sword as an instrument of conversion, but simply, in the guise of traders, they employed their superior intelligence in the service of their religion. An indication of their growth can be gathered from the fact that in 1910 over 14,000 Malaysians made their pilgrimage to Mecca. Since the American occupation of the Philippines, Mr. Arnold says, the influence of Islam has been considerably restricted and is confined to Palawa, the south coast of Mindanao, and the archipelago of Sulu, though it is making headway in the northern islands and even in Manila itself.

PIONEERS

Archdeacon Brady tells a touching little story of a young couple making their home in the West. "forty miles from the nearest settlement on the far-flung frontier line, and that settlement itself hundreds of miles from a slowly approaching railroad." How toil and suffering, love, life, and death, and life again attend this great adventure are tenderly narrated in a booklet which, as its title imports, belongs to the season of outreaching sympathies.

FINDING HIS SOUL

FINDING HIS SOUL. By Norman Duncan. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. 50c. net.

The familiar story of the man who loses some one very dear to him, turns atheist in consequence, and is presently converted by any means the author's ingenuity may suggest, is retold in this Christmas booklet by Norman Duncan. The man in this case is James Falconteet, traveling salesman for a great shoe firm, the loss his only child, the means a trip to Jerusalem, and the deus ex machina an intelligent dragoman.

A FAMOUS ABBEY

Why Westminster Is England's National Palladium

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By W. J. Loftie. Illustrated by Herbert Railton. Philadelphia: The J. B. Lippincott Company. 1914.

ON board one of the great "liners" for London some American women were heard to boast that they were so busy during their annual season in English society that they had never entered Westminster Abbey, although they passed it hundreds of times. This, to a soul reverent of history and art, inspires something like horror, but it may be well to remember that there are also a great many smug people who have gone through the edifice and really not seen anything at all.

The charming book, "Westminster Abbey," written by W. J. Loftie and profusely illustrated by pen and ink drawings by Herbert Railton, would seem only to aggravate the misdemeanors of these American grandes-dames, did it not also make clear that Westminster is very much a matter of temperament, since it is the poetry of London, as contrasted with the official prose attractions of other monuments. An apparent confirmation of this occurred recently on the visit of an American boy to London, where, after failing to emit the least sign of enthusiasm for the Tower, St. Paul's, or anything else in the city, he begged to be taken back to Westminster Abbey and fell into raptures over its vaulting and traceries. The explanation may lie somewhere between a high sense of its antiquity, holiness, and the romantic charm of Gothic art.

The fact that the Abbey has been a show place for two or three centuries is apt to blunt the enjoyment of many visitors not possessed of a special bump of reverence or intelligence. Edward the Confessor seems to have been among the latter, for he declared that Westminster was "none other than the gate of heaven." Its ancient appellation of "locus terribilis" also denotes an antiquity and veneration none the less certain for the cloudy nature of the dates and particulars of its original foundations.

Mr. Loftie is clearer than most English writers in establishing the ecclesiastical status of Westminster as a monastic church in contrast to the cathedral and parochial foundations. While he sets aside many of the claims of its primitive charters and documents, he allows enough to preserve its character as a shrine that antedates and surpasses all that is sacred in London, and has become the national Palladium of England.

Mr. Loftie has very little patience with the modern so-called restorers, and he indicates with unsparing hand the questionable way in which they pretend to "work in the Gothic manner." Mr. Railton ably co-operates with him in his drawings of many of the out-of-the-way corners and delicate details of carving that are seldom seen by the visitor; the book, however, as a whole, fails to indicate the grievous injuries inflicted on the edifice at the time of the Reformation.

As for its modern history, there is little to hold the fancy, in spite of the many gorgeous scenes with which the Abbey church is associated. Among the numerous tombs and memorials with which modern generations have burdened its walls, hardly one out of ten is really impressive; monstrous tablets to minor personages have set the dominant note. Of course, there are a few memorable graves like those of Chaucer, Dryden, and Dickens, and some few others that satisfy the curiosity-hunter and amateur of epitaphs, although the Abbey is not an ideal preserve for these insatiable folk. They must be gratified, however, with the peculiarly modern note in the inscription on the tomb of William Laurence, dated 1621:

> Shorthand he wrote; his flower in prime did fade;
> And hasty death shorthand of him hath made.

The authorities of the Abbey seem to have had considerable trouble with would-be authors of epitaphs, and the latter were not without their own difficulties with such stern opponents as Atterbury, who would have nothing but Latin of the classical kind, and even defied his friend, the poet Prior, declaring that the English lines he had composed for his own tomb could not be placed in Westminster. This cheerful occupation of decaying noblemen is further exemplified in the lines for that doughty English prelate, Boulter, composed, perhaps, not by himself:

> He was born Jan. 4, 1671; he was consecrated Bishop of Bristol, 1718; he was translated to the Archbishopric of Armagh, 1724, and from thence to heaven, Sept. 27, 1742.

The Royal Commission sitting to consider the question of these memorials past, and those that threaten to come, has presented evidence to the effect that for perhaps a hundred years more there will be space for the tombs of the great and the influential within the Abbey; the proposal to remove the more incongruous tombs was halted when it was learned that the first to go would have to be those of Henry III. and IV.; whereupon Mr. Somers Clarke urged that "the fact that a monument is there is sufficient reason for not disturbing it." The author, Mr. Loftie, thereupon transmits the question to the lap of the gods with the final words:

> There is no shrine in Europe so sacred to the patriots of the country as Westminster Abbey to ourselves. The Pantheons and Walhallas of which we hear so often are but imitations. The continuity of our history is exemplified in the most tangible manner by this one church, and, in spite of mistakes and misfortunes, it continues to be, more than any other spot, the centre of England, and the British Empire.

THOMAS WALSH.

Costa Rican History

Henry Weston van Dyke, in a volume entitled "History of the Discovery and Conquest of Costa Rica," presents an excellent translation of an authoritative and scholarly work written in Spanish by Ricardo Fernández Guardia, an eminent citizen of Costa Rica, and not long ago the republic's Minister of Foreign Affairs. In this work, based on the author's painstaking study of the documentary material relating to his subject stored in the archives of the Indies at Seville, a full and detailed account is given of the operations of the Spanish explorers and adventurers who laid the foundations upon which the Republic of Costa Rica has been built. The narrative contains considerable interesting matter that does not appear in the works of other historians. There are fifty full-page illustrations in the volume and nine maps. (Thomas Y. Crowell Company. $3.)

LAND OF THE SPHINX

Mr. Cooper's Attempt to Fathom the Future of Egypt

THE MAN OF EGYPT. By Clayton Sedgwick Cooper. Illustrated. George H. Doran Company.

IT is Egypt, with its face to the rising sun, Egypt, the coming nation, that Mr. Cooper makes the theme of his study of the land of the Sphinx and the pyramid. He is interested in neither mummies nor temples, nor excavations, but he has tried earnestly to discover just what the Egypt of to-day means and what the Egypt of to-morrow will mean. He has been especially interested in the new education that is gaining a foothold in Egypt and in the influence it is exerting, and he has been unable to resist the desire to contrast this strongly with the old education. Accordingly there is an interesting chapter on El Azhar University, "the brain of the Mohammedan world," which gives in photographic description the methods, aims and ideals of the former Moslem conception of the training of the young.

The chapters describing the schools in which the present day boys and girls too, of Egypt get their manual, vocational and scholastic training help materially to show how the face of Egypt is changing and give an inkling of how much more it is bound to change within the next decade or two. For these young people are turning their attention to mechanical, engineering, and agricultural pursuits, and the girls are studying the latest ideas and ideals in domestic science. The young men are demanding educated girls for their wives, and sometimes those already married bring their wives to the schools.

But at the bottom of all the changes that are going on in that once changeless land Mr. Cooper puts the agricultural and industrial renaissance of the country. The Egyptian farmer, he says, has become a new and important factor in the life of Egypt during the last thirty years. There are more than 1,000,000 of these who own, each, upward of fifty acres of land and who will soon be no longer "'voiceless masses,' but citizens, with wealth, and vested rights and intelligent claims." A few years ago they were ignorant fellaheen, oppressed and robbed by the tax collector, putting out their eyes to avoid military service, neither having nor claiming any rights. "It is, indeed, doubtful," thinks Mr. Cooper, "whether history records another instance of so sudden a leap from abject misery and slavish poverty into the beginning of affluence and material prosperity as is now in evidence in agricultural Egypt." And to accomplish it there have been needed, he says, only the water for their land, which the English engineers have given, and the protection of the individual which has been afforded by English rule. The fellaheen have done all the rest.

Mr. Cooper finds also, among the significant features of Egypt's renaissance, the birth of a national spirit, a reviving national self-consciousness, which leads to the occasional outbreak of unrest under English rule. "With such an Egypt," the author significantly adds: "growing into a new self-confidence as a nation, England rightly appreciates that her real power lies not merely in her benevolence or her statesmanship, but in the potent evidence that she has a trained British Army behind her suggestions."

Mr. Cooper's aim, in short, has been to decipher for European and American eyes some outlines of the figure that stands for the present day spirit of Egypt. The figure is rather vague, as yet, but his account of it is interesting, because the view he gives is a new one of that much written about land.

Power of the Ideal

The nature of the Ideal and its power over the mind of man furnish the Rev. George A. Gordon, pastor of Boston's Old South Church, with the theme which he elaborates in "Revelation and the Ideal." He deals therein with two questions: "Does the Eternal God speak to man? If so, how?' He answers the first in the affirmative and it is his conviction that the second finds its answer in the high moral ideals which mankind from time to time seek to realize. (Houghton Mifflin Co. $1.50.)

BIRMINGHAM BOOKS

"So rarely anything new emerges from beneath the mass of contemporary fiction that the open-eyed wonder with which many of us will greet Mr. Birmingham's stories may well be pardoned. He obviously knows the ways of man and of the world at large, and his understanding of the life about him is both constructive and reflective."

The Novels of G. A. Birmingham, whose play, General John Regan, is a pronounced h[illegible], dedicated upon his success as a novelist.

Uniform Edition, 12mo, Net $1.20 Each

GENERAL JOHN REGAN

Who was General John Regan? Why was the mysterious and go-ahead American so anxious to put Ballymoy on the map? Ballymoy, a sleepy, sunlit Irish village, is roused into a frenzy of self-appreciation by the suggestion of a stranger from across the Atlantic. Hilarious scenes follow, in which Government officials play their part. The sheer comedy and high spirits of both the novel and the play are irresistible and tonic.

THE ADVENTURES OF DR. WHITTY
A round of adventures so absurd and whimsical that we are convinced of their happening—in Ireland.

SPANISH GOLD:
A Novel of Adventure
The rarest piece of comedy imaginable, vastly amusing, permeated with fascinating dialogue and alluring adventure.

LALAGE'S LOVERS:
A Lover's Story
In the person of Lalage, the Irish tomboy who becomes possessed of a reformer's zeal, Mr. Birmingham has created a character as sweet as she is wilful, and as winning as she is audacious.

THE SEARCH PARTY:
A Clever Story of Homely People
A large-hearted, vivacious and genial book, wherein one absurd situation treads close upon the heels of another.

THE SIMPKINS PLOT:
A Farcical Comedy
The history of a droll error and its consequences in the further adventures of the elusive J. J. Meldon.

THE MAJOR'S NIECE:
An Uncle's Experiment
One of the happiest of Mr. Birmingham's novels, discussing with grave-faced Irish absurdity the folly of applying science to the upbringing of children.

PRISCILLA'S SPIES:
A Yachting Adventure
Priscilla the irresistible, the sworn enemy of propriety and sedateness, is Mr. Birmingham's most invigorating heroine.

THE RED HAND OF ULSTER:
An Irish Rebellion
Gun-running on lonely coasts, fugitive love-affairs, burlesque fights with British military—these and other wild diversions follow the landing of an American millionaire in Ireland.

FLIES AND OTHERS

Fabre's Absorbing Biography of the Fly

THE LIFE OF THE FLY. By Jean Henri Fabre. Translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. Dodd, Mead & Co. 1913. $1.50.

FOR each individual, Jean Henri Fabre is a discovery. No matter to what extent one has been prepared by overenthusiastic descriptions of this poet-scientist, the initiation into his pages is an experience breath-taking in its novelty. If the unscientific of mind accept this statement at all, they will accept it with grave reservations as to its soundness. And with reason. They have been told of the marvels that lie between the two surfaces of a green leaf, and they have squinted hopefully through the microscope at cross-sections, and they didn't see any marvels. They concluded, and rightly, that the wonders of science are for certain peculiar and not usual types of imagination. Hence, when these hear that Jean Henri Fabre is a naturalist, concerned with greenbottle flies and spiders, they will, in spite of the most alluring of qualifying adjectives, pigeonhole him as "dry reading."

The only way is to bait them with a choice morsel. Take for instance the chapter on the caddis worm from "The Life of the Fly," a collection of essays in the translation of Alexander de Mattos from Fabre's epic work, the Souvenirs Entomologiques. As an example of a pure and singularly vivid style it deserves the reading, but disregards style. Consider the chapter merely as a bit for the roving Philistine eye. But Mr. H. G. Wells in his most inspired discussions of marvels on Mars never held attention closer than Fabre, as he describes the manner in which the curious little water grub builds its sheath of roots and shells. At first a basketmaker, it weaves and twists a polygonal affair, which would do credit to an expert weaver of willow; then follows its mature period, when it builds with beams and joists and well-placed laths. Watching at his glass pond, Fabre sees every movement which the tiny grub makes; he watches it spin a suspension hammock, from which to begin building operation; he sees it grasp the foundation root, balance it by the middle, fasten it in place, with a touch of silk, then add bit by bit to the structure at intervals measured exactly by the swing of its body from side to side as it turns around in its narrow shaft like a bricklayer in the chimney he is building.

Then, by way of pretty experiment, he takes away the sheath just builded and supplies the bewildered grub with grains of rice. The result is a tower of shining ivory, as regular as though it were laid out with line and compass. And next, a little investigation into the caddis worm's knowledge of hydrostatics. How keep afloat when the specific gravity of every part of the house is greater than the water? It took even the observant Fabre hour upon hour of patient watching to discover it, for such matters have not been written down in books nor can they be investigated by scalpel nor seen through the microscope. Climbing to the surface of the water by means of water-grasses, the caddis fills with air the vacuum which it can make in its sheath by drawing out its body a short distance, and accordingly the tiny skiff floats.

To what purpose all this? Not, at all events, to uphold any law or complicated theory; there is no such thing as Fabrianism. Fabre seldom drew general conclusions and he was keenly and wisely aware of the limits of human knowledge; he never presumed beyond these limits.

> What inspiration urges the grub toward its food at the bottom of the clod, what compass guides it? What does it know of those depths, of what lies therein or where? Nothing. What does the root know of the earth's fruitfulness? Again, nothing. Yet both make for the nourishing spot. Theories are put forward, most learned theories, introducing capillary action, osmosis and cellular imbibition, to explain why the caulicle ascends and the radicle descends. Shall physical or chemical forces explain why the animalcule digs into the hard clay? I bow profoundly, without understanding or even trying to understand. The question is far above our inane means.

Fabre studied instinct; he studied life in the very act of living it. Hence he is not dry reading, and his words may be believed:

> You rip up the animal and I study it alive; you subject cell and protoplasm to chemical tests; I study instinct in its loftiest manifestations; you pry into death, I pry into life. And why should I not complete my thought? The boars have muddied the clear stream; natural history, youth's glorious study, has, by dint of cellular improvements, become a hateful and repulsive theory. Well, if I write for men of learning, for philosophers who, one day, will try to some extent to unravel the tough problem of instinct, I write also, I write above all things for the young. I want to make them love the natural history that you make them hate; and that's my aim, while keeping strictly to the domain of truth, I avoid your scientific prose, which too often seems borrowed from some Iroquois idiom.

It is the refusal to accept the cut-and-dried, above all the unique imagination of Fabre's informing rather than creative, which raise him to a different plane from that of the respected but unintelligible scientist whose jargon is all his own. Fabre presents the familiar, which is usually the most remote from us, in a piquantly intimate fashion. Read of his introduction to algebra. A master at the university, he had, nevertheless, no inkling of the meaning of algebra, yet he really agreed to tutor a youth in the subject. With a book he might scrape up enough knowledge to meet that first lesson, but twenty-four hours away. But he has no book and no money to buy one. His key fits that of the science master's library. He steals the book, making a hunting job of it, too. Then he encounters algebra.

> A chapter catches my attention in the middle of the volume; it is headed, Newton's Binomial Theorem. The title allures me. What can a binomial theorem be, especially one whose author is Newton, the great English mathematician who weighed the worlds? With my elbows on the table and my thumbs behind my ears, I concentrate all my attention.
> I am seized with astonishment, for I understand. There are a certain number of letters, general symbols which are grouped in all manner of ways. There are arrangements, permutations, and combinations. Pen in hand, I arrange, permute, and combine. It is a very diverting exercise, upon my word, a game in which the test of the written result confirms the anticipations of logic and supplements the shortcomings of one's thinking apparatus.
>
> "It will be plain sailing," said I to myself, "if algebra is no more difficult than this."
>
> I was to recover from the illusion later, when the binomial theorem, that light, crisp biscuit, was followed by heavier and less digestible fare.

Indeed, the general reader need not be scared off by the title of this collection of informal essays, for while there is much about flies, there is still more about a number of other things. A chapter headed Heredity turns out to contain a quaint portrait of grandmother, whose round of ideas comprised pickles, hemp, chickens, curds and whey, washing the clothes and minding the children. There is a bit about school days, too, with accounts of the stew pot in the middle of the classroom, and how the master could draw garlands and doves, "what a man, to draw you a Holy Ghost with a stroke of the pen!" Quite much that is vivid and quaint, much that is sober and sound, every page that has come from Fabre's pen presents a firmness and a purity given by a noble aim always before his view. His closing word sums his endeavor: Laboremus.

STORY OF SOUTH AFRICA

THE MAN BETWEEN. By Walter Archer Frost. Illustrated. Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.25 net.

The author of "The Man Between" may be congratulated upon his discovery of an unfamiliar and ingenious plot. The scene of the tale is South Africa, where, it will appear, almost anything may happen. From the very beginning this strange, somewhat uncanny atmosphere is dilated upon in its contrast to the shrines and theatricals and gatherings at the club which resemble others of the kind all over the world, so that when the witch doctor flings his curse at the six men who had mocked him, the reader, like John Ormsby, is not unprepared to have it take effect.

The book is apparently the work of a novice; it lacks light and shade, and also skill in the use of the written word. Again and again the impression for which Mr. Frost has striven he has failed to produce, alike in the handling of his theme and in the development of his heroic character through the appalling trial he was obliged to undergo. In spite of its deficiencies and crudities, however, this novel is decidedly promising. There is a feeling for character, shown more especially in the women than in the men, and a dramatic sense, somewhat feeble as yet, but which will doubtless gain strength with time; in this present story it is often defeated by an absence of simplicity—sometimes, as in the two last chapters, by mistaking the scène à faire. But those faults are—many of them—merely those of inexperience; they have been dwelt upon because "The Man Between" makes one feel that its author has possibilities.

ENGLISH HISTORY

Impartial and Comprehensive Work by Mr. Innes

▲ HISTORY OF ENGLAND FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PRESENT DAY. By A. D. Innes. Illustrated. Putnam's. $3.50.

AMID the mass of historical literature which pours every year from the press it is not very often that there appears a volume which attempts to tell the entire story of the development of a country from the earliest known times to the present day. Studies of particular periods, surveys from one point of view or another and biographical monographs are common enough, but a history that a general reader may pick up with the assurance that he will find, told in an interesting fashion, all the main facts which have gone to make up the life of a nation are few and far between.

Of course the main reason for this is the difficulty of the task and the feeling that the field is already covered. It, indeed, calls for the exercise of the nicest judgement to determine how much space should be given to this or that side of the subject, and yet to present a fair view of the whole. It is not by any means as certain that there is not room for another good general history of England.

School books there are in plenty, but school books are in most cases intolerably dry. The pedagogic mind likes its dates and its names, and looks askance at anything approaching generalization. Views are dangerous when the young have to be taught, and it is far safer to require accurate information with regard to acts of Parliament and unimportant battles than to set forth ideas which may trench upon the prejudices of pupils or their parents. Goldwin Smith, indeed, wrote a brilliant essay on English history, remarkable for its epigrams and the boldness of its characterizations, but every one does not see historical tendencies in the same light as did the Sage of Toronto, and John Richard Green by the very title he selected, "A Short History of the English People," betrayed the bias with which he wrote.

So the bulky volume which Mr. Innes has given us should be welcome to all men interested in history and yet not concerned with the detail which the examination hall requires. In 1,000 pages he has set forth the story of 1,000 years, and he does not seem to have any moral he wishes to enforce. The development of the British Isles has indeed been from a primitive form of democracy through something approaching pure absolutism to democracy again, but Mr. Innes, as he writes, does not find it necessary to assume that one form of government is essentially better than another. The changes which occurred are facts, and as facts he relates them.

Even as he discusses such a period as that of Charles I. he is not elated by the growth of parliamentary rights and the establishment of checks on the powers of the Crown. He explains how the Commons made good their claims, but he points out at the same time that in all probability legal doctrine and the precedents of ages were against them. They won, and it would be foolish to take the position of the Whits Rose League that they were in the wrong, but it would be equally stupid to assume that Charles I. and his advisers had no excuse on their own side.

In the same tone Mr. Innes records the struggle between this country and England. Without prejudice, with complete fairness, he sets forth the issues, and he represents clearly the argument of the British Ministry that it had the right to tax the Colonies, and the position of the latter that their external commerce might be regulated and an income obtained incidentally thereby, but that no direct impost on internal trade might be levied.

Moreover, in Mr. Innes's discussion of this particular epoch comes out another of the merits of his book. He has taken to heart the teaching of modern strategical students and has given a clear account of the effect on the great struggle of the movements of rival armies and navies. If he has dwelt little on the sentimental side of the alliance between France and the United States, and if he has seldom in any part of his book cared to go into details of individual battles, he has remembered that campaigns have had the greatest effect on the rise and fall of nations. From his pages one can gather a clear idea of the importance of the addition of France and Spain to the enemies of England and can see plainly how the temporary loss of her command of the sea on this side of the Atlantic sealed the fate of her supremacy in America. His readers need no technical knowledge to appreciate the effect of world-wide strategy on the course of history.

So, too, Mr. Innes has given more attention than many of his predecessors to Irish and Scotch events. Too often historians have treated Scotch and Irish history as apart from occurrences in England, and have mentioned them only as they happened to force themselves upon the attention. Yet, there was constant action and reaction between them, and it is impossible to understand, for example, the history of Queen Elizabeth's reign without a lively appreciation of the tremendous influence on her international policy played by Scotland.

A special word should be said of the pictures with which Mr. Innes's book is illustrated. They have been selected by S. G. Stubbs, and to an unusually large extent are novel. They are taken in a vast majority of cases from documents contemporary of the times with which they deal, and they bring before the modern reader the way in which common objects of life appeared to those who used them. Caricatures, medallions, illuminated manuscripts, and early prints have been laid under contribution, and the result is an original and most interesting set of representations of things as they really were.

BOYS IN CAMP

Ten boys, headed by the Townsend twins, rent a Summer camp in the Adirondacks. They have any number of good times, play baseball, put out a fire, have an encounter with "ghosts," and enjoy themselves thoroughly. A trip to the Ausable Chasm is one of their pleasures, and they also pay a visit to Fort Ticonderoga. Incidentally Cousin Willis, once a spoilt baby, becomes a manly lad. The story follows the usual cheerful course of such tales, with no startling innovations of any kind.

NIETZSCHE

Mr. Hill's Appreciation of His Philosophy

THE PHILOSOPHY OF NIETZSCHE. An Exposition and An Appreciation. Georges Chatterton-Hill, Ph. D. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Pp., 302. $2.50 net.

THE manuscript of this volume the author tells us in his preface, was finished in 1905, since which date much has been written about Nietzsche, but nevertheless the volume before us is a contribution of considerable value to the literature of the subject. The book is divided into two parts of which the first treats of Nietzsche's personal characteristics, and also to a considerable extent with his attitude toward Christianity and other fundamentals of the philosophic thought of the time, while Part II. deals with more difficult aspects of Nietzsche's system dealing with will, the relation of master and slave, and the now familiar doctrine of the superman.

Avowedly appreciative, Mr. Chatterton-Hill presents a very lucid and interesting account of the personal characteristics of his master. The writer insists with some justice that Nietzsche does not deserve the criticism so often passed upon his philosophic system that it lacks coherence and consistency. He argues that Nietzsche's system may be applied to the solution of the fundamental problems of philosophy and sociology, but that we should be committing a grave error if, in studying Nietzsche, we should make abstraction of the personality of the author. This, in view of Mr. Chatterton-Hill's own presentation of Nietzsche's personality, makes the theory of the superman even more difficult of acceptance, than if we are permitted to regard it as an abstraction.

The biographical portion of the work is sympathetically written, with the enthusiasm of the special pleader, and yet with the restraint imposed by a refined and scholarly style. It does not materially add to our knowledge, however, nor does the whole of the first book for that matter. An interesting point in the second chapter is that in which the importance of the Greek influence upon Nietzsche is discussed. His study of Greek art, the author tells us, of Greek philosophy, and of Greek drama not only enabled him to attain to a clearer conception of the Hellenic culture, but it was destined to have most important effects upon his intellectual evolution and on his conception of life in general. Later we are told:

> Nietzsche is an artist, and as an artist he sees life as a manifestation of beauty; he sees life as synonymous with the will of power, of domination; and this will of power, realized by the Greeks in their conquering activity in all domains, is itself but the expression of the love of life, of the affirmation of life, of the wish to live and to live wholly.

While the author does not say so, this lucid explanation of Nietzsche's source-influence, Hellenism, provides a very clear raison d'être for his anti-Christian tenets. It is impossible to trace our way with the author through all his explanations of the conception of Nietzsche upon the minor amenities and philosophies of life, but his treatment of Nietzsche's conception of art is interesting, not only in itself, but because of his statement that "Nietzsche's conception of art contains all Nietzsche." The brief statement of Nietzsche's general position and summarization of his ideals may indeed be commended as a lucid and succinct exposition of the views of the German thinker for those who are not familiar with these, and do not care to study them more deeply.

Just as Nietzsche found the State one of the great obstacles to the realization of his ideals, so did he find Christianity, or at least its popular expression, equally a bugbear. Much of the criticism leveled against Nietzsche has been directed against him because of his attitude toward the religions in general, and Christianity in particular. The chapter in which Mr. Chatterton-Hill deals with this subject is one of the best in the book, and probably the best exposition of the whole subject available in English.

In his second book Mr. Hill deals with the more original contributions of Nietzsche to philosophy—if they were original. The first chapter of this part deals on the whole lucidly with the familiar Will of Power, which the author says is a fundamental postulate for Nietzsche. The author discusses Nietzsche's "extreme skepticism," as he calls it, "in the domain of abstract theoretical reasoning," very frankly, and asks whether it does not destroy his whole position, as undoubtedly it does.

Nietzsche has carried the conception of natural selection and the survival of the fittest further than any other thinker, says Mr. Chatterton-Hill, "and Nietzsche's theory of knowledge is based in all its points on biological science."

The doctrine of the "Overman" is dealt with at length, and, it seems a pity to report, without the clarity which distinguishes the rest of the book. It forms a very technical chapter, and one feels that the author has put aside his habitual impartiality and appears in the light of an advocate.

An interesting chapter is that on Nietzsche and Max Stirner, full of interesting comparison between the two men and their philosophies. Finally there is a very good attempt at an appraisal of Nietzsche's system, and, what is more to the point, of his contribution to the common-weal. In a striking passage Mr. Chatterton-Hill tells us:

> We may like or we may dislike that vision of the Overman which he has held out to us, but the lesson which we have to learn from Nietzsche is that no people, no race, no individual, can live without an ideal.

No opponent of Nietzsche's teachings will quarrel with this statement, or dispute the value of Nietzsche's having presented it.

EMANUEL STERNHEIM.

ETERNAL YOUTH

WHEN I WAS A LITTLE GIRL. By Zona Gale. The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

No one has written so understandingly and tenderly of romantic old age as has Miss Zona Gale; and now she shows an equal insight into the elusive spirit of childhood. Too many of us permit that spirit to die within us, only a few facts of our early days existing as a faint and far-off memory. Miss Gale's preface shows that she has kept her child-self alive and vivid, and therefore it is that she has been able to write this book. It is not an autobiography nor a continuous narrative; it consists of detached scenes in the life of the little girl, with the feelings and fancies which each evoked. Most of these are illustrated by tales which are really allegories, but which will charm a child "at their face value," whether or not they yield up to him their subtle inner meanings.

Upon the whole, the message of the book is more to grown-ups than to children, helping us to recapture not only the vanished days, but the vanished spirit with which we met them; and so giving us, with our love for the little people around us a clearer perception of their attitude toward life, and, it is to be hoped, something of the vision and tact of the parents and grandmother in whom the child of the tale was so signally blessed.

That Miss Gale has told her story in exquisite fashion need not be said. Her literary touch is always true and sure. She is happy in her illustrator. Miss Agnes Pelton has caught the ethereal quality of the book, reflecting it in her fairies and "Theys" and in the spirituelle little maid herself. "The Great Dew" and "the Great Black Hush" are delightful monsters, just scary enough to be alluring. Text, pictures, and format combine to make "When I Was a Little Girl" an ideal gift for all who have kept the child heart or who would fain find it again.

THE NEW AUSTRALIA

ONE of the most important events in the world's history during recent years was the creation of a new nation in Australia by the federation in 1900 of the various English colonies established there during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. This brought under one flag five millions of people and three millions of square miles, a much larger area and population than the United States in 1787. It is true that the interior of Australia is regarded as a desert nowadays, but there was a time, also, when the Great American Desert figured largely, even on the maps of our own country. The population of Australia is more distinctively Anglo-Saxon than South Africa or Canada, or even the United States, and its future will be a striking test of the possibilities of Anglo-Saxon blood and traditions in tropical and sub-tropical climes.

Mr. Wise has told in this book the history of the attempts which led up to the final federation in 1900. It is mainly personal in character, dealing with the attempts of Sir Henry Parkes, who was the father of the movement; Sir John Robertson, Sir Edmund Barton, and Sir George Dibbs. The book is mainly devoted to the acrimonious debates in the New South Wales Parliament, which was the centre of the conflict, that being an economic as well as political one. New South Wales had been predominantly for free trade, whereas most of the other colonies were for protection. Now it was obvious that the new Federal Government would have to get its working expenses by a general tariff law. The Free Traders of New South Wales were naturally opposed to this and delayed the consummation of federation for over ten years.

This, in short, is the history of the movement described by Mr. Wise, but he fills this outline in by vivid personal details and characterizations of the chief warriors in the struggle. Very few of the names are likely to be known to American readers, who cannot, therefore, be expected to take much interest in these personal details, but students of history will be interested in observing the same forces at work in producing the United States of Australia as were effective in giving rise to the United States of America.

A Book of Verse

A small volume entitled "The Drift of Pinions" contains a collection of poems by Marjorie L. C. Pickthal, and among them readers of American magazines will recognize old and esteemed friends. The poems have a distinctly dainty quality, especially those in which the author sings of the birds, flowers, sunshine and starlight and other charming things the wanderer sees as he moves about in field and forest. VALENTINE

By Grant Richards

Author of "Caviare"

What American Critics Say:

"'Valentine' is a good story about enjoyably human people, told with the rich personal charm of the accomplished raconteur."—Boston Transcript.

"A bright story, 'Valentine,' with the glow upon it of a youthful, warmly human personality."—New York World.

"Grant Richards has followed his delightful story of 'Caviare' with one that rivals it in novelty and charm."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

"If you want something out of the routine, something that will make you forget you are reading a novel, get 'Valentine.'"—Boston Globe.

What English Critics Say:

"'Valentine' is a far better novel than its predecessor, 'Caviare.'"—London Athenæum.

"Cheeriness, youth, high spirits, and the joy of life—these are the principal ingredients of Mr. Grant Richards' new novel. They were indeed the mainstay of his earlier story, 'Caviare'; but 'Valentine' is, if anything, younger, happier and more irresponsible than its predecessor."—London Daily Telegraph.

JOHN AYSCOUGH, whose story entitled "A Beginning—at Rallham," will be completed in the December number of The Catholic World, has become a personality in this country since the publication of his "Gracechurch" by Messrs. LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. As a matter of fact he is a dual personality. Even more surely than Canon HANNAY of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, until recently kept his clerical identity distinct from that of GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, the humorous writer, has Mgr. FRANCIS BICKERSTAFFE-DREW, one of the most distinguished of English Catholic prelates, kept his clerical life distinct from the literary life of JOHN AYSCOUGH. But the boyhood impressions of JOHN AYSCOUGH, set down in "Gracechurch," are those of the Church of England clergyman's son, who had a leaning to Catholicism in his childhood and "went over" to the Mother Church while he was at Oxford. As a cleric he has received many honors and has labored with zeal for the advancement of his Church in England. As a writer of charming essays and tales he has provided mental refreshment for many thousands who are not concerned with doctrinal distinctions. It is scarcely a matter of opinion that "Gracechurch" is a good book which cannot fail to benefit its readers. Needless to say, it is not a doctrinal book. Barring a casual priest or two and an old Irishwoman, its personages are Church of England folk with a slight sprinkling of commendably humble dissenters. It is not a satirical or ironical book, but it denotes human foibles with unfailing accuracy and kindly humor. It is, in short, a true picture of life without a suspicion of "modernity." England was inhabited by people like the Gracechurch folks when JOHN AYSCOUGH was a boy, and they have not all been driven out yet by any means. They are not the people Mr. BERNARD SHAW encounters and portrays, but they are not less lovable for that reason. "Gracechurch" deserves to be read by all persons who like to get out of modern rush occasionally. Our reviewer pointed out its resemblance to "Cranford," and this would be recognized by anybody who has read "Cranford." Is that book read nowadays? It must be said for "Gracechurch," however, that it is no imitation; it is a real thing.

THE Holiday Number of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, to be published Nov. 30, will surpass in rich variety of interest any previous special number of this publication. To begin with, it will contain, besides the customary list of books suggested by their publishers as particularly well suited to the requirements of holiday book buyers, an extended list of the ONE HUNDRED BEST BOOKS OF THE YEAR, selected especially for this number by a committee comprising Prof. JOHN ERSKINE, Dr. CARL VAN DOREN, and Dr. H. R. STEEVES of the Department of English of Columbia University. This will be prefaced by Prof. ERSKINE with an introductory article, while each book will be briefly but adequately described by a competent reviewer. The value of such a list can hardly be overestimated, as it will comprehend all departments of literature, and the selection will be careful made with indisputably high literary authority. Another novel and important feature will comprise four articles on four books of the year on vital and controversial subjects by prominent authorities on those subjects. Each book will be chosen by the writer of the article upon it as the best in its particular field. Thus the foremost books of the year dealing with matters of common and persistent discussion will be indicated and the reasons for the distinction thus accorded them set forth clearly in the authoritative reviews. Contributions from other writers of national distinction will add to the interest of this extraordinary number of THE TIMES BOOK REVIEW, and a noteworthy feature will be an informing article on the gift books and richly illustrated books put forth for the Christmas season. Of course, the special features will not crowd out the accustomed timely articles on the newest books of the day or the full budget of news of the world of books. To accommodate all these valuable contributions, the Holiday Number will be the largest ever issued. It will be printed on special paper of a fine quality, and will be illustrated. This Holiday Number has a large special circulation throughout this country and among Americans temporarily dwelling abroad. It is especially prized, too, by booksellers, but it is made primarily to meet the requirements of the book buyer who believes that books are the best gifts for his friends of all ages.

SEVERAL persons have kindly pointed out that the incident which forms the pivot of the mystery in Mrs. BELLOC-LOWNDES's clever story, "The End of Her Honeymoon," is a tolerably ancient invention, and was used once, perhaps, in a Paris newspaper "fake." What of it? All that we claimed for the book was that it introduced a new kind of mystery in detective fiction, and that the reader's interest in the story was maintained to the end. There is positively nothing new, anywhere, as even radium was imagined by Lord LYTTON sixty years or more ago. But it is good art to use an old idea in a new way. Moreover, one might have heard of this imaginary incident a hundred times without anticipating in the reading the climax of this particular story.

MR. ARTHUR ACHESON'S book on "Mistress Davenant, The Dark Lady of Shakespeare's Sonnets," published last April by BERNARD QUARITCH, in London, and WALTER M. HILL in New York, has met with much acceptance among students in the byways of Shakespearean scholarship. We have never been able to understand how the world could be benefited by the identification of the Dark Lady, but the intelligibility of Mr. ACHESON'S theory, which is one not overlooked in Sir SIDNEY LEE'S book on the Sonnets, is not to be denied, and, of course, if we can be brought to the belief that Mistress JANE DAVENANT of Oxford was that very lady, we shall go far toward a clearer understanding of SHAKESPEARE the man, though it is likely that the understanding of most of us in this matter is clear enough. We know the plays. A second edition of Mr. ACHESON'S book is now at hand, and with it he issues a pamphlet containing recent corroboration of the theory it sets forth discovered by various English and Continental Shakespeareans. No publishing season is complete without the usual number of books relating to SHAKESPEARE and Shakespearean study. Among those now on hand is "Shakespeare and Stratford," by HENRY C. SHELLEY, (LITTLE, BROWN & Co.,) which treats of the town of the poet's birth and its neighborhood descriptively and historically, and "Burbage and Shakespeare's Stage," by Mrs. CHARLOTTE C. STOPES, famous as a Shakespearean antiquary, which is published in London by ALEXANDER MORING, Ltd. Mrs. STOPES'S book is founded on a patient examination of ancient documents, and the outlines of the history of the Burbages it gives is timely in view of the British Shakespeare League's projected monument to them in Shoreditch.

SOME WHIMSICAL ESSAYS

NEW BROOMS. By Robert J. Shores. Bobbs-Merrill Company. $1.25.

MR. SHORES'S volume is interesting, for one thing, because it is the first venture in a manner new to this age. It is a good deal of a venture, too, because it is at variance with our usual literary temper and something of a challenge to our habits of literary expression. The author has gone back to Addison and Steele for his models, and treats the matters of our present-day life in the leisurely manner, the genial temper, and the careful style that were demanded in the days of Queen Anne. If he wants to say some certain things he does not send it forth from the point of his pen like a brickbat from a catapult. He toys with it, ambles and canters all around it, takes little excursions away from it in various directions closer and closer around it, and finally, never once having taken his eyes off it, picks it up deftly and in a neat and graceful sentence flings it straight at his mark. The essays are in the form of letters written by people of both sexes and all manner of occupations and conditions to the editor of a magazine. The method of presentation suffers in verisimilitude by the fact that in style, manner of thought, and habit of expression they are all evidently from the same pen. But they are gracefully written and are so full of neatly worked out whimsicalities, epigrams, and pungent truths that the book makes very pleasant entertainment for an occasional half hour. Like his models of the age of Anne, he likes to concern himself with matters of trivial importance, to talk about them in such a way as to make them seem affairs of moment and to make the reader see them as typical and illuminating phases of contemporary life.

The letter which considers whether Chesterton is a man alive is representative of Mr. Shores's style. He asks what could be more improbable than Chesterton himself, considers at length several diverting propositions that lead up to the conclusion that if Mr. Chesterton is an idea and not a man he would better stay in that form, because "he is so much more plausible that way."

In the section on "Beds for the Bad" he puts forward the claim that the easiest and surest way to reform criminals would be to provide them all with good beds. "Once we have our criminals and outcasts in bed," he declares, "we shall have them out of mischief." One of his letters makes a plaint that his upright life has given him such a good reputation that it is a burden. Another objects to the modern method of treating beggars and insists that they should not be made to work. "Which do you think costs you the more," he asks, "the beggar who begs perhaps a dollar a week, which he has not earned, or the bricklayer who charges you six dollars a day, of which he has earned only a part?"

IN A FEW WORDS

Prof. George H. Reisner, author of "The Egyptian Conception of Immortality," has spent the last year excavating in Egypt in behalf of Harvard University.

The photographs of Scotch and English scenes which are reproduced in the new Caledonian Edition of Sir Walter Scott's novels have during the past six months been exhibited throughout Indiana by the Public Library Commission.

Mrs. Mary Antin is making an extensive lecture tour under the auspices of the National Lyceum Service.

A. Henry Savage Landor, whose two volume work "Across Unknown South America" has just been published, is a grandson of Walter Savage Landor.

William Kearney Carr, author of the recently published book "Matter and Some of Its Dimensions," contributed the first American volume to the "Library of Living Thought."

Grant Richards, the London publisher who recently turned his attention to novel-writing, arrived in New York last Friday.

Clare Benedict, author of "The Love Saint" has restored the James Fenimore Cooper well on the grounds of her Cooperstown home.

The Devin Adair Company is bringing out an American edition of The Month, the leading Roman Catholic magazine published in England.

Philip Gibbs, whose "The Eighth Year" has given some unpleasant hours to feminists in England and America, met Dr. Cook at Copenhagen and was the only English newspaperman to denounce his claims to the discovery of the Pole.

"Theodore Roosevelt: An Autobiography" will be published next Wednesday.

There is to be an American edition of John Helston's "Aphrodite and Other Poems." Mr. Helston is one of the English Review's discoveries, a mechanic with a gift for verse-making.

Lieut. Nells Hellberg of the Akersbus Dragoon Regiment, Christiania, Norway, is in New York and will ride in the Horse Show at Madison Square Garden next month. He is the author of "White-Ear and Peter: The Story of a Fox and a Fox Terrier."

Jack London's "The Valley of the Moon" went into its fourth edition in the first week of its publication.

Richardson Wright, author of "Through Siberia Without a Passport," will speak before the Dickens Fellowship next Tuesday evening. His subject will be "The Russian Dickens."

The five best poems appearing during November in American magazines will be read and discussed at the meeting of the Poetry Society, to be held November 25.

Charles H. Sherrill, who managed the great Taft parade in 1908 and the recent Mitchel mass meeting, is the author of "A Stained Glass Tour Through Italy."

"Athens, the Violet-Crowned," is Lilian Whiting's twenty-third book. Her first book, "The World Beautiful," was issued nineteen years ago.

A. J. Portenar, author of "Organized Labor," will deliver an address on "Organization by Trade vs. Organization by Industries" before the Wells Memorial Institute in Boston.

The publishers seem to be moving further and further uptown. Following the example of Charles Scribner's Sons, G. P. Putnam's Sons, and E. P. Dutton & Co., Mitchell Kennerley has moved from 2 East Twenty-ninth Street to 32 West Fifty-eighth Street.

STRINDBERG

Different Phases of His Art in Recent Volumes

THE RED ROOM. By August Strindberg. English translation by Ellie Schleussner. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1913. $1.25.

PLAYS. By August Strindberg. English translation by Edwin Björkman. Third Series. Charles Scribner's Sons. New York. 1913. $1.25.

IN MIDSUMMER DAYS. By August Strindberg. English translation by Ellie Schleussner. McBride, Nast & Co. 1913. $1.25.

AUGUST STRINDBERG wrote chiefly for his own relief. Two-thirds of his work is sheer emotional katharsis, the emotional content of small scope in spite of its vehemence. Take that much discussed assortment of libels which plunged the author into both difficulty and notoriety, "The Red Room," now in the English translation of Ellie Schleussner. It has been called satire, and excellent satire at that. It isn't. It is the alleviation, by way of print, of Strindberg's personal grudges against the institutions and the individuals who embittered his early life, quite without that larger humorous thrust which lifts genuine satire above the level of little personalities. Like "Inferno" and "Confessions," it is written without thought for the reader; it is but a sheaf of pages from Strindberg's journal, dressed into the semblance of a novel with a few continuous characters.

If, of course, the reader chances to be interested in Strindberg as a pathological case rather than as a writer, he will be curious to witness the early struggles of this misfit, to watch his reaction to journalism and hack-work, to the actor's profession, to listen to his embittered tales of the farcical government red tape. But those who are interested not in Strindberg, but in what he writes, will put "The Red Room" aside for his more impersonal work. The redeeming feature of the book is the Red Room coterie, a faithful picture of that out-at-the-elbows Bohemian set which first received the young Strindberg in Stockholm. Strindberg has depicted these unwashed, starved, artist-wretches with a sympathy born of sharing their lot. Pawning everything, very nearly always drunk, never enough paint and but a few old canvases, used and re-used, ripping up the floor to feed the fire, death, love and sordid poverty meaning little or nothing, only pictures and philosophy mattering—they are pitilessly real, and not at all the creatures of Strindberg's warped fantasy.

Now and again these men lift Strindberg quite out of himself and there is some good writing; witness the picture of Olle and Sellén spending the night on what is left of the studio floor.

> They lay down in their clothes on the floor packing, having made a kind of bed for themselves of pieces of canvas and old newspapers, and pushed cases filled with sketches underneath their heads. Olle struck a match, produced a tallow candle from his trousers pocket and put it on the floor beside him. A faint gleam flickered through the huge bare studio, passionately resisting the volumes of darkness which tried to pour in through the colossal windows.
>
> "It's cold to-night," said Olle, opening a greasy book.
>
> "Cold! Oh, no! There are only twenty degrees of frost outside, and thirty in here because we are so high up. What are you reading, Olle?"
>
> "An old cookery book which I borrowed from Ygberg."
>
> "The deuce you did! Do let's read it; I've only had a cup of coffee and three glasses of water to-day."
>
> "What would you like?" said Olle, turning over the leaves. "Do you know what a mayonnaise is?"
>
> "Mayonnaise? No — read it — it sounds good!"
>
> "No. 123. Mayonnaise. Take some butter, flour and a pinch of English mustard, and make it into a smooth paste—I see now it's not filling enough. Do you want something more substantial?"
>
> "Try and find toad-in-the-hole—it's my favorite dish."
>
> "I can't go on reading."
>
> They were silent. The candle went out and it was quite dark.
>
> "Good-night, Olle; wrap yourself well up or you'll be cold."
>
> "What with?"
>
> "I don't know. Aren't we having a jolly time?"
>
> "I wonder why one doesn't kill one's self with the cold."
>
> "Because it would be wrong. I find it quite interesting to live, if only to see what will come of it all in the end."
>
> "My right foot is frozen."
>
> "Pull the paint box over you and tuck the brushes around your sides."
>
> "Do you think anybody in the world is as badly off as we are?"
>
> "You should be more grateful to Providence, Olle; one should always be grateful to Providence—I don't know quite why, but one should."
>
> Again there was silence. Sellén snored. But Olle rose and paced the room up and down.

If you would make the acquaintance of Strindberg's friends, though we are assured that friend is a term used only when one would borrow money, enter through the door of "The Red Room."

If, on the other hand, you would know Strindberg the artist, turn to "Ovädер," "The Thunderstorm," as Mr. Edwin Björkman has it in the third of his series of the Strindberg plays. There you have Strindberg at his best, Strindberg conscious of an audience, conscious of the restrictions of his medium, and quite master of the theatrical art. "The Thunderstorm" was the first of the "chamber plays" written for the Theatre Intime at Stockholm, and it inaugurated theatrical reforms considered daring at the time. We have become accustomed to the "Little Theatre" idea with its consequent concentration of plot and simplification of setting; in 1907, when the Stockholm Theatre was opened, it was a much criticised innovation.

The restraint imposed by the theatrical conditions and the possibility of losing himself and his personal bitterness in an absorbing experiment made it possible for Strindberg to produce in "Ovädер" the most dramatic and masterly bit of character drawing that has ever come from his pen. It is curbed and quiet with a wealth of dramatic incident smoldering beneath; it is proportioned and well-measured, and its atmosphere, the air that surrounds old age slipping like a sleigh down a snow covered hill, is pervading and continuous. It is the story of voluntary old age; as the master tells the confectioner who lives in the basement of the old house and now and again comes up for a bit of fresh air:

> It is peaceful, the way I have it here. No love, no friends, only a little company to break up the solitude. Then human beings are just human beings without any claims on your feelings and sympathies. Then you come loose like an old tooth, and drop out without pain or regrets. Take Louise, for instance, a pretty girl, the sight of whom pleases me like a work of art that I don't wish to possess. My brother and I meet like two cold gentlemen who never get too close to each other, and never expect any confidences.

Very well, but he does not know in the rooms overhead where the red shades are always drawn his divorced wife is living with a gambler. She comes downstairs at last, and is touched to find her old home the same, her blue gentians and her mignonette tended carefully, even the thermometer in the upper right-hand drawer of the buffet where she had left it ten years before. The master comes upon her and finds the peace of his old age about to be submerged with a flood of the old emotions, a fresh set of the old troublesome problems to be faced. It is a nervous moment, but a little introspection shows everything quite calm and dead; the hate and resentment that might have been smoldering all those years in ashes, and the only live memory which he cherished, that of his wife, flickers out when she appears, a changed and alien person. He is relieved when she is gone and things somehow straighten out and fall into the old groove; the storm passes and the lamplighter comes down the street at last; Louise pulls down the shades.

It is unfortunate that Strindberg, the dramatist, must inevitably be connected in the popular mind with "The Father" and "Miss Julia," good plays both of them, but touched with that harshness which the play-going public stigmatizes as "gloomy." "The Thunderstorm" is neither harsh nor morbid. To be sure, it is not sentimental, though concerned with that most sentimentally treated of life's phases, old age, yet it is gentle and appealing, and, moreover, an amazingly actable play. One can hope that the English translation will prove an impetus. It will be good to see Strindberg brought before the footlights to the American public in his better aspects. Indeed, there is more than one opportunity offered in the latest series of translations to flash the facets of a genius too long considered one-sided. One hardly recognizes "the mad Swede" in the pretty fairy spectacle, "Swanwhite," which has to do with magic helmets and wicked stepmothers, with peacocks and doves and all manner of enchantments, chief among them the marvelous transforming power of pure love. "Swanwhite" was written when Strindberg was serving discipleship under Maeterlinck, and at the same time delving into Swedish folklore with his characteristic vigor.

In fact, many of the plays of this volume bear the marks of other influences. Moved by the spirit of Edgar Allan Poe, Strindberg wrote "Simoom," a horrible little one-act sketch set in the Algerian desert, in which an Arabian girl races the simoom to the death of the Zouave lieutenant whom she hates; she fills his fevered brain with the suggestion that he has rabies and he dies before the simoom arrives. Not exactly pretty, but it is terrifically dramatic. Again, the long and pretentious "Advent," a mystery play, is Strindberg's expression of the Swedenborgianism which he absorbed during that period of his life which he chose to label the "Inferno." A nicely polished comedy, "Debit and Credit" and "After the Fire," the two other plays of this volume, present the familiar Strindberg.

Still another, and a yet quainter phase, however, is expressed in a collection of sketches entitled by the translator, "In Midsummer Days." Here are fairy tales and fables and slight thumb-box affairs of things and people. Here is the lighter humor which Strindberg was supposed to be without; observe Mr. Jubal, who always stood importantly in the middle of the street car and whose "checkered suit grew round him as the bark grows round a tree, apparently without any effort on his part." Some of the little sketches are very sad and some of them are very vague, but all are, as the author has said at the close of one of them, very edifying stories. At all events, they show Strindberg, not as a ruthless lunatic let loose among the devices of realism, as some would believe, but as an artist who could deal in pastels and delicate etchings, as well as in lurid sunsets and conflagrations.

THE LAW'S DELAY

THE THIRTEENTH JUROR. By Frederick Trevor Hill. New York: The Century Company. 1913.

A penetrating indictment of the law's delay, of the chicanery of unscrupulous lawyers who take advantage of technicalities and quibbles to defeat the ends of justice, and of the evils of a politically influenced judiciary, is the theme of a new story by Frederick Trevor Hill, "The Thirteenth Juror." The book is not merely propaganda for a reform of our courts, but a vital story of a conflict of wills and wits. As the result of a bitter trade war, the wealthy Farm Supply Company is forcing Gedney & Son to the wall by prolonged litigation. When all shifts at postponement have been exhausted, the Farm Supply Company engages the "Resurrectionist," a lawyer famous for reviving cases generally considered dead and done for, and hope by his professional wiles to lengthen still further the proceedings against the feeble old Mr. Gedney. But Poinder, Mr. Gedney's lawyer, with the help of the diplomatic "Old Man Reeve," proves a worthy champion of the honor of the law. He sticks to his case through every rebuff and discouragement, meets move with move in a thrilling duel of keen minds. The book moves swiftly and vigorously to a climax that clinches the story and drives home the point impressively. The author knows whereof he speaks, and his dramatic presentment of the facts of the case startles the reader into respectful attention.

¶ The children's department is equipped for the holiday season. The children's books of all publishers, especially the new holiday editions with colored illustrations, are conveniently displayed. One large table is given up to boys' books, another to girls' books, and a section of several tables to books for little children.

¶ But there are certain specialties—for instance, such children's classics as "The Wonder Book," "Alice in Wonderland," The Jungle Looks, and so on, in leather and morocco bindings; and translations of French children's books illustrated with quaint little child-figures by such artists as De Monvel.

PUTNAM'S NEW BOOKS

The Life of Henry Labouchere

By ALGAR LABOUCHERE THOROLD

Authorized Edition. 8°. With Photogravure Frontispiece. $4.50 net. By mail, $4.80.

"His varied career, his wit, and the stories . . . which have clustered round his name must have made the life as pleasant to write as it is pleasant to read. Mr. Algar Thorold has given us a good book—a book that is sure to be widely popular, partly from its amusing stories, partly from the picture it gives of a man who was as much admired and liked by half the world and disliked by the other, and partly from the real additions that it makes to our knowledge of political history of the last thirty-five years."—The London Times.

The Old Boston Post Road

By STEPHEN JENKINS

8°. With over 150 Illustrations and a Map. $3.50 net. By mail, $3.75.

The author traces the development of the pioneer settlements along this historic road to their present positions as manufacturing towns and cities; and, above all, emphasizes the personalities of those men and women who have been chiefly instrumental in causing the progress of their towns and of the country in material wealth, or in literature, art, or education.

My Beloved South

By MRS. T. P. O'CONNOR

Author of "Little Thank You."

8°. With Photogravure Frontispiece. $2.50 net. By mail, $2.75.

These charming pen pictures of the home and social life of the South constitute a valuable contribution to the social history of the country. Mrs. O'Connor is a Southerner by birth, and among her friends and kin are numbered many who have been a part in the history of the South.

Our Irish Theatre

By LADY GREGORY

Author of "Irish Folk-History Plays," "New Comedies," etc.

12°. Illustrated. $1.50 net. By mail, $1.65.

An account not only of the great contemporary dramatic movement of Ireland, but of the stage history of the Dublin Theatre from its erection. A section of the book that possesses a very pertinent interest for American readers is that which has to do with the experiences encountered by the Irish actors in America.

Under the Greenwood Tree

A Rural Painting of the Dutch School

By THOMAS HARDY

8°. With 10 Illustrations in Color by Keith Henderson. $2.50 net. By mail, $2.75.

One of the earliest, but most deservedly popular of Hardy's racy stories of the Wessex country. First published in 1872, it forms, in conjunction with "Desperate Remedies," the corner-stone of the author's literary attainment, reared to such splendid heights. The story is told with rare fidelity to local character and delightful humor.

NEWS FROM THE WORLD OF BOOKS

Longevity of Some of This Year's "Best Sellers"—Important Works of Non-Fiction

THROUGHOUT the entire Fall there has been evident among American publishers a tendency toward the more careful selection of books. Several of the leading firms have issued a number of books less by a third than their customary allowance. One result of this has been that the books have had a better chance to become popular—the energies of the publishers have been concentrated in a way that has proved advantageous to the fortunes of their publication. Therefore the lives of many books have been prolonged, novels which were popular in September still are prominently before the public. A few years ago it was not unusual for a best seller to die in three weeks and for its publishers to accept the fact of its death philosophically and set about establishing its successor.

One novel which has retained its popularity through the season is Winston Churchill's "The Inside of the Cup," published by the Macmillan Company. A somewhat remarkable phenomenon about this novel is the enthusiasm with which many of the clergy regard it. It is by no means orthodox in tone; in fact, it constitutes a rather severe criticism of established religion. Yet many clergymen have made it the subject of laudatory sermons, and one of them—the Rev. H. R. Rose of Newark, N. J.—has begun a series of eight Sunday morning addresses upon it.

But the non-fiction Macmillan books are perhaps more important this season than the novels. For instance, next Wednesday this firm will publish "Theodore Roosevelt: An Autobiography." One need not be a Progressive to appreciate the significance of this book by and about the best-known citizen of the United States. There will be six hundred pages, it is said, and about a hundred pictures. Certainly its author is well fitted to discuss the subject he has selected.

Another Macmillan book to be published next Wednesday is Charles H. Weller's "Athens and Its Monuments." Mr. Weller's reputation is a guarantee not only that this work will contain sound scholarship, but that it will furthermore be eminently readable.

Among the Macmillan books published last week particular attention is called to John La Farge's "The Gospel Story in Art." Mr. La Farge was peculiarly fitted to write this book, and it should prove of lasting value.

Bernard Shaw called Alvin Langdon Coburn "one of the most accomplished and sensitive artist-photographers now living." Mitchell Kennerley is publishing a collection of thirty-three of Mr. Coburn's portraits of celebrities, under the title "Men of Mark." Among the subjects are Bernard Shaw, George Meredith, Arnold Bennett, H. G. Wells, William Dean Howells, and John Galsworthy. About the title of this collection Mr. Coburn tells the following story:

> I had thought of using "Men of Genius" as the title for my book, but Arnold Bennett objected acrimously, saying, very modestly, that he did not consider himself a man of genius, but merely a working author, and absolutely refused to join the throng, unless I changed the title, so I told him that if he would give me a better one I would use it. "Men of Mark" is his alternative, and I want to take this occasion to thank him for this, which is but one of his kindnesses to me.

Prof. Joshua Bloch of Dropsie College furnishes us with a new proof of Rudyard Kipling's popularity. The firm of B. A. Kletzkin of Wilna, Russia, has published a Yiddish translation of "The Jungle Book." The translator was a young Jewish novelist, L. Schapiro, whose name, Prof. Bloch says, "will undoubtedly attract a wide circle of Yiddish readers who have never before heard of Rudyard Kipling's talent."

Lady Gregory's "Our Irish Theatre" is surely among the most interesting of the new Putnam books. Lady Gregory gives an accurate account of the adventures and misadventures of the experiment in dramatics which she conducted in Dublin with the assistance of John Synge, William Butler Yeats and other writers, and also she discusses at length the wave of playwriting which has recently swept over Ireland. Her remarks on the reception given to the Irish Players on their first visit to New York City should be especially worth reading.

That entertaining historian, Stephen Jenkins, whose "The Greatest Street in the World" is pleasantly remembered, has written a new book called "The Old Boston Post Road." There have been stirring events on this, the most northerly of the post roads—savages have swept down it, the minute-men marched down it. It was trod by the hoofs of Washington's mount, and it was the pathway of thousands of emigranta on their way to the Middle West.

Many who know "T. P.'s Weekly" are unaware that its editor has an American wife. He has, and she has written a book which G. P. Putnam's Sons are publishing. We regret to say that Mrs. T. P. O'Connor's record—which will undoubtedly make pleasant reading—of her recent visits to the Southern States, in which her childhood was spent, has the annoyingly sentimental title "My Beloved South." The name might, however, have been worse—it might have been "My Beloved Southland."

Ricci's monograph on the furniture of Louis XVI., which in a review printed last week was credited to William Heinemann, the publisher of the London issue, appears in the United States with the imprint of G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The Boy Scout movement is responsible for the production of much fiction. The December issue of Boys' Life, the Boy Scout magazine, contains a story by F. St. Mars, which is contained also in his "On Nature's Trail," just published by the George H. Doran Company. The author is a student of animal life who is not afraid to mingle imagination with the record of his observations. The big game hunter, Lieut. Col. J. H. Patterson, D. S. O., says in his preface to the book, "Each tale grips me with entrancing interest."

The Doran Company has published in H. E. Marshall's "A History of Germany" a book which is by no means, it is said, a text book. It is rather an interpretation of the German nation, written to fill the needs of the average citizen who is not a specialist in history.

"An Iconography" is the sub-title of A. E. Gallatin's "Portraits and Caricatures of James McNeill Whistler," published by the John Lane Company. It is a collection of sixteen portraits of Whistler by himself and by other artists, with descriptive text.

The John Lane Company has postponed the date of issue of Gilbert K. Chesterson's novel, "The Flying Inn," until January, 1914. This will permit simultaneous publication in Canada and England.

Little, Brown & Co., who are the publishers of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "The Happy Warrior," have taken over from Mitchell Kennerley and are republishing Mr. Hutchinson's first book, "Once Aboard the Lugger." This book has already been printed seven times. In spite of its title it is not a sea story.

Early in 1914 Desmond FitzGerald, Incorporated, will publish the third volume of Howard B. Sutherland's "Idylls of Greece." Mr. Sutherland writes in this volume of Sappho and Phaon, and of Oenone, the deserted wife of Paris.

Henry Holt & Co. have printed for the eighth time "Dramatists of To-day," by Edward Everett Hale, Jr. They have printed the first book in the Jean-Christophe trilogy for a sixth time, and the second, "Jean-Christophe in Paris," for a third.

On Nov. 22 this house will publish de Fonseca's "On the Truth of Decorative Art," and two books somewhat special in their appeal—I. M. Rubinow's "Social Insurance" and Franz Zizzek's "Statistical Insurance."

Frederick A. Stokes Company is devoting much attention to books for children this autumn. They have published "The Kewpies: Their Book," by Rose O'Neill, and Gelett Burgess's "The Goop Directory." For older children there is "The Boys' Book of Aeroplanes," by T. O'Brien Hubbard and Charles C. Turner. This is a book which is instructive as well as entertaining, and its stories of the adventures of aeronauts will interest many beside the young readers for whom it is especially written.

BOOKS WORTH READING

A VERY interesting little venture in bookland is the series of "Fellowship Books," of English origin, under the general editorship of Mary Stratton. Each small volume of fifty or sixty pages is the free thought of the author upon the subject which he or she has chosen, and the aim of the series is to set forth freshly the basic, everlasting truths upon which rest our common—our fellowship—enjoyment of all that is best and finest in nature, poetry and art. The initial four volumes are on "Friendship," by Clifford Bax, "The Joy of the Theatre," by Gilbert Cannan; "Divine Discontent," by James Guthrie, and "The Quest of the Ideal," by Grace Rhys. Alice Meynell, A. T. Quiller-Couch, Ernest Rhys, and May Sinclair are among the authors who are preparing volumes for the series. The books are particularly commendable for their pleasing format and the high quality of their craftsmanship. (E. P. Dutton & Co. 75 cents each.)

Thomas L. Masson has assembled in a small volume entitled "The Best Stories in the World," between 200 and 300 well-tested laugh-producers—stories that have done excellent service in the newspapers and magazines, in the vaudeville shows, in the political meeting, and elsewhere. The collection is a remarkably good one, and, as Mr. Masson remarks, if anybody fails to find it amusing the fault must be his own. (Doubleday, Page & Co.)

A pleasing story is told by Oliver Huckel in his well illustrated book called "Through England with Tennyson," of a three months' pilgrimage to localities in England beloved by the great Poet Laureate and celebrated in his songs. Admirers of Tennyson will read with great interest Mr. Huckel's description of scenes associated with the poet's long life and abundant literature. (Thomas Y. Crowell Company. $2.)

It is true, as Frank Thistleton declares in the preface to his "Modern Violin Technique," that a book alone cannot make a pupil master of a stringed instrument. He has attempted, consequently, only to give the teacher some idea of what it is essential to explain and to the pupil some conception of what he should expect to be taught. The book is meant to be a basis for the pupil to work upon and as a guide when he is in doubt; and for such a purpose it should in many cases be useful. Mr. Thistleton says sensible and useful things; as when he declares that technique is but the means of expression, and when he insists upon the fact that the difficulties of technique are at the outset mental. He begins with the bow technique as the first essential—almost any one with a good ear and sufficient tenacity of purpose can develop a left-hand technique, but no violinist can gain a mastery of the bow by his own efforts. There are clear and explicit directions for the practice of all the various elements of violin technique, and these are supplemented by a number of excellent illustrations. (Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50.)

In James Morgan's book entitled "The Life Work of Edward A. Moseley in the Service of Humanity" a generous and, in the main, deserved tribute is paid to the memory of a good and useful man. The great work Mr. Moseley accomplished for his fellow men was performed during his incumbency of the office of Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He held the post from the organization of the commission, in 1887, until his death, in 1911, and in that period, in addition to the performance of his stated secretarial duties, interested himself actively in procuring legislation for the protection of railroad employes and in making the legislation effective. The account Mr. Morgan gives of what Mr. Moseley did for the railroad men of America is deeply interesting. (Macmillan Company, $2.)

Gelett Burgess has added to his "Goop" series a little book entitled "The Goop Directory of Juvenile Offenders." In it he tells in humorous verse of various ways in which little boys and girls make nuisances of themselves. The book is illustrated with amusing pictures, reproducing drawings by the author.

Another book by Mr. Burgess is "The Maxims of Noah." It is written in the style the author affected in "The Maxims of Methuselah," which seems to have been a very successful book. Noah's maxims, Mr. Burgess says, were delivered by the Commander of the Ark to his son, Japhet, and were based on the father's experience with women, both before and after the flood. The book is cleverly illustrated in black and red by Louis Fancher. (Frederick A. Stokes Company. 50 cents.)

Julius Caesar, Mohammed and Lord Byron—it is a curious trio to join together, but Matthew Woods, M. D., specialist and authority upon epilepsy, unites them by reason of the bond of the nervous disorder to which they were subject and reviews their lives as three great epileptics who founded respectively an empire, a religion and a school of poetry. The book, which is entitled "In Spite of Epilepsy," is put forth, the author says, for the purpose of convincing any one who is interested, whether of the medical profession, the laity, or the army of epileptics, that the disease does not preclude a useful life nor even a great career. (New York: The Cosmopolitan Press. $1.50.)

Three more volumes have been added to the invaluable Loeb Classical Library. The fourth and last volume of Appian's "Roman History," translated by Horace White, has just appeared, as well as the second of the three volumes of Cicero's "Letters to Atticus," which have been intrusted to the editing of E. O. Winstedt of Magdalen College, Oxford. There is no need to say more of them than that their translations come up fully to the high standard of polished and fluent English set by their predecessors.

The other new volume contains Petronius's "Satyricon," rendered into English by Michael Heseltine, and Seneca's "Apocolocyntosis," translated by W. H. D. Rouse. The "Satyricon" is not, of course, for every reader, and some passages Mr. Heseltine has felt it advisable to leave in the obscurity of their original Latin, but the curious picture the book contains of the life of a provincial city in Roman days loses nothing by the spirit with which he has turned his version. Dr. Rouse in editing Seneca has performed a perhaps still more difficult feat, for he has boldly attacked the passages in verse, which intersperse the prose, and has rendered them into rhymed couplets with great fidelity to the original.

"THE LIVING PAST"

THE LIVING PAST. A sketch of Western Progress. By P. S. Marvin, M. A. Oxford. The Clarendon Press. 3s 6d net.

Well written as this book is, it presents no new historic evidence, no original speculations. The chapters on the "Childhood of the Race," "The Early Empires," "The Greeks," "The Romans," "The Middle Ages," "The Renaissance," "The Rise of Modern Science," "The Industrial Revolution," "The Social and Political Revolution," have all been covered by other writers with more detail and originality. Even the chapter on "Looking Forward" contains little more than obvious remarks and inferences, and cannot be said to add anything to our knowledge of the future. Perhaps for those who have not read extensively in original or documentary history the book may contain some valuable information.

BOOKS FOR GIRLS

Attractive Publications as Holiday Season Approaches

WHO wouldn't like to be a nice little girl and vanish between the atoms of time? It doesn't sound comprehensible, but it looks attractive as one sees "Bubs" doing it in one of Oliver Herford's pictures in the pretty book that tells the story, by Vance Thompson of "The Mouse-Colored Road," (Appleton & Co., $1.) This is the way it came about. There were three children, Anne-Eunice and Langham—he was a mere boy, the book says—and Bubs, who also has a "beautiful two-pelaled name" like Anne-Eunice, only she is called Bubs because she has red hair.

Bubs is the little person of the three and she has only to sit at a tiny redwood desk and catch atoms of wisdom, by chance, when Anne-Eunice, at a beautiful rosewood, inlaid with mother of pearl, desk (because she is to grow up a beautiful and domestic woman), and Langham at an ironwood desk, (because he is to grow up a strong, indomitable man) are getting real science lessons from a rusty little old science man. And the science man, thinking his own thoughts aloud in the science lesson wonders why it would not be possible to find room between atoms of time to slip away from the present.

No one but a science man would have dreamed of thinking such thoughts, and no one but a bright little red-haired Bubs would have thought of getting away from an uninteresting present on that thought.

"Come—quick," says Bubs, Anne-Eunice of the two-petaled names hesitates, and so does Langham, the mere boy, but little Bubs takes them each by the hand and head first they go straight through the atoms of time, and that is how they find themselves comfortably away from the rusty old man of science and on the mouse colored road. The picture shows Bubs making a great break in time as she goes through headlong, like a comet, leaving a shoe behind her. There are many interesting people on the mouse colored road—old friends if you have studied your histories, and there is the Christmas story in it, for it is a Christmas book. There are full-page pictures and red marginal oramentation.

***

And there can't be any nicer story for the Christmas season than "Miss Santa Claus of the Pullman," by Annie Fellows Johnson. (The Century Company. $1.) It is Annie Fellows Johnson who wrote "The Little Colonel" stories, and every little girl, and some grown quite big, know how very nice those are. This is a story of two little people, Will'm and Libby, who have no mother and are living with their grandmother. And Christmas is coming, and they have made their Christmas wishes just as all good little people do. Libby would like a gold ring, and Will'm wants, above all things, a ride in a Pullman car. No one can ever tell how their wishes are going to be granted, and sometimes the way doesn't seem to be the best one, though, after all, it turns out to be quite the nicest that ever could be. That was the way it was with Will'm and Libby. A strange thing was given them for a Christmas present, coming a little ahead of time—a new mother and they were to go to her and their father. Now, Will'm and Libby had heard very strange, unpleasant things about stepmothers—the bad kind that grow in some kinds of fairy tales, and they weren't a bit happy at the news.

"I arn't going away," said Will'm, his poor little heart almost broken. "I won't leave my Dramma and I won't go where there'll never be any more good rabbit dravy." Will'm loved different kinds of things and gravy and grandma were among them.

But of course little children have to obey and Will'm began to get his Christmas wish at once, for a ride in the Pullman car was the very first thing. And it is in the big Pullman car, where the children are all alone, that Miss Santa Claus appears, pretty and young and with witch scissors.

Then things begin to happen. Libby gets the ring she wished, the Pullman car is like what Will'm dreamed it would be when Miss Santa Claus takes them into the dining car with its silver and crystal and good things to eat, and there are Christmas stockings, and later even "rabbit dravy," and much besides that must be read, and there are pictures with a bright colored one of Miss Santa Claus in the beginning of the book.

There are any number of girls' books that the Penn Publishing Company has out, and Nancy Lee's "Spring Term," by Margaret Warde, ($1.25,) is one of them. It is a gay schoolgirl book which has wonder workers in it, the W. W.'s. There is a strange thing to find its way into a girl's book, a lost baby, Timmy, who is scientifically brought up for the time that he stays. There is a Prince and a Princess and Prince Charming, who is a cat; also any number of pictures. A very good story indeed is "Jane Stuart, Twin," by Grace M. Remick, ($1.25.) Jane is an uncommonly good sort and the family, which includes the other twin, who is a boy, lose money, have to go to a little seaside town to live and have a very good time of it after, all. They find "Little Caroline" one of the mystery parts of the story, and little Caroline turns out to be grown up and—a handsome young man.

"A Senior Co-Ed," by Alice Louise Lee, ($1.25,) is one of the jolly stories where school boys and girls together have lively times. Winifred Lowe of the "fluffy yellow head" is its heroine and steward of the Alpha Gamma Chapter House. There is a Colonial party in the story to raise money for chapter house repairs, and it is an up-to-date story, for they talk about suffragette pilgrimages, and Winifred says she is not dignified enough for a suffragette pilgrim. "Letty's Treasure," by Helen Sherman Griffith, (50 cents,) is her voice. There is an exciting time when she is told that she will become a great singer, but the interesting parts of the book are those that tell of her life after her adoption by an author, her home for a time on the Devonshire coast of England, and the discovery of a little shipwrecked girl, who is the real daughter of Letty's adopted mamma. "A Little Maid of Provincetown," by Alice Turner Curtis, (90 cents,) is a story of Revolutionary days, with all the stirring events of those times. Anne, the "little maid," is captured by Indians, but is a brave little girl, and in the end of the book finds her father. There are exciting pictures. "The Little Runaways and Mother," by the same author, (80 cents,) is the story of the children who ran away from an asylum. They have many adventures in this book, which is the third one in their history. Among other things, they have an aeroplane club.

"Marjorie on Beacon Hill," another Curtis book at the same price, is the story of the experiences of the little heroine in Boston with two mill girls whom she has helped to rescue from cruel relatives. Robinson Crusoe, who is a pigeon, Ann, one of the little mill girls, adopts, brings a policeman to the house, for little Ann is in danger of her life as she crawls out of her window on to the edge of the roof to get her pet out of trouble. There is a wedding, with four little girl bridesmaids, in "Polly Prentiss Goes A-Visiting," by Elizabeth Lincoln Gould, (80 cents.) The funny Swedish twins, who have been in the other Polly books, are in the story, and Polly, whose visit is in Washington, receives a personal message from the President. "A Regular Tomboy," by Mary E. Mumford, is the story of a little girl who wants to be a boy, and one of the things she does in trying to play boys' plays is to ride a calf around the village streets. There is a nice baby in the story, who is loved so much that some one lets a drop of hot candle grease fall right on his poor little nose. Hila, the little tomboy, learns after a time that being a girl is a pretty nice thing after all.

All the littlest girls will love "Dolls of Many Lands," by Mary Hazelton Wade, (W. A. Wilde Co., $1,) and there are more kinds of dolls in it than they could see even in dreams. There is the Parisian doll in pretty clothes, whose little relatives they all know, as they are to be seen in the shops; there is an Eskimo doll made of ivory and dressed in furs; Rudaheh, the Persian doll, is made of rags, and all her clothes are sewed on, lovely clothes of silk—long, loose trousers, such as the Persian women wear, a silk skirt and little jacket; there is a little Dutch doll, who has wooden shoes; little Plum Bloom, a Japanese doll, and there is a story among others about many little English dolls, and not very beautiful ones, though there were 132 of them, and they once belonged to Queen Victoria.

***

"The Girl of Ablnger Close," by L. T. Meade, (Lippincott Co., $1.25,) is one of the long stories that this author writes, an old-fashioned story which has a stepmother, who if she is not really cruel is as selfish as she is pretty. The little girls of the book take turns in telling the story. There are six colored pictures. "The House on the Ground," by Ella Matthews Bangs, (Pilgrim Press, $1.25,) is the story of two nice girls who go to live in the country with their great-uncle, Peleg Russell, who asks them to stay with him when they have no other home. The "house on the ground," as it is shown on the cover of the book, looks as if it had many stories, one rising above the other, but it is a hillside house, and each division of it is built on an upper terrace, so that there is no real upstairs in any part of it.

***

"Helen and the Uninvited Guests," by Beth Bradford Gilchrist, (Penn Publishing Company, $1.25,) is a funny story—though it seems a tragedy to Helen, who is left to keep house while her invalid mother is away. Then come the uninvited guests. "Bunbury," as the children speak of her, is a determined lady and a capable housekeeper. She is a friend of the children's mother, and she decides to take charge of the house. She does. It makes a large book full of happenings, all of them interesting.

***

Very interesting is "Under Greek Skies," by Julia D. Dragoumi (E. P. Dutton, $1.) It tells of the Greeks, so many of whom are now in this country, as they live in their own. There are three stories, the first telling of "Mattina," and the many things which happen to her. It is a hard life when she goes out to be a little maid, because of her poverty. Then there is the great trouble from which she is rescued and taken back to Poros, her home. She is about to come to America when the story closes. There are excellent line drawings for the pictures and a colored frontispiece. There is a good story, a wedding—three of them in fact, including Dorothy's, in "Dorothy Brooke Across the Sea," by Frances Campbell Sparhawk (Crowell. $1.50.) The story part of the book goes on continuously, but there is also much that is interesting about countries "across the sea." The heroine of "Her Daughter Jean," by Marion Ames Taggart (W. A. Wilde Company, $1.50,) is a little poet lady—a poem accepted by a magazine and paid for, and she is only sixteen. Jean thinks it would be a glorious thing to "live for her art." One of the things she learns in the course of the long story is that there are other things in life and, as she says finally, "Oh, mother darling, nothing can ever be better than to be your daughter Jean."

There is a runaway fortune in "Annie Laurie and Azalea," by Ella W. Peattie, (The Reilly Britton Company, 75 cents.) It is Annie Laurie's fortune and it had been hidden in a very queer place, which makes it possible for a man to run away with it. He does not go far and the thrills of the story are concerned with the loss and the finding, and Sam, the son of the thief, who turns out not to be a real son after all. Annie Laurie proves herself a good friend. "The Ranch Girls at Boarding School," by Margaret Vandercook, (Winston, 60 cents,) is a story of the four nice girls who after their experiences on the ranch they inherited and went to live upon, decide to return to civilization and a fashionable boarding school in New York. Olive, one of the girls, falls heir to a stern grandmother and a fortune.

"The Story of St. Elizabeth of Hungary," St. Elizabeth of the roses, the Landgravine of Thuringia, is told by William Canton in an attractive volume with eight colored illustrations by Eleanor Furtescue Brickdale, (Dana, Estes & Co., $1.50.) The book is compiled from many books written about the beautiful young woman who lived so full a life in so short a time. There is a postscript and index to the book. "The Whimsey Girl," by Charlotte Canty, (Dodd, Mead & Co., 75 cents.) is a charmingly "whimsey" girl with fantastic thoughts floating through her brain. The story is at the time of the San Francisco disaster, and it is then that the whimsey girl finds what she calls heaven, but the kind friends who have made it for her say that it is what is next to it on earth—a home. It is a small book, and so is "Barbara's Philippine Journey," by Frances Williston Burks, (World Book Company.) It tells in an interesting way many interesting things about the country so far away and so closely associated with the United States. There are many pictures.

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes,

By JOHN H. WILLIAMS,

Autor of "The Mountain That Was 'God,'" "The Guardians of the Columbia," etc.

Royal 8vo., 500 pages, with 16 plates in color, 64 half-tones and 60 other illustrations, showing the great scenery of the Northwest, reproductions of celebrated historical pictures, Indians and Indian life, portraits, etc., etc.

Bound in half vellum (leather), with silk cloth sides, gilt tops, and boxed. Price, $5.00 net; express, 35 cents extra.

Winthrop's fascinating romance of travel remains our most vital picture of conditions in Washington and Oregon during the territorial period, sixty years ago. The value of his book, for all who are interested in Western history and adventure, has been doubled by the addition of his letters and diaries, which cover his entire stay on the Pacific Coast, beginning at San Francisco, early in 1853, and closing with his overland trip East via Salt Lake City, in October.

CURRENT FICTION

Mr. Comfort's "Down Among Men"—A Voyage of Delightful Adventure

DOWN AMONG MEN. By Will Levington Comfort. George H. Doran Company. $1.25 net.

THE first five chapters of Mr. Comfort's new novel resemble his well-known "Routledge Rides Alone." Like Routledge, John Morning is a war correspondent beneath an undeserved cloud, and part of his history forms an indictment of war. After one brief episode—a sort of preface—the scenes in the opening "Book" are laid in China during the Russo-Japanese war, centring mainly about the battle of Liaoyang. John Morning has fought his way up from a sorry boyhood spent on the New York streets and in racing stables to a newspaper position "on space." In Tokio he finds himself denied the place among the other correspondents to which he knows that he is entitled, but he has always "lived second class" and dares not demand the reason for his exclusion. It is to this very exclusion, however, that he owes Duke Fallows's espousal of his cause, and later the companionship of the one man able to perceive the stuff that is in him through the outer husk and grime. It is Fallows who predicts that in the time to come "You'll hear your soul saying, 'Get down among men, John, and help.'" Together they journey to New Chwang, and from thence see the great battle. Those who are familiar with this author's work will not need to be told how superbly he describes it all, until the whole culminates in the vivid, symbolic figure of that Plowman who came out of the millet to his death.

It is one of the achievements of this twentieth century that our writers are beginning to see war, not as "the tumult and the shouting," nor even "the Captains and the Kings," but as the man in the ranks, and of this new visioning Mr. Comfort is one of the pioneers. Into the mouth of Duke Fallows, who had seen that which the plowman symbolized, understood, and in understanding found salvation, is placed "the message from the plowman who passed—the message of Liaoyang * * * Where there is a real Fatherland—there will be brotherhood." But John Morning, immersed in dreams of ambition, is as yet deaf and blind. He knows only this—that he has the great story of the battle, the story which will put the newspaper world at his feet. But to win he must cross the ninety miles to Konpangtze and reach the railroad which will take him to Tientsin and the sea. How he made that wonderful trip—" the sorrel mare—the Hun Crossing—the Liao crossing, and the fight with the river bandits—the runaway of the sorrel and her broken heart—his journey—dazed and delirious, covered with wounds, thirty miles to Konpangtze," the unspeakable voyage among the coolies, the all but failure at the very end—must be told only to the author's own terse, impressionistic style. Morning fought for his ambition, grimly, desperately; won what he most desired, and found in it little save disappointment and the knowledge that "a man makes his friends before his world capitulates."

Already Betty Berry has entered once into his life, but she seems dim and far away until in disgust at that species of soul-degradation he calls after a New York club of which he is a member, "Boubdilliog," he goes to live in a little cabin on a hillside; and then presently comes a time when, despite the reappearance of Betty, he sinks down into the lowermost depths. As the book's first section told about a wonderful physical struggle, this latter tells of one wholly spiritual, of which the first was but the shadow and the symbol. Mr. Comfort is essentially a mystic, and it is the ideas which he here embodies that will arouse discussion and probably dissent. For, as Duke Fallows sees him, and as he slowly begins to see himself, John Morning is "an instrument upon which might be played a message of mercy and power to all who suffered," becoming at last "the medium between man and the energy that drives the world." "He must receive the love of God—and give it to men," declares Fallows, the Guardian. "The love of God must have man to manifest it, and that's John Morning's work—if he loves humanity enough to make her his bride." And his only bride. Therein lies the crux of an important part of this theory—to do his work, to become a "World-Man," he must stand alone. It is an old, old belief, going far back into the dim past of Eastern thought, brought forth into glowing light by Gotama, the Buddha. Morning had conquered the demons of drink and ambition and self-love, had met and overcome the fear of death; but he loved Betty Berry. It is she who, believing in his mission, is called upon to make the great sacrifice; "she loved him for himself, and to her was the altar." It was she who taught him to write "men and women reach that eminence (i. e., the coolness beyond the senses) by being alone—by loving alone": and paid the price for the "World-Man."

She is in some ways the most interesting character in the book, this "little listening creature" who, before Morning came, "had learned well to put love away," had fought her battle with the world unaided and was free, "glad always to abide by what she did or said * * * above all guile and fear," able to give and give and give, even to the uttermost—one of those women of to-day who, according to Mr. Comfort, "represent the men of the future," pouring out the very life-blood of her spirit in service to an ideal. Sharply contrasted with her is Charlie's sister, a girl slightly sketched, not even named, but typifying that great fear which lies at the root of what is called "sex antagonism."

The book is full of interesting people; distinct among them all stand Helen Luiston, clear-sighted member of that "gray sisterhood" of those to whom love never comes, and Nevin, the doctor, who knew "the mystery of service. He had never dared tell any one. * * * He talked of his rights and his wages, the dusty-faced little man," yet he wanted "to doctor the world." The mystery of service, whose price is that understanding which can be gained only "down among men" in the midst of pain, where "miracles are performed" and must be brought to his brothers by one who has himself known torture and risen above it; serving men, loving them, and standing alone—this is the heart of the book. Yet there is more, very much more, in it; few richer novels than this of Mr. Comfort's have been published in many a long day.

ADVENTURES ALL ENJOY

THE VOYAGE OF THE HOPPERGRASS. By Edmund Lester Pearson. Illustrated. The Macmillan Company. $1.35.

When the Hoppergrass started on her memorable voyage no one seems to have expected that anything out of the ordinary would occur—which, when you come to think about it, was rather stupid of them, for how could even the most respectable of large white catboats hope to cruise peacefully for a week under a name like Hoppergrass? Capt. Bannister wanted to change it, but it was all done in nice gold letters, and gold letters cost money; wherefore he hesitated, and was lost. The three other members of the crew, Ed Mason, Jimmy Toppan, and Sam Edwards—it is Sam, by the way, who tells the story—thought the name a bit queer, but on the whole rather preferred it to Capt. Bannister's choice, which was the Hannah J. Pettigill, after an aunt who had left him her second-best ear trumpet.

Despite the incident of the watermelon, it was not until Mr. Daddles's unexpected appearance that the adventures of the Hoppergrass really began. Mr. Daddles was a young man who had been wrecked upon a small island—so exceedingly small an island that he had difficulty in sitting on it. And considering Mr. Daddles's intimate acquaintance with pirates of the very highest class—had he not the entire history of the Black Pedro family at his finger tips?—one would have looked for him to be somewhat fastidious in selecting an island upon which to be wrecked. However, he was a person with a taste for adventure, and it was he who led the search for buried treasure which resulted in the smuggler's burglarious entrance into the closed house—all of which sounds rather mixed, but when you come to read the book you will find that it is simple enough. If the constable thought it an absolutely plain, obvious case, and so did Gregory the Gauger—whose weakness and was not slit, as Mr. Daddles suggested—which is just what it was, only they got hold of it wrong end first, which tangled the affair considerably. Had it, indeed, not been for that modern Monte Cristo, the banjo man, there is no knowing what might have happened. Certainly those very up-to-date pirates, Mr. Snyder and the Professor, would have been allowed to pursue their nefarious schemes in peace for some time longer. But, to give every one his due, it was Sam and not the banjo man who had returned to Simon and the peaceful precincts of the "White Rabbit"—that had the notable encounter with Mr. Snyder, during which the last-named gentleman behaved in so very inhospitable a manner.

Mr. Pearson's new story will be enjoyed by all young persons between the ages of 8 and 80. Those close to the former number of years will find it an exciting tale; the others will delight in Mr. Daddles and the two policemen who kept such vigilant watch, and the aggrieved driver of the horse car and the Lord Chief Justice, and all the rest of the whimsical and very human characters assembled in this charmingly written book. It is no fairy tale, yet it has the romance of one—the appeal to a spirit of joyous adventure, the feeling that life is new and very wonderful. Not a single really improbable incident occurs during the entire voyage, yet it is all enveloped in that glamour bestowed by the rose-tinted glasses of youth. "The Voyage of the Hoppergrass" will prove to older readers a pleasant journey to the Land of Long Ago, only we do wish that Mr. Daddles had finished his account of the wreck of the Hot Cross Bun.

ON THE HIGH SEAS

THE SEA CAPTAIN. By H. C. Bailey. George H. Doran Company. $1.25 net.

In good sooth they were mighty men, those captains who sailed the high seas in the reign of Her Most Glorious Majesty, Queen Elizabeth. Hath the world, indeed, e'er seen more wondrous feats of valor than they performed when they dared the Moorish pirates and bearded e'en the King of Spain himself? And of them all, sure none was stouter of heart, more cunning of wit, or stronger of arm than Capt. Richard Rymingtowne, whose deeds are herein chronicled. Dickon the shepherd once he was; a mere lout, men deemed him, dull and shambling. But he foiled the plans of the wicked priest, and presently fared forth upon a perilous voyage with the loyal Capt. Doricot, thinking to win wealth for himself in the East and knowing naught of the ancient comrade whom Doricot had vowed to rescue from slavery and the bagnios of Alexandria.

How they journeyed thither, fought aboard the Moorish galleys, and at length won with their victory a dire disappointment is all told well and with brave words in this fair tale of "The Sea Captain," wherein, an't so please you, you may read of Capt. Dick Rymingtowne's further adventures by land and sea, and likewise of his deep and faithful love for the sweet Lady Mary. Also of how he encountered many other fair and noble ladies, even that most beautiful "Daughter of Debate," Mary, Queen of Scots, and was received in audience by the gracious Elizabeth—who owed him much—together with many other stirring events truthfully and diligently set down by the worthy H. C. Bailey, Esq., a skilled historian, much to be commended.

IRISH PEG

PEG O' MY HEART. By J. Hartley Manners. Illustrated by Martin Justice. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

Mr. Manners has founded a novel upon his gay little comedy of youth and love that has had such a phenomenal success upon the stage. While following in the main the lines of the play, he has introduced some new complications, very much extended the dialogue, and filled in with comment, narrative, and description until the play becomes a novel of nearly 400 pages. Those who have enjoyed the stage presentation will approve the slightly different ending, in which, freed from the limitations of stage necessities, he has made a more logical and more convincing climax for his love story. In the book he sends Peg back to New York, where, helping her father upon his monumental book, she smooths down somewhat her rough edges and becomes a better mate for her lover, who soon follows her across the ocean. But she remains throughout the novel the same big-hearted, boyden-ish, amusing girl that has won so many admirers on the stage.

"THE JACK-KNIFE MAN"

THE JACK-KNIFE MAN. By Ellis Parker Butler. The Century Co. $1.25 net.

In its amusing whimsies "The Jack-Knife Man" lives up to its predecessor, "Pigs is Pigs," but the story is more ambitious, and the note of pathos is not wanting.

Into the shanty-boat of Peter Lade, a lovable ne'er-do-weel, strays out of a storm a wretched woman and her child. The woman dies, and Peter sells the boat in order to give her decent burial and to care for the boy. He takes the boat to the rice swamps, where the new owner wishes to use it for duck shooting, and there they spend the Winter, Peter, little Buddy, and Booge, an intruding but child-charming tramp.

The story has its complications. There is a sound-hearted, sharp-tongued widow, resolved to marry Peter; an unlovely emissary of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children bent upon rescuing Buddy from his protectors, and certain strange revelations in regard to Booge, all of which help to bring about an unlooked-for ending. As might be expected, the story is not one to be taken seriously. But it is an agreeable companion for an idle hour.

A "LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST"

SIMPSON. By Elinor Mordaunt. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.35 net.

Several love stories in one is this, running through the scale of passion. Simpson, a delightful English bachelor, falls in love with Fountains Court, most adorable of English country places. There he and his chosen friends retreat, to live and work and be happy, freed from woman. Are they? The answer is the story. The romance of Van and Julie is all comedy and joy. The strange, wild storm that catches Strong, narrow lawyer, and Merwin, child of the gypsies, is all sad, mad tragedy, and the portrayal of this tragedy and the weakness and the meanness and the nobility which made it is done with power.

What comes to the other men, best of all to Simpson himself, is told with a delightfully human and clever touch.

A STAGE HEROINE

THE DUST OF THE ROAD. By Marjorie Patterson. Frontispiece in color by Wootfelk. Henry Holt & Co. $1.30 net.

This is the tale of what life can bring a gifted, unconventional, ambitious American girl who sets out to conquer, via the stage, the provinces and London—and, of course, the Continent and America in the near future. Tony loves it all—the thrill of acting, the ups and downs of fortune, the occasional success, the comradeship of her stage friends! It is evident that the author knows and loves the behind the scenes of which she writes, and the reader is interested, but not surprised, to find that Miss Patterson is an actress of experience.

David is the reason—and a very good, if disturbing, one—why Tony's dreams of a stage career are modified, and she reads a new meaning into the words which are her creed:

I trust life, and it's the way to get the best out of every one and everything.

A HOLIDAY STORY

BECAUSE YOU ARE YOU. By Kate Whiting Patch. Illustrated. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25 net.

A pretty, idyllic little story with a very familiar plot is this by Kate Whiting Patch, one evidently intended for the holiday season. A tired-out young schoolteacher whose nerves have given way under prolonged strain, but who is firmly determined not to become a "Professional Invalid," is sent by her physician to a New England coast village called "Land's End," where she boards with a delightful spinster in a picturesque old stone cottage. Living out under the pines restores her health; likewise her good looks. Presently she meets the "Painter-Man," and a dainty romance develops toward a satisfactory ending.

There are many pretty bits of description in the book, which is well written and has a good deal of charm. Especially pleasant to read is the scene in the Old Folks' Home, whence Mrs. Ropeley, dressed in all the finery the old ladies could muster, went to her cousin's wedding. The heroine, who herself tells the story, is an attractively fanciful young woman, and her comments on people and things are frequently entertaining.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS IN ALL BRANCHES OF LITERATURE

COMMUNICATIONS for these columns should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, New York Times Review of Books. They should be written on only one side of the paper and must contain the name and address of the writer. If the inquirer prefers, initials only will be printed with the communication.

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

E. B. O.—Please inform me who wrote the following verse and where it may be found:

You may talk of love in a cottage
And bowers of trellised vine,
And nature bewitchingly simple,
And milkmaids half divine.

The poem is "Love in a Cottage," by Nathaniel Parker Willis. The first stanza is as follows:

They may talk of love in a cottage,
And bowers of trellised vine,
Of nature bewitchingly simple,
And milkmaids half divine;
They may talk of the pleasure of sleeping
In the shade of a spreading tree,
And a walk in the fields at morning
By the side of a footstep free!

The poem is printed in full in "Stevenson's Home Book of Verse," published by Henry Holt & Co.; in "Poetry of American Wit and Humor," by L. C. Paget, published by L. C. Page & Co.; in "Humorous Poetry of the English Language," by J. Parton, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and in "Treasury of Humorous Poetry," by F. L. Knowles, published by Dana Estes & Co.

T. H. M.—Please inform me of the value of a "Doggett, New York Business Directory for 1846-47, with a map." It is practically unused and unworn.

It is worth about half a dollar. A copy of the 1842 issue brought recently only 10 cents at auction.

I. B. G.—Will you kindly print in your columns a list of Anthony Trollope's best known works?

The following novels are by Anthony Trollope: "Framley Parsonage," "The Small House at Allington," "The Claverings," "Orley Farm," "Can You Forgive Her?" for which he received $17,625 from the magazine in which it first appeared; "Phineas Finn, the Irish Member," "Phineas Redux," "The Prime Minister," "Is He Popenjoy?" "The Way We Live Now," "Nina Balatka," "Linda Tressel," "He Knew He Was Right," "The Vicar of Bullhampton," "Mary Gresley," "Ralph, the Heir," "Barchester Towers," "The Last Chronicle of Barset," "Doctor Thorne," and "Castle Richmond." His autobiography is one of the most famous books of its kind. He was a voluminous and systematic writer, and a complete list of his books would be entirely too long to print here.

L. BLOOD.—Kindly advise where I can get a copy of "Light on Masonry," by David Bernard, published by William Williams, Utica, N. Y., 1829. What would a copy be worth?

This work has been for a long time out of print. A copy might be found in some second-hand bookstore or at an auction sale of old books. The Brinley copy brought $8 at auction in 1881.

GUY S. CROCKETT.—I have a set of Shakespeare in twenty volumes and I am curious to find out the intrinsic value of same. These books have been in the family for quite a number of years. I note that the date of publication is 1813 and the publisher is T. T. Davidson, Lombard City, Whitefriars, London, and on the fly leaf at the bottom it states that this edition was printed for twenty different persons. The first name is J. Nichols & Son, London, and the last name is Wilson & Son of York.

The "Plays" of Shakespeare, notes by Johnson, Steevens, and Reed, London, 1913, twenty-one volumes octavo, brought $8.40 at the Tallmadge sale in this city in 1905.

LUCIE W. EDWARDS.—Can you tell me whether the quotation, "Battle of the Giants," refers to the battle of Waterloo or Austerlitz, and what it is from?

According to Brewer's Historic Note Book neither Waterloo nor Austerlitz was known as the "Battle of the Giants," but the Battle of Marignano was so designated. This battle was fought on Sept. 13, 1515, and during which the allied French and Venetian armies, under Francois I. and D'Alviano, defeated the allied Italian and Swiss army. The carnage was very great, 12,000 of the conquered and 4,000 of the conquering army being left on the field. Trivulzio, who had been present in eighteen pitched battles, called them all child's play compared with this "combat of the giants."

A. T.—Will you kindly tell me the source of the two following quotations that are inscribed on the front of the Public Library:

"But above all things truth beareth away the victory."

And—

The first quotation is from the Apocrypha, I. Esdras, Chap. 3, v. 12, and the second is from Whittier's "The Shadow and the Light," Stanza 21.

RUTH BUTLER.—Can you tell me the value of a set, eight volumes of Lodge's Portraits of Illustrious Personages," published by Henry G. Bohn in London, MDCCCXLIX?

It brought $16.80 at the Tillinghast sale in Philadelphia in 1906 and $4 at an auction sale in this city the same year.

L. H.—Kindly inform me if there is any value attached to three volumes of "The Documentary History of the State of New York," published in 1849.

"The Documentary History of the State of New York," by E. B. O'Callaghan, Albany, 1849-51, four volumes, has fetched at auction from $3 to $7.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

R. C. COOLEY.—"M. E. H." in your issue of Sept. 14 asked for the words of "Whispering Hope," by Alice Hawthorne. They were contained some thirty years ago in a ballad collection, "The World of Song," published by Ditson, if my memory serves correctly. Some ten or fifteen years before that the duet was sung in the operetta "Evangeline," adapted—very freely—from Longfellow's poem of that name. Older readers of This Review will recall that the heroine of the operetta was accompanied by a tame heifer, possessed of ability as a clog dancer; also that several stage celebrities of a few years later, among them Henry E. Dixey, began their histrionic careers as legs of the nimble heifer. Members of "the original Florodora Sextette" were thus anticipated by the sterner sex who claimed to have been "the original hind legs of Evangeline's heifer."

LOUISE WARING.—I find the translation of Heine's little lyrics so crude and not true to the spirit that I take the liberty to send one I made on the spot. I love "my Heine" and consider it a sacrilege to "traduce" him by such translations:

O'er my sad and lonely life
Once there shone a vision fair;
Now that image dear has vanished;
Night enfolds me; bleak and bare.

Children playing in the darkness
Are beset by awe and fear,
And they sing a Christmas ditty
To call back their wonted cheer.

I, a wilful child, now singing
Here, amidst my pending doom;
May the tune be little joyful.
Still, it has dispelled the gloom.

CAROLINE BENSEL.—The poem, "The Lights of London," by George R. Sims, asked for by your correspondent, "C. M. R.," is as follows:

The way was long and weary,
But gallantly they strode,
A country lad and lassie,
Along the heavy road.
The night was dark and stormy;
But blithe of heart were they,
For shining in the distance
The lights of London lay.
O gleaming lights of London, that gem of the city's crown;
What fortunes be within you, O Lights of London Town!

With faces worn and weary,
That told of sorrow's load,
One day a man and woman
Crept down a country road.
They fought their native village,
Heart-broken from the fray;
Yet shining still behind them
The lights of London lay.
O cruel lights of London, if fears your light could drown,
Your victims' eyes would weep them, O
Lights of London Town!

ANNIE W. STRATHERN.—The poem "'Tis Evening Brings My Heart to Thee," for which C. Jones asked in your issue of Oct. 26, was written by Fanny Crosby and was set to music by Henry Tucker. It may be found on Page 174 of the "Musical Monitor," published by W. A. Pond in 1870.

We are informed that it is also printed in the Franklin Square Song Collection No. 7 and also that the song and music can be purchased from W. A. Pond & Co., 18 West Thirty-seventh Street, New York.

K. H.—I should be glad to know if the following poem is the one sought for by "F. L. P." in your issue of Oct. 5. It was published in The Galaxy of December, 1870, with the initials "L. F.," and the author was subsequently found to be Katharine Hillard.

LOVE AND FRIENDSHIP.

Two roses grow in my heart of hearts,
In the quiet cloistral gloom,
And they bend their tender wealth of buds
Over a silent tomb.

One rose is pale as a flake of cloud
Half lost in the blue above;
The other is red as the leaping flame,
And the name of that rose is Love.

The white rose thrives in the still, cool air,
The quiet cloistral gloom;
But the red rose droops in a mute despair
Over the silent tomb.

M. J. S.—I would like to reply to "F. B.'s" query in regard to "The Singing of the Magnificat," which appeared in your Aug. 31 issue.

It is the title commonly given to the Latin text or vernacular translation of the canticle (or song) of Mary, which was sung by the Blessed Virgin on her visit to her cousin, St. Elizabeth, before the birth of our Lord. A two-page definition or description and history of "The Magnificat" can be found in the Catholic Encyclopedia.

R. A.—Several weeks ago some one asked, through your columns, for the whole of a poem of which one stanza was quoted. I have not seen any reply, which is strange, considering who the author is. The verses are as follows:

TO S. R. CROCKETT.

By Robert Louis Stevenson.

Blows the wind to-day, and the sun and the rain are flying;
Blows the wind on the moors to-day, and now,
Where about the graves of the martyrs the whaups are crying,
My heart remembers how!

Gray recumbent tombs of the dead in desert places,
Standing stones on the vacant wine-red moor,
Hills of sheep, and the homes of the silent vanished races,
And winds, austere and pure.

Be it granted me to behold you again in dying,
Hills of home! and to hear again the call;
Hear about the graves of the martyrs the peewees crying,
And hear no more at all!

WILLIAM M. SWEENEY.—In reply to the inquiry of Isabel Niles, in THE BOOK REVIEW of Oct. 26, I have a copy of "Aspinax," which I prize highly as one of the first books given me when a child. The title is: "Aspinax, or the Enchanted Dwarf, by Edward Willett, designs by J. H. Howard;" T. W. Strong, publisher, 98 Nassau Street, New York. There is no date of publication.

The little jingle should read:

Blow, winds blow!
Let the wind go,
And bear him far out of sight.
Then, earth, let him rest
On thy merciful breast,
In the land where the wrong is made right.

OLIVER C. BROWN.—Answering inquiry of "K. A. W." the poem to which he refers was not written by Grover Cleveland's grandfather, but by his great-grandfather, the Rev. Aaron Cleveland. It is not a short poem as he supposes, but quite long. I have it entire in an old volume entitled "Poems, Elegiac and Poetry of Connecticut." The poem is too long to copy. It is well worth perusal.

APPEALS TO READERS

E. I. B.—Can any reader tell me where a copy of Gilbert H. Chesterton's poem, "The Inn at the End of the World" may be found?

M. T. F.—Would some reader kindly send me a copy of "The Song of the Voyageur," by de Chatilon, or let me know where I can find one.

A. D. J.—Will some reader kindly let me know where the poem on Garibaldi on "The Red Shirt" can be found?

G. C.—May I inquire through your readers, for the authorship of a little poem, entitled, "Peggy," and also the text of the closing verses, the first two of which read:

Oh! Peggy, dear Peggy, so lovely you are
I'm dazzled anear you, and haunted afar,
Each moment I find in your flower-like face
Some shy, hidden charm, in its rapture to trace.

In the depths of your eyes shadowed violets nest,
That come in the night-time and rob me of rest,
And whene'er the morning no comfort I win,
So I dream of the dimple that peeps 'neath your chin.

And the last line of the last verse ends with "Peggy take me."

M. S. L.—Can any of your readers tell me where I can find a poem, which was published in 1909, containing the following lines:

The countries are few
I haven't been through,
I've sailed every sea on the map,
I've shipped on a sailer,
Been mate on a whaler,
And known both as Colonel and Cap.

INTERESTED.—Can any of your readers tell me from what poem the following is taken and who wrote it? If it is not too long will you kindly print the poem?

Peace! Pence! He is not dead, he doth not sleep;
He hath awakened from the dream of life;
He has outraced the shadow of our night.

MAX A. WHITING.—I should like to know the author of the poem (also the title) in which occur the following lines.

A steed, a steed of matchless speed,
A sword of metal keen.

As I recall it, the spelling was not as above, but was somewhat archaic.

CLINTON S. RAMEE.—Will some reader be kind enough to give me the lines written by Major André the day before his execution, beginning:

'Tis not the fear of death that damps my brow,
'Tis not for another breath I ask thee now.

M. H. H.—Can any reader tell me the author of the following:

Speak once more and then be dumb,
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find thy body by the wall.

W. K. N.—Will some kind reader furnish the full poem which was written about the expulsion of the Moors from Granada. I believe that the opening line is as follows:

"Long ago in old Granada
When the Moor was forced to flee," &c.

"Better than Out"

"Better than David Harum"

THE

ORGANIZED BUSINESS

BUSINESS ORGANIZATION AND COMBINATION. An Analysis of the Evolution and Nature of Business Organization in the United States, and a Tentative Solution of the Corporation and Trust Problems. By Lewis H. Haney, Ph. D., Professor of Economics in the University of Texas. The Macmillan Co. $2 net.

This is an interesting and fairly written work on business problems. We have first a series of chapters describing and analyzing the various forms of business organization in such a way as to bring out the century-long evolution which has molded them. Then, the corporate form, being clearly dominant, the life history of a corporation is set forth in a series of chapters which describe in some detail the main events: promotion, underwriting, reorganization, and the like. Finally, the question of public policy is raised, and an attempt at a comprehensive and scientific solution of that question is made.

To the average business man, this book should hold a good deal of interest. The details of the organization of an enterprise are given, together with samples of promoter's agreements, contracts, by-laws, syndicate agreements, trust agreements, &c. These are all given in a series of appendices, which present some of the most interesting material in the book. The structure and history of a typical business corporation is given, including such questions as marketing and the Stock Exchange, reorganization and receivership, &c. The section of Public Policy attempts to outline various reform measures, including the Limited Liability Association, methods, and a critique. There is a good deal of sound information in the book for the average reader.

The Old Chicago

Milo Milton Quaife's "Chicago and the Old Northwest" is a careful and thorough study of original sources, written in a style so clear, simple and full of the color of the life that it makes very enjoyable reading. Mr. Quaife begins with the story of what the site of Chicago—the old Chicago Portage—was to the natives and early explorers and, after showing that it was even then one of "the keys of the continent," graphically writes a detailed account of its history from 1673 to 1835. He ends with a dramatic account of the farewell of the Pottawattomie Indians as they started upon their journey to their new home in the West. The book is a comprehensive study of the evolution of the Northwestern frontier, with Chicago as its pivotal point. (University of Chicago Press, $4.)

Motherhood

Matters in which the world at this moment is manifesting great interest are discussed with unusual insight in Dr. Elizabeth Sloan Chesser's book entitled "Woman, Marriage and Motherhood." The author knows her subject exceptionally well and deals in an intelligent way with a great many hygienic, legal, political, moral, social, economic and industrial phases of it. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.50.)

DOSTOEVSKY'S NOVELS

THE IDIOT. By Fyodor Dostoevsky. From the Russian by Constance Garnett. The Macmillan Company. New York, 1913.

THE new edition of Dostoevsky's novels being brought out by the Macmillan Company points to a notable revival of interest in the so-called "apostle of pity and suffering." The reading public of some twenty or more years ago, with whom Dostoevsky enjoyed a temporary popularity, swept him aside to greet the ascetic moralities of Tolstoy, the realism of Turgenieff, and the revolutionary pessimism of Gorky and the younger school of Russian writers. Dostoevsky's present return to favor, however, for the very reason that it is not conducted to the aforetime flourish of trumpets, but is possessed rather of a stable, enduring quality, augurs a permanent place on our book shelves for the work of this most typical of Russian novelists.

In the present volume, completely translated into English for the first time by Constance Garnett, the glowing faith of the author in life and humanity fairly leaps from the pages, sweeping the reader along into a magnificent appreciation of the epic splendor of existence. He suggests no tests, offers no proofs for his sublime belief in his fellow-men and in the universal order; for him the vision of the soul suffices—and for us, too, while we read. The novels of Dostoevsky reveal, often with autobiographical correctness, the man who has known abject poverty, sickness, and the bitterness of man's injustice; yet they are the work, too, of the man who has passed through the flames and emerged freed alike of desires and passions, and convinced of a universal harmony in which the flotsam of life plays its necessary part. In some strange way the iron failed to enter his soul, and he attained the steadfast mind to which happiness and unhappiness, good, and evil were equally unimportant—the animating spirit alone mattered. So it is that he manages to make the reader hobnob not unwillingly with a loathsome old rascal like Gen. Ivolgin, or a drunkard like Lebedyev. He communicates to us his own interest in the spectacle of the inarticulate soul struggling to express itself in the incongruities and absurdities of time and circumstance. Myshkin, whom an English writer would have portrayed with a dignified and august remoteness, is naturally and simply presented, as saints frequently appear to their contemporaries, as "an idiot," the fool whom we encounter in more than one Christian legend.

The plot of "The Idiot," technically considered, is negligible. It rambles along like the current of life itself, apparently aimlessly; there are pauses for long conversations, for bits of heart-rending pathos, or the conflicts of ordinary domestic life, and again, at long intervals, to the fanfare of trumpets, we are ushered into scenes of splendid tragedy or dramatic realism. Yet the "scenes" are apparently of no more import than the lengthy dialogues that take place between the characters, except as they serve to reveal the beauty that lies behind all phenomena, both good and evil. Perhaps to believers in the asceticism of Tolstoy this genial and sympathetic interpretation of life by Dostoevsky savors a bit of the Nirvana of the East. But an abstraction from personal affections and animosities fits in well with the demands of an artistry that is too great to be confined to one man's pulpit, but expresses the longing, "Sieut Deus, bonum et malum scientes."

EUROPE'S RIVERS

The Seine, Loire and Moselle in Recent Books

THE SEINE FROM HAVRE TO PARIS. By Sir Edward Thorpe. Macmillan & Co. $4.

ALONG FRANCE'S RIVER OF ROMANCE, THE LOIRE. By Douglas Goldring. McClure, Neal & Co. $2.75.

ALONG GERMANY'S RIVER OF ROMANCE, THE MOSELLE. By Charles Tower. McClure, Neal & Co. $2.75.

THREE of the picturesque and historic rivers of Europe, the Seine, Loire, and Moselle, are described in recent publications in a most delightful manner, heightened by incidents of personal observation and excellent illustrations.

Sir Edward Thorpe's account of a yachting trip up the Seine from Havre is a most acceptable change from the customary travel descriptions of Europe by motor car. The motor vehicle gets over a great deal of country swiftly, but usually very little is seen thoroughly. The yachting trip was a leisurely one, forty days being consumed in the 230-mile run up the deep, winding river from the ocean to the final anchorage near the Suresnes Bridge, almost beneath the shade of the trees in the Bois de Boulogne.

Interspersed with amusing personal experiences are historical reminiscences of the famous towns, cathedrals, and other noteworthy places along the river, many of which figure prominently in the early history of France. A cruise on the Seine, as the author says, is a liberal education, and he wonders that more travelers who have the time do not take such a trip. Two to four persons may enjoy a delightful vacation in a sixteen-foot gig fitted with sails or a motor, and roomy enough for ordinary baggage. The frequent towns and villages afford good accommodations and no real inconveniences will be encountered.

With its system of channels and locks the Seine is readily navigable for commerce from the seaport of Havre to Paris for vessels of 700 to 1,000 tons, provided they draw under ten feet of water and can pass easily under the numerous bridges. In a straight line, the distance to Paris is 112 miles, but the great bends and curves of the Seine increase the distance by water. To one in love with the country and interested in quaint scenes, it is well worth the longer journey. The pen-and-ink sketches by Olive Branson add to the attractiveness of the volume.

Very readable and full of interest to the tourists who may visit any section of the charming château country in France is Douglas Goldring's volume on France's "River of Romance, the Loire." The largest river in France, 625 miles from the Atlantic to its source, it has been well called the national river, and its history is full of stirring deeds, from the exploits of Jeanne d'Arc to the heroic struggle of Chanzy in 1870. As a civilizing influence its early history was full of importance, and from the earliest times until the coming of the railway its course formed the chief trade route and highway of communication between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic Coast. Steamboats were early in use on the river, and a line was started between Nantes and Angers in 1823. The introduction of the railway systems virtually destroyed the profitable carrying trade of the Loire, and since that time it has lived in the memory of its more glorious days of history and commerce.

While the descent of the Loire to-day, says the author, is full of interest, it is also full of sadness, so much vigor and life has vanished from its banks. "All down its course is a long procession of crumbled ruins, of decayed strongholds, of towns whose modern commercial activity only accentuates the sadness of the remains of their more glorious past, and of bridges which show signs of having been broken and battered in a constant succession of wars, lasting even up to modern times."

The history of its golden days, with its famous châteaux and those who occupied them, is well given, while present-day conditions are explained in a manner indicating keen and lively observation.

The history of the Moselle, with its vineyards and peaceful villages, is agreeably told by Charles Tower. The river flows through the Alsace-Lorraine country, full of reminiscences of France. It traverses a district celebrated for the excellence of its wines, of which the Berncastler-Doktor holds high fame among connoisseurs. But how few ever drink the genuine! In the Berncastle district there are 5,500 acres under cultivation, and only 200 produce wine of the first class, perhaps 1 per cent. of all the Doktor wine sold every year. And how little of that 1 per cent. ever reaches foreign lands! The new German law has prevented the substitution of much poor material for the best, but the author sadly admits that he has discovered no official objection to the same old trash appearing on an English wine list.

No vineyards in Europe are more picturesque than those of the Moselle, climbing up at an angle of forty and sometimes fifty degrees from the bank or roadside to a height of 500 feet, terrace upon terrace, laboriously walled up in step-like fashion. Unlike the more famous Rhine, into which the Mosella flows at Coblentz, the river has no heavy barge traffic and no factories to mar its natural beauty. In the Spring of the year it reaches the maximum of its beauty.

The Moselle has its share of ruins, ancient castellated towers, legends and records of martial deeds, all of which are described with a due appreciation of the romantic charm of the river. The volume may doubtless influence more than one tourist in the future to seek out the beauties of the Moselle country.

BETTERING COUNTRY LIFE

EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES OF VILLAGE AND RURAL COMMUNITIES. Edited by Joseph K. Hart. The Macmillan Company. $1.

This book offers another evidence of that quickening of social and intellectual life in the Northwestern United States that began a few years ago and has produced some very interesting results and some very useful books. Out of the State universities of that region are constantly coming books on educational questions that are full of searching thought and vital discussion. This present volume is an instance of how keenly alive the people of the Northwest are to the importance of the social and educational problems the whole country is facing, to what good purpose they are thinking about them and how eager they are to put thought and discussion into practical effect. The compiler is assistant professor of education in the University of Washington. He is also the author of four of the articles in the book and apparently the instigator of the volume. Of the dozen other chapters three are written by agents of the National Department of Agriculture, and half a dozen by men and women who are State officials or college professors in the West or Northwest.

The volume is intended particularly to help the village or rural school teacher to work out ways and means by which the community can be made to appreciate its own physical, mental and moral resources and be organized for its own development and betterment. While based on sound philosophical principles and showing a wide and close knowledge of rural and village conditions, the facts presented are of a highly practical nature. And also the writers are fairly aglow with love for fellowman, with eager desire to help the world along to better things, and with optimistic conviction as to the possibilities of their propaganda. There is too much good and vital thinking in this volume for its reading to be confined to country school teachers. Every one ought to read it who is interested in the problems of the betterment of rural life.

"YOUTH WILL BE SERVED"

YOUTH WILL BE SERVED. By Dolf Wylarde. John Lane Company. $1.30 net.

The declared subject of Dolf Wylarde's new novel is the inevitable sacrifice of the older to the younger generation, but to the reader that seems rather an incident than the motive of the book. Indeed, we are not at all sure that any such sacrifice is portrayed at all, unless it be the sacrifice to both wife and child of the expatriated and much ignored husband. As for the fact that the mother of a grown son gave up an illicit love to save him from one equally poisonous, if the book recognized such a thing as duty, one would say that this was not a sacrifice of age to youth, but of wrong to right.

The story tells of an English officer's young wife sent home with her baby from South Africa, because unable to endure the climate; and of the nineteen subsequent years, more than half of which were spent away from the husband much older than herself. Certain types of English womanhood make a sorry showing upon these pages, with their "cur parties," their disloyalties, their craving for excitement, their consuming passion for dress, their courting of risque situations, and their yearning for unlawful caresses.

"Satan finds some mischief still For idle hands to do"

might well be the motto of the novel.

It is cleverly written, and throws interesting light upon the long separations which are all in the day's work to a nation whose drum-beat is heard around the world; but few of its characters command sympathy, and it is not pleasant reading. There is a note of resistance to everything that militates against the imperious claim of personal happiness—a note too often dominant in the fiction of the day, and always to its artistic as well as its ethical loss.

STAMMERING

STAMMERING AND COGNATE DEFECTS OF SPEECH. By C. S. Bluemel. 2 vols. G. E. Stechert & Co. $5 net.

These palnstaking volumes are evidently the outcome of much research and a diligent comparison of what has already been written on the subject, as the appended bibliography shows. The first volume is devoted to a study of "The Psychology of Stammering," and deals with the various mental types, the brain, the relations between mental imagery and voluntary speech, impairment of the brain centres, (aphasia, &c.,) the mental confusion in stammering, fear and auto-suggestion, and similar considerations. Of these the chapter on aphasia is perhaps particularly interesting and illuminating, and would well repay perusal by any psychologist. The second volume is devoted to study of the various systems at present employed for treating stammering patients, which include respiration, vocalization, articulation, verbal exercises, mechanical appliances, physiological methods, and a study of the various so-called "schools" and their methods which claim to cure stuttering and similar defects.

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, NEW YORK

THE HUNDRED BEST BOOKS OF THE YEAR

On Nov. 30th The New York Times Book Review will be published as a special Holiday Number of 64 pages, illustrated and printed on calendered paper.

For the leading feature of this number arrangements have been made with a committee from the Department of English of Columbia University, comprising Prof. John Erskine, Dr. H. R. Steeves, and Dr. Carl Van Doren, to furnish a list of THE HUNDRED BEST BOOKS published since the 1st of January.

The list thus selected will be accompanied by an illuminating article written by Prof. Erskine. This will be followed by comprehensive reviews of each of the hundred books chosen, the whole forming a remarkable resume of the year's most noteworthy achievements in every branch of the world of letters.

In addition to this novel and informing feature, the Holiday Number of The Times Book Review will give four authoritative articles on four vital and controversial subjects, which are at present occupying the attention of the civilized world. The subjects chosen are Eugenics, the new science of social welfare; Feminism, the movement looking to the political and intellectual equality of the sexes; Socialism, the radical theory of government, and Psychism, the modern belief in a life after death. To give the affirmative attitude in each of these fields of thought the following writers will furnish reviews of books chosen by themselves:

Dr. C. B. Davenport, Director of the Station for Experimental Evolution of the Carnegie Institute, will review a book, published this year, on Eugenics.

Ellen Glasgow, the famous novelist, and an enthusiastic supporter of the Woman Movement, will write a review of one of the year's books having to do with Feminism.

Algernon Lee, President of the Rand School of Social Science, will review a book of the year on Socialism.

Henry M. Alden, editor of Harper's Magazine and a well-known writer on the subject of immortality, will review a book that discusses the possibility of a life after death.

Besides this remarkable symposium on the Vital Questions of the Day, the Holiday Number of The Times Book Review will contain articles by some of the foremost contemporary writers, the names of whom and the subjects on which they are to write will be announced later. There will be, besides, a list of the best hundred books of the Holiday Season, selected by the publishers, and carefully prepared articles on holiday gift books for children, &c., together with critical reviews of the important books of the day.

Fur Trimmed Shadow Lace Blouses at $7.49

An enthusiastic reception awaits these. See the picture herewith, and you will gain an idea of the beauty of this blouse. It is of the daintiest shadow lace, with a net frill collar encircled with white fur to imitate ermine trimming down the front of the blouse; a vestee of black net over white, with dainty pearl buttons, is a feature, and drop sleeves ending with net frill are other conspicuous points that will attract attention. Entire blouse is lined with net, $7.49.

Silk Shadow Lace Blouse, $4.98

It has a net frill of black net with shadow lace revers and fancy ribbon trimming on collar and front, with ¾ length drop sleeves, finished with bow of ribbon; a flesh color chiffon lining adds to the daintiness of this blouse. Special price, $4.98.

Metal Run Laces at ½ Price

Why These Laces Are So Much Lower in Price Than They Should Be Is Easily Told.

In the early Summer, when the outlook for these goods was far from promising, a prominent French manufacturer offered us quite a few thousand yards, at a very large discount, and, while we were doubtful about the outlook also, the concession tempted us. Despite the immense popularity of these goods at present, we offer them on the basis that we bought them.

BRILLIANT FIRST WEEK OF SOCIAL SEASON BEGINS

Horse Show and Opera Dazzling Society Spectacles—Tableaux Vivants in a Persian Garden on Tuesday—Plans for Russian Costume Ball in December.

ALL social roads lead to New York these days, for the formal Winter season has commenced. A brilliant week has set in, beginning yesterday with the opening of the twenty-ninth annual exhibition of the National Horse Show Association at Madison Square Garden, where the horse, enthroned as king, will receive the tribute of society for the coming six days. A dazzling social spectacle is promised for to-morrow night at the opening of the Metropolitan Opera season.

Fashion will hold sway this week with its brilliant gowns and wraps for the opera, flawless tailleurs for the afternoon at the Horse Show, and elaborate afternoon toilettes for the rounds of debutante teas and receptions and other affairs that are to be crowded into a busy week.

Society will scintillate all week at the Garden against a background of a Roman amphitheatre. Marshall field rose yellow and pale blue enter into the color scheme of decoration. With the distant view of Roman landscape and under trophies of eagles, tablets, and wreaths, reminders of the days of Caesar, the matron and débutante of to-day, with the strong Oriental note in costume, will offer an interesting and very pleasing effect. The white fire of diamonds and the white purity of pearls will gleam in the red-tinted light of the boxes in the parterre at the opera, with the Oriental effects in jewelry.

The Oriental note will also be struck on Tuesday afternoon and evening at the benefit tableaux vivants, set in a Persian garden, which are to be revealed at the Waldorf-Astoria under fashionable patronage, with a galaxy of debutante beauty in the train of gorgeous effects and costumes

Society is coming to town for the first brilliant week of the season, and the smart hotels are entertaining many distinguished guests from over the seas, as far as the coral strands of India. Prince and Princess, Maharajah and Maharanee, Dukes and Lords will all pay homage this week to Her Republican Highness, whether it be in the brilliant throng at the opera or along the "Appian Way," as the promenade at the Horse Show is called this season.

At the Opera.

As usual the occupancy of the boxes in the parterre at the opera has been cut up and divided into leases and subleases this year, which will effect a change in society's array on subscription nights during the week. Some have dropped out on account of mourning and others have dropped out altogether. There are two new boxholders this season. It costs about $200,000 to enter the golden horseshoe, and only two other transfers of parterre boxes are recalled since the owning company was formed a generation ago.

Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, having set aside mourning, will have the use of Box 28 on Mondays and matinées. Clarence H. Mackay has given up Box 54 in the grand tier for Mondays, and the F. Gray Griswolds have it now for that night. Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard (Miss Helen Gould) will be seen on Thursdays in Box 25. Mrs. M. Orme Wilson and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt will share Box 3 this season alternately. William Ross Proctor and William Willis Reese are the two newcomers in the parterre. Charles Steele has taken Box 21 for even Mondays and Wednesdays. Among those who are in mourning and will hardly be seen at the opera for a time at least are the J. Pierpont Morgans, George F. Baker and family, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. John Astor, and the Pells. Although Mrs. Philip Lydig is still abroad owing to ill-health, Box 2 stands in her name for even Mondays. Miss Annie Leary has this box for Wednesdays. Box 24 now stands in the name of Robert Walton Goelet, his mother, Mrs Goelet, having died abroad last December. Ogden Mills and Mrs Whitelaw Reid share Box 20, although Henry T. Sloane has it for even Fridays. Mrs. Pembroke Jones has Box 11 for the opening night. Mrs. C. P. H. Gilbert has Box 5 for the opening night. Mr. and Mrs. Ormond G. Smith have Box 22, and Mrs. John S. Rogers will be seen in Box 2 at the opening. Edmund L. Baylies retains Box 53 in the grand tier for Mondays.

Tableaux Vivants in a Persian Garden.

Much interest is being expressed over the moving tableaux vivants, which are to be given on Tuesday, both afternoon and evening, at the Waldorf-Astoria for the benefit of the Catholic University at Washington. The boxes have nearly all been taken, and there are some very desirable orchestra seats to be had of Mrs. F. Burrall Hoffman, 58 East Seventy-ninth Street. The presence of the Persian Chargé d'Affaires and other Oriental dignitaries will lend a color to the Persian setting of the stage, and Liza Lehmann's Persian Garden music is to be rendered by a vocal quartette, accompanied by the grand organ. After the entertainment the floor is to be cleared for dancing.

Many prominent society women are taking part and numerous débutantes are to sell programmes and flowers. They will all appear in costume. The whole affair promises to be on a scale of dignified splendor. The afternoon performance begins at 3 o'clock and the evening session at 9.

Among the society girls who are to sell programmes and flowers are the Misses Tesson Thayer, Hope Hamilton, Marjorie Browning, Gladys Robbins, Estelle O'Brien, Frances Montagu Ward, Elizabeth Sabin, Elizabeth Kendall, Josephine Nicoll, Mai Watson, Margaret Smith, Lentilhon Gilford, Annie Gilbert, Marie Butler, Priscilla Bull, Mildred Dennis, Harriet Lummis, Blanche Sheehan, Dorothy Chisolm, Eugenie Philbin, Eleanor Harishorne, Louise Trevor, Noel Johnston, Marie Rodenwald, Estelle Mulqueen, Marian Hall, Caryl Hackstaff, and many others. Mrs. Stanley Mortimer, Mrs. Sherwood Aldrich, Mrs. John Rutherfurd, and Mrs. Philip G. McFadden are among those who will also be seen with flowers and programmes.

The list of boxholders includes Mrs. I. Townsend Burden, Jr., Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, Mrs. John A. Black, Mrs. Cornelius C. Cuyler, Mrs. Andrew Dougherty, Mrs. William H. Force, Mrs George H. Abbott, Countess de Gallifet, Mrs. William Proctor, Mrs. P. B. Gilbert, Mrs. Charles Deering, Mrs. Henry Seligman, Mrs. William Arnold, Mrs. Anson McCook Beard, Mrs. Stuart Duncan, Mrs. W. M. V. Hoffman, Mrs. James B. Clews, Mrs. Lewis Nixon, Mrs. John G. Agar, Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler, Mrs. Warren Dennis, Mrs. Frederick Pearson, Mrs. Preston Satterwhite, Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, Mrs. Henry W. Taft, ex-Justice and Mrs. O'Brien, Mrs. E. S. Hamilton, Mrs. James Mott Hartshorne, John D. Crimmins, Mrs. A. Masters McDonnel, Mrs. C. Sheehan, Mrs. Michael J. Mulqueen, Mrs. Jacob L. Phillips, Mrs. Dudley Alcott, Mrs. George H. Abbott, Mrs. W. A. Redding, and Mrs. Frederic Neilson.

Incidents in Society.

Mrs. Garrett B. Klp is to give a large luncheon at Sherry's to-morrow.

Dewees W. Dilworth, who is to marry Miss Edith Logan on Nov. 25, will give his farewell bachelor dinner at the Ritz-Carlton on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Newbold Morris are sailing for Europe on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont will shortly occupy their house, which has undergone extensive alteration, at 44 East Thirty-fourth Street.

The annual ball for the South Side Hospital of Long Island is to take place at Sherry's on Thursday, Jan. 22.

Mrs. Samuel Milbank is to give a luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton on Nov. 24.

Mrs. W. Russell Moore will give a musicale at her home, 121 Madison Avenue, on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Shepherd and Miss Maude Shepherd are to open their house, 16 East Sixty-ninth Street, to-morrow for the Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cary Rumsey are being congratulated on the birth of a daughter at the home of Mrs. Rumsey's mother, Mrs. E. Henry Harriman, 1 East Sixty-ninth Street.

Mr. and Mrs. William Douglas Sloane have opened their house, 2 West Fifty-second Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Asher Robbins will be at the Waldorf-Astoria this Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. John V. Bouvier, Jr., will be at 47 East Fifty-seventh Street for the Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles de Loosey Oelrichs, who were in Newport for the Summer, are at 178 East Seventieth Street for the season.

Dr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, after their stay in Shelburne, Vt., will occupy their new apartment at Seventh-ninth Street and Park Avenue.

Willard D. Straight, who married Miss Dorothy Whitney, has bought the plot at the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Ninety-fourth Street. Mr. Straight is now the owner of both the north and south corner plots. The plans for the Straight residence have not yet been filed.

Henry C. Frick's new residence, on the site of the old Lenox Library, is now nearing completion, and is one of the most interesting houses above Fifty-ninth Street.

Russian Costume Ball.

Mrs. Oliver Iselin, Mrs. George Draper and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., are giving up much of their time in preparation for the Russian Costume Ball, which is to be held in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton on the night of Dec. 18, for the benefit of the Lenox Hill Settlement, at Seventy-second Street and Avenue A. The affair promises to be an elaborate and brilliant spectacle of mid-season, and many prominent society women have already arranged to give large dinners on that evening, taking their guests afterward to the ball.

Mrs. Draper, 162 East Sixty-third Street, is looking after the sale of tickets, and reports a very spirited sale. The floor boxes are particularly desirable. Tickets are $5 each, and boxes, seating six, $60. The tendency seems to be to book reservations far in advance, after the old adage, "first come, first served;" or is it, best served? At any rate, the decorations of the ballroom and the costumes are to be quite unique, and coming on the day before the Czar's birthday, a special significance is attached to detail and Russian atmosphere.

Among those who are giving dinners that evening before the ball are Mrs. George Pratt, Mrs. Earl Dodge, Mrs. C. B. Alexander, and many others. The patronesses include Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Mrs. Ernest Iselin, Mrs. Theodore Douglas Robinson, Mrs. Robert Gerry, Mrs. H. Fairfield Osborn, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. John Pratt, Mrs. H. H. Rogers, Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Mrs. Norman Whitehouse, Mrs. Robert L. Bacon and Mrs. William Sloane.

Benefit Bridge.

The Board of Managers of the New York Free Home for Convalescents are to give a bridge at the Plaza on Monday afternoon, Nov. 24, for the benefit of the home, which is supported by voluntary contributions. Many well-known society women are among the patronesses. Tickets may be obtained from Miss Mary Van Buren Vanderpoel, 30 East Fifty-third Street; Mrs. H. C. Van Auken, 612 West 115th Street, and Mrs. George Wilson Smith, 149 Madison Avenue.

Engagements.

No date has been set yet for the marriage of Miss Helen Dinsmore Huntington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Huntington of Hopeland House, Staatsburg, N. Y., to Vincent Astor, son of the late Col. John Jacob Astor, whose engagement was recently announced. It is expected that it will take place early in the Spring. Miss Huntington is with her parents at Staatsburgh, where they plan to spend a greater part of the Winter, although several entertainments in her honor are being arranged by her friends in town. The Huntington estate is near Mr. Astor's place at Rhinebeck. The couple have received many congratulatory messages from their friends since their engagement was announced. Mr. Astor has already selected as one of his ushers George C. Douglass of Minneapolis, Minn., whose father, Walter E. Douglass, was lost in the Titanic disaster, in which Col. Astor was a victim. Society is hoping that they will be seen tomorrow night at the opening of the opera season in Box 7 in the parterre. Miss Huntington's engagement ring is said to be a most exquisite one, consisting of a huge emerald. Miss Huntington's favorite gem, surrounded by six perfect diamonds.

An important engagement announcement of last week, which came from Paris, was that of the Comtesse Louis de Gontaut-Biron, eldest daughter of John G. A. Leishman, formerly American Ambassador to Germany, and Mrs. Leishman, to James Hazen Hyde, formerly of New York, now living in Paris. The Comtesse was Miss Martha Leishman, and her husband died in Paris in 1907. Her younger sister, Miss Nancy Leishman, was married to the Duke of Croy at Geneva, Switzerland, on Oct. 28. The Comtesse's former husband was a member of a family of the old French aristocracy and master of the Biarritz hounds. She has been a frequent visitor to this city before her father became Ambassador to Germany. Mr. Hyde was a familiar figure in social and business circles in New York until 1905. He is the son of the late Henry Baldwin Hyde, founder of the Equitable Life Assurance Society. Mr. Hyde was at one time Vice President of the Society.

The engagement was announced in THE TIMES on Tuesday of Miss Elizabeth Hare Powel, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hare Powel, of Ardsley-on-Hudson, to William B. Fraser-Campbell, a son of the late Evan J. Fraser-Campbell, of Dunmore, Scotland, and Mrs. Campbell of this city. Mr. Campbell was graduated from Harvard in 1911. Miss Powel, who came out about three yeare since, is well known in society in New York. No date has been mentioned for the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. James F. Fargo of 120 East Thirty-seventh Street last week announced the engagement of their daughter, Mrs. Grace L. Chauncey, widow of Daniel Chauncey, Jr., to Harry A. Curtis of New York and Boston. Mr. Chauncey died in 1909 as the result of an injury received while playing polo at Cedarhurst, L. I., two years after his marriage to Miss Fargo. Mr. Curtis is a graduate of Harvard, class of '96, and is in business in New York. He is a member of the Racquet and Tennis Club. No date has been set for the wedding.

Of interest to society was the engagement of Miss Katie Schermerhorn, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Egmont Schermerhorn of this city, to John Matthews, son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Matthews of this city and Windham, N. Y., which was announced last week. Miss Schermerhorn is one of the young girls in society, although she has not made her formal début. She makes her home with her brothers, John Egmont Schermerhorn and Amos Cotting Schermerhorn, in East Seventy-ninth Street. The latter was married to Miss Georgia Williams last February. John Egmont Schermerhorn arrived from Europe on the Olympic last week and went to Roosevelt Hospital, suffering from typhoid fever. Mr. Matthews attended Yale, but left school to enter business in this city. No date has been fixed for the wedding.

Dance for St. Ambrose Mission.

At Sherry's on Tuesday evening, Nov. 25, at 9:30 o'clock, an entertainment and dance will be given for the benefit of the Children's Club of St. Ambrose Mission, under the auspices of the New York Guild of the St. Timothy's Alumnae. St. Ambrose Mission is situated at 236 East 111th Street, in Harlem's "Little Italy." Here the Children's Club carries on a settlement work among the children and young people of the neighborhood. The work was started in 1905, and has entirely outgrown the capacity of the present chapel.

There will be contests in the waltz, tango and turkey trot, and prizes are to be awarded to the winners. Entries are free and should be made to Miss Lilian French, 43 West Fifty-first Street, who is also in charge of the sale of tickets.

Among the guild members are the Misses Rosalie Coe, Isabelle Cumming, Anita Emmet, Helene Fish, Carol Harriman, Ruth Haskins, Ina Kissel, Hope Malcom, Sarah Morgan, Helen Peabody, Penelope Sears, Genevieve Sanford, Charlotte R. Strong, Janet K. Townsend, Mary Tweed, Jeannette Whitlock, and many others.

The patronesses for the entertainment include Mrs. Robert Bacon, Mrs. Henry de F. Baldwin, Mrs. Anson McCook Beard, Mrs. John M. Bowers, Mrs. Robert S. Brewster, Mrs. Gardner Brüen, Mrs. William M. Carson, Mrs. Walter F. Chappell, Mrs. Joseph O. Choate, Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark, Mrs. George E. Dadmun, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdoff, Mrs. Edward K. Dunham, Mrs. John H. French, Mrs. Birney Fellowes, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. J. Amory Haskell, Mrs. Charles W. Haskins, Mrs. Morris Kellogg, Mrs. Gustav E. Kissel, Mrs. Arthur S. Lloyd, Mrs. George Malcom, Mrs. Edward S. Martin, Mrs. Junius S. Morgan, Mrs. Charles J. Nourse, Mrs. Wayne Parker, Mrs. Alonzo Potter, Mrs. Winslow S. Pierce, Mrs. John T. Pratt, Mrs. John Hill Prentice, Mrs. Thomas Punnett, Mrs. William Willis Reese, Mrs. Isaac Seligman, Mrs. Willard Straight, Mrs. James R. Strong, Mrs. Erastus Taft, Mrs. James B. Taylor, Mrs. Allen Tucker, and Mrs. Charles H. Tweed.

Dance for Bethany Day Nursery.

The dance to be held on Monday, Dec. 29, at the Plaza for the benefit of the Bethany Day Nursery promises to be an interesting event of the season. The dance will be held in the grand ballroom, during which competitive dances will be given.

Mrs. Ira Barrows of 521 Park Avenue is Chairman of the committee, which includes Mrs. William Carter, Mrs. William Hamilton, Mrs. Charles Hathaway, Mrs. George H. Helme, Mrs. J. Prentiss Kellogg, Mrs. Frederick Sterry, Mrs. McLane Van Ingen, and Mrs. Elliott Ward.

Wedding Notes.

The wedding of Miss Estella Sherlock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Reginald Sheflock, to Amedee Spadone, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spadone, will take place at 4 o'clock to-morrow at the residence of the bride's parents, 316 West Seventy-ninth Street. The Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires and the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks are to officiate. Mrs. Paul Plunkett is to be her sister's matron of honor, and the bridesmaid will be Miss Blanche Spadone. The little Misses Alice and Betty Spadone, cousins of the bridegroom, are to act as flower girls. Master Mitchell Sherlock and Howard Sherman, Jr., are to be the pages. Edgar McKaig of Philadelphia will serve as best man.

A wedding in Brooklyn [illegible] est on Wednesday will be that of Miss Grace Meurer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Meurer, to Ira Richards, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Richards of North Attleboro, Mass., who makes his home at 19 East Fifty-seventh Street, this city. The ceremony will be celebrated in the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, and there will be a large reception afterward at the Meurer home in Lincoln Place. Mrs. Marion Richards Coffin is to be her sister's matron of honor, and the bridesmaids are to be the Misses Mae Meurer, Anna Meurer, Margaret R. Pratt, and Mildred Zellhoefer of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Henry A. Alker and Mrs. C. Robinson Duff of New York. Jay Freeborn Carlisle will be best man, and the ushers are to include Charles F. Samson, Alfred L. Norris, John E. Tweedy, Eben R. Knowlton, William W. Pell, and James F. Pierce. Mr. Richards is a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and belongs to the Calumet, Piping Rock, Yale, Nassau Country, Riding, and New York Yacht Clubs.

The marriage of Miss Susan E. G. Drake, daughter of Mrs. Benjamin Drake of this city, to Richard Sears of Boston, Mass., is to be solemnized on Wednesday afternoon in St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street. It is to be a quiet wedding owing to the death of Lawrence Drake, the bride's uncle. Miss Drake's only attendant will be Miss Clarinda Boardman, daughter of Mrs. Lansdale Boardman. Frank P. Sears will be his brother's best man, and the ushers will include Robert Payne, John Storer of Boston, Arthur Herbert, and Ronald Lyman. The Rev. Dr. S. De Lancey Townsend is to officiate.

Fairman Dick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Evans R. Dick, and Miss Gladys Roosevelt, a daughter of John Ellis Roosevelt, who are to be married on Tuesday, Nov. 25, visited the City Hall on Thursday and took out their marriage license. The ceremony is to be performed in St. Bartholomew's Church, and the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks will officiate. The wedding is to be a quiet one, as will the reception, which is to follow at the Roosevelt town house, 818 Madison Avenue. Miss Roosevelt will have her sister, Miss Jean Roosevelt, as maid of honor, and another sister, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Jr., as matron of honor. Evans R. Dick, Jr., will be his brother's best man. The names of the ushers have not yet been announced.

Miss Effie C. Zabriskie, daughter of Mrs. Cornelius I. Zabriskie, will be married on Tuesday, Nov. 25, to Raymond Williams Stephenson of this city at the Second Reformed Church, Hackensack, N. J. A reception is to follow at the home of the bride's mother at Hackensack. Miss Zabriskie is a second cousin of Mrs. Mary B. Pell, who died at her home in New York last May, leaving most of her $5,000,000 fortune to Columbia University, Rutgers College, and the Reformed Church of America. Mr. Stephenson is a Columbia graduate, class of '10.

The wedding of Miss Edith Wormser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isidore Wormser, Jr., of this city, to Mathieu Goodchaux of Paris is to take place on Dec. 15. Mr. and Mrs. Wormser and their daughter are now staying at St. Moritz, Switzerland, where the marriage ceremony will be performed.

THE débutantes are now stepping into the social limelight, and they will be entertained as never before, according to the affairs of tribute to youth and beauty which are being arranged. There will be hardly a night now but that some particular bud will gleam like an evening star in society's garden. Buds at the Horse Show, buds at the opera, buds everywhere, on the ballroom floor, singing and dancing for sweet charity's sake, and sending the flowers which freshen their formal entry into society to the poor and the sick in the tenements and hospitals.

Mrs. Warren E. Dennis is giving a luncheon to-morrow at Sherry's for her débutante daughter, Miss Mildred Dennis.

Mrs. John P. Gilford of 473 Lexington Avenue will give a reception on Wednesday afternoon to introduce her daughter, Miss Lentilhon Gilford.

Miss Clementine J. Reese will give a débutante luncheon at Sherry's on Wednesday for her niece, Miss Virginia Scully.

On Thursday Miss Helen Hyde will give a luncheon for Miss Louise Butler.

Mrs Legg Howard is to give a reception on Friday at her home, 449 Park Avenue, for her daughter, Miss Dorothy L. Howard, which will be followed by a dinner and theatre party for those receiving.

Mrs. Riley Miles Gilbert is to give a reception on Saturday at her home, 563 Park Avenue, for her daughter, Miss Annie Gilbert.

Mr. and Mrs Charles William Romeyn will give a tea dance on Nov. 26 at Sherry's for their débutante daughter, Miss Estelle Y. Romeyn.

Mrs. H. Hobart Porter has sent out invitations for a reception on the afternoon of Nov. 28 at her home, 405 Park Avenue, for her second daughter, Miss Margaret Seton Porter.

Mrs. John Davis has issued invitations for the coming out reception of Miss Amo Sessions, her daughter by a former marriage, which is to be given on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 29, from 4 to 7.

Mrs. Charles E. Becker of 830 Park Avenue is giving a reception for her daughter, Miss Marion Janet Becker, on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 6. Miss Becker is a grand-daughter of the late Charles Bathgate of New York.

Mrs. J. Fisher S. Banks and her daughter, Miss Alida Banks, will be at home this Winter at Mrs. J. Van S. Oddie's, Mrs. Banks's mother, 987 Madison Avenue. On Dec. 6 a reception will be given at the home of Mrs. Banks's sister-in-law, Mrs. M. Banks Taylor, 9 East Eighty-first Street, to introduce Miss Banks, who is a grand-daughter of the late J. Van S. Oddie. Mrs. Banks is well known in society, although she has been absent from town for some time. She has a country place at New Hamburg, N. Y.

Mrs. Eugene Klapp and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Klapp, are arriving from Cuba this week and have taken an apartment at the Gotham, where Mrs. Klapp will introduce her daughter at an afternoon reception on Saturday, Dec. 13.

Mrs. Virgil P. Gibney will give a reception at her home, 16 Park Avenue, on Dec. 6, to introduce her daughter, Miss Marion P. Gibney.

Miss Louisa Morris Livingston, daughter of Bayard U. Livingston of Albany, N. Y., is to be introduced at the home of her father on Dec. 6. She will come to New York later, and will be with her aunt, Mrs M. G. Wilkins, 45 Fifth Avenue. Miss Livingston is a cousin of the Countess de Laugier Villars and of Mrs. Geraldyn Redmond.

Mrs. Arthur B. Emmons of 60 Park Avenue will introduce her daughter at an afternoon reception at her home on Dec. 10.

Mrs. John V. Bouvier, Jr., will give a dinner and dance on Dec. 12 at the Ritz-Carlton for her daughter. Miss Edith Bouvier.

Mrs. Thomas Hunt Talmage is to give a tea dance on Friday afternoon, Dec. 26, for her débutante niece, Miss Louisa T. Butler, at the Ritz-Carlton.

Mrs. J. E. Ryder will give a reception in January at her residence, 981 Park Avenue, to introduce her daughter, Miss Helen Whitney Ryder.

Miss Dorothy M. Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Taylor of 40 East Eighty-third Street, is to be a débutante this season.

The above includes the majority of the débutante announcements of last week, when several interesting affairs for the season's buds were given. Miss Tesson Thayer gave a luncheon, Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler gave a small dance for her daughter. Miss Sarah Schuyler Butler, and Miss Marian W. Hall, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Benjamin E. Hall, made her formal début yesterday. Some of the Winter's buds, including the Misses Miriam Harriman, Leonie Burrill, Mary Alexander, and Maud Coster, were at the dance which A. Eugene Gallatin gave at Sherry's on Thursday evening, after the seventh annual dinner of the Motor Car Touring Society at the Union Club.

Annual Dinner of the Society of Colonial Wars.

Three processions are among the picturesque ceremonies which mark the annual dinners of the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of New York, the twenty-first of which will take place on Tuesday night at Delmonico's. The first procession is that of the members of the society and their guests, who will form in couples, and, led by the field music, a drummer and fifer in full Colonial costume, wigs, cocked hats and all, and two members of the Committee of Stewards, will move into the banquet hall. Then the Seventh Regiment Band will play until the members are seated. Immediately afterward the procession of the Governor and the guests will form. The field music again precedes, followed by two Stewards with official batons and the Governor of the society, escorted by the two Chief Stewards. Then will come the general officers, the general council, the representatives of the army and navy, and of other societies, each escorted by a member who will lead him to his seat. The Governor, Col. William Whitehead Ladd, will then call upon the Chaplain of the society, the Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield, pastor of the Old Brick Presbyterian Church, to pronounce grace.

After the dinner, and before the speeches start, will be held the procession of the colors. In this the drummer and fifer will be followed by two of the stewards bearing the great silver punch bowl of the society and two other stewards carrying the batons of the 201st and 203d Regiments. After them will come six members, walking in couples, carrying the national flag, the State flag, the flag of the General Society of Colonial Wars, the Dutch flag, the Louisberg flag and the British flag. The punch bowl will be placed before the Governor and the flag bearers will place the flags against the wall at intervals in the rear of the guest's table. The Governor will then propose the toast to "The President of the United States," and all will remain standing while the "Star Spangled Banner" is played. The speeches will follow.

A FEW FACTS Concerning This Great Clothing Sale

You know that when you buy a Hart, Schaffner & Marx Suit or Overcoat at $12.50 you get a great bargain.

To be sure that you get one, just look for the Hart, Schaffner & Marx trade-mark.

If you do not buy a Hart, Schaffner & Marx garment, it will be because you get something that pleases you better; because the actual values in the clothes not made by Hart, Schaffner & Marx run up to $35.00.

There is no intention, nor any possibility of misrepresentation, deception, nor any purpose to sell you anything that is not straightforwardly "as advertised."

If you don't know whether you buy a Hart, Schaffner & Marx Suit or Overcoat, or not, you are just as well off, for the values are $18.00 to $35.00.

FINALLY

Any man who is not satisfied with his purchase at O'Neill's of Hart, Schaffner & Marx or other clothes, can come back at any time and get satisfaction in cash or in clothes, just as he chooses.

GENERAL ACTIVITIES IN SOCIAL AND CLUB WORLD

Card Parties and Cabaret Entertainments in Favor---Clubs Settling Down to Busy Season---Musical Societies in Full Swing.

HORSE SHOW week, the football series, and plans for the Thanksgiving holidays are keeping the west side busy these days, to say nothing of the opening of the Opera season and preparations for a number of large weddings. The season was late in starting, but it opened with a rush, and there are more at home and bridge invitations out now than is usual in the Autumn. Mr. and Mrs. Ladd Plumley were among those who joined a motor party to New Haven for the football game yesterday, going up with Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Phillips.

Miss Anna Larkin of Fifth Avenue and Fiftieth Street will entertain a box party at the Horse Show on Saturday afternoon, taking her guests afterward to the Ritz for tea.

Mrs. Joseph Murray Holt of Yonkers entertained the Niagara Chapter of the Imperial Order Daughters of the British Empire on Wednesday in her home, 182 Locust Hill Avenue. The hostess was assisted in the receiving line by Mrs. Gambier Bonsfield, Mrs. J. Elliott Langstaff, President of the Daughters in the United States, and Mrs. T. K. Thompson. The object of the organization is to stimulate social and intellectual intercourse, good-fellowship, and philanthropy among women of British birth.

The Rev. John Hardenbrook Townsend and Mrs. Townsend have sent out invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Dorothy Harcourt Townsend, and Frank Courtney Nicodemus, Jr., of this city, on Dec. 30. The wedding will take place in Grace Church, Hamden, Conn., the home of the bride.

A card party in aid of the Upper Manhattan Branch of the Widowed Mothers' Fund Association will be held on Thursday afternoon at the Hof Brau, Broadway and Eighty-third Street. Mrs. Isidore Elmer will be the hostess. Mrs. Samuel Elkeles is Chairman of the branch. Among those who will entertain parties that afternoon are Mrs. Aaron Jedel, Mrs. W. E. Dreyfus, Mrs. Henry Bodenheimer, Mrs. Harry Kraft, Mrs. Max Levenson, Mrs. Edward Goodman, Mrs. Emil Fopper, Mrs. Sigmund Wormser, Mrs. Abraham Peyser, Mrs. Nathaniel Morris, Mrs. Sidney Nevi, Mrs. Edwin Schwarz, Mrs. Percy Menken, and Mrs. Joseph Blau. There will be several luncheon parties that day, the hostesses taking their guests afterward to participate in the game.

Miss Mary Jordan Baker has just returned from Asbury Park, where she has been since early Spring with her mother, to her home, 351 West 114th Street. Cards are out for the series of Rubinstein Assemblies, of which Miss Baker is hostess. The dates are Friday evenings, Nov. 21, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Jan. 23, Feb. 13, March 6, and April 24. Mrs. Chapman and officers of the club will act as chaperons, and Miss Baker will ask members of the club to receive with her. A professional dancer will give instructions from 8 until 10, and dancing will be general from 10 until 12. Miss Helen Barrett, 410 Riverside Drive, has charge of the tickets. Rubinstein opened its season yesterday with an afternoon musicale at the Waldorf. The East Room was filled with members and guests, and after the programme of songs and piano numbers by Blauvelt, Leginska, and MacWhirter, there was a collation and social hour.

These are the officers elected at the annual meeting of the Knickerbocker Relief Club on Tuesday at the Waldorf: Mrs. Camille Birnbohm, President; Mrs. M. J. Pendergast, Mrs. John H. May, Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. B. B. Tripp, Vice Presidents; Mrs. Louis V. Southack, Treasurer; Mrs. D. D. Jones, Recording Secretary; Miss Mary Duffy, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. A. W. Richmond, Auditor. An afternoon at cards, with tea following, will be given by the club on Monday, Dec. 1, at the Alhemarle. Tickets may be obtained from Mrs. Arthur C. Stutts, of the Ansonia. Mrs. Nelson will give a musicale for the club on Tuesday in her home, 514 Second Street, Brooklyn.

Miss Courtenay Collins will be married to Daniel H. Haynes of this city on Wednesday. Miss Collins is a Washington girl who for several years has made New York her winter home, stopping with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Crawford, 254 West Ninety-ninth Street. The wedding will take place at 8:30 in the evening in Mrs. Crawford's home. Miss Leslie Zahn will be maid of honor, and there will be two ribbon girls, Muriel Thompson and Margaret Jones. Dr. H. D. Furniss will be best man. The Rev. Dr. Finch will perform the ceremony, which will be followed by a small reception. After their wedding trip the young people will live at 251 West Ninety-eighth Street.

Thursday at 11 o'clock the Haarlem Philharmonic will open its season with a musicale at the Waldorf. Thirty members of the New York Symphony Orchestra, with Saslavsky to conduct, will be among the artists. Miss Isabelle Hauser and Mme. Voight will also appear. The new officers are: Mrs. Rastus Seneca Ransom, President; Mrs. Laird Mrs. H. W. Davis, Vice Presidents; Mrs. H. W. Booth, Treasurer; Mrs. Frank Deacon, Recording Secretary; Mrs. Julian Henriques, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. Frederick A. Duneka, Chairman of Music; Mrs. Robert MacLaren, Chairman of Membership; Mrs. W. W. Glendenning, Chairman of Arrangements; Mrs. Judson G. Wells, Chairman of Entertainment; Mrs. Warren Van Kleeck, Chairman of Printing. The ushers for the musicale will be Miss Frances Simmons, Miss Hortense Ogden, Miss Fanny and Miss Dorothy Leake. The President will receive before the program, assisted by Mrs. Frank Littlefield, Mrs. George Best, Mrs. John Haskins, Mrs. M. T. Conover, Mrs. F. W. Blauvelt, Mrs. J. C. Crawford, Mrs. A. N. Crow, Mrs. T. P. Edwards, Mrs. Alexander Reed, Mrs. W. A. Barnum, Mrs. O. W. Beals, Mrs. H. A. Dunn, Mrs. Henry Benning, Mrs. W. G. Brady, and Mrs. W. H. Howe.

Last month the Society of New York State Women made a pilgrimage to Valley Forge to inspect the work that has been done on the Washington memorial. They were much pleased with the progress made, and returned fired with new enthusiasm to raise money to bring their share in the structure to a rapid completion. To that end they will give a card party on Monday, Nov. 24 at the Astor, with Mrs. William Beam, 118 West Eighty-second Street, in charge. Her committee includes Mrs. William R. Stewart, Mrs. R. A. Lau, Mrs. John Van Tine, and Mrs. Boyd Delbridge. The particular part of the memorial in which the women are interested is the bronze door.

At a meeting of the Flower Hospital Auxiliary at the Plaza on Tuesday final arrangements were made for the annual ball which is to be given at the Majestic on Friday. The officers elected at this meeting were Mrs. O. R. Von Bonnewitz, President; Mrs. William Todd Helmuth and Mrs. J. T. Simonson, Vice Presidents; Mrs. Wendell Barker, Corresponding Secretary; Miss Eloise Simons, Recording Secretary; Miss Ethel Myers, Treasurer; Mrs. Royal S. Copeland, Chairman of Entertainment Committee; Mrs. E. G. Tuttle, Mrs. Charles Withington, Mrs. Robert Lyle, and Mrs. Ellison Magee, Executive Board.

A good programme has been arranged by Miss Elizabeth Toombs, Chairman of the day, for the meeting of the West End Woman's Republican Association on Thursday afternoon at the Astor. The session will open at 2:30 and will include a discussion of current political events and several musical numbers. Mrs. Charles Whitman has been invited as a special guest. Mrs. de la Ruelle will speak on "The Midinette of the Paris Shops." Officers installed at the October meeting were Miss Mary Wood, President; Mrs. C. Edward Lichtenheim, Mrs. W. Townsend, and Mrs. H. B. Nichols, Vice Presidents; Mrs. Louis E. Manley, Recording Secretary; Mrs. Edwin B. H. Tower, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. H. H. Dean, Treasurer; Mrs. John Lee, Auditor; Mrs. L. E. Cogswell, Historian. Tea will be served in the Orange Room after the meeting. Mme. de Ruelle has been sent here by the French Government to look into the conditions of our working girls, and can give a vivid account of those in her own country.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bleier announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Frances Helen Bleier, to W. Wallace Lyon of Bronxville.

Col. and Mrs. Robert Morrow Kelly of Louisville, Ky., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lidie Kelly, to J. Malcolm Muir of 329 West Eighty-third Street.

Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Hoffman-Porter of 135 West Eighty-seventh Street have returned to town from Upper Lisle.

Mrs. Franklin Fyles will give a card party on Wednesday, Dec. 3, at the Plaza.

A week from this afternoon, from 4 until 7, Dr. and Mrs. M. Murray Waxman, 143 West Seventy-first Street, will receive with Miss Marguerite H. Marx. Miss Marx, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney J. Marx, has recently announced her betrothal to Fernando Perez del Pulgar, Vice Consul from Spain to New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris San of 606 West 115th Street announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Julia San, and Ralph B. Ittleson of Brooklyn.

Mrs. Ernest Limburg has charge of the preparations for the luncheon which will be given to-morrow by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Washington Heights Hospital at Delmonico's. This will celebrate the eighth anniversary of the society. The President, Mrs. Adolph Heller, will receive with the officers and Board of Managers.

Mrs. Joseph H. Wise of 159 West Eighty-fifth Street will give a dance at Delmonico's on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jones are spending a fortnight at Lakewood, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. John Godfrey, formerly of 243 West Seventy-sixth Street, have gone to Boston to live.

Mrs. Francis Bellamy gave a large reception a few days ago in her home, 435 Convent Avenue, for the Elmira College Club. The rooms were decorated with the college colors, purple and gold. Those who received with Mrs. Bellamy were Mrs. George M. Robinson, Mrs. Frederick Hamlin Mills, Mrs. Byron Kilbourne, Mrs. William Rathbun, Mrs. George Sleard, Mrs. Shrady, Mrs. Julia Roe Davis, Miss Amelia Davis, and Miss Marie Cantwell. Mrs. Ostrander of Oklahoma and Mrs. Orrin Doolittle of Yonkers were among the guests of honor, and Mrs. William H. Doty of Yonkers, whose ill-health has kept her out of club life for a year, was welcomed back. As improvements are needed at Elmira which will necessitate an outlay of between $70,000 and $80,000 a scheme has been thought out to raise the money. Dimes are to be solicited from graduates and friends of the college a foot at a time, twelve to the foot, one mile netting $6,336. Also a Christmas tea and sale of Christmas wrappings and trappings will be held at Ardsley Hall, 220 Central Park West, on Saturday, Dec. 13, from 3 until 6. Mrs. Madison C. Peters is Chairman in charge.

A theatre party at the Republic on Tuesday evening next is expected to net a sum large enough to defray the expense of maintaining the ambulance service and emergency ward of the Polyclinic Hospital. The party will be given by the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. Charles Gilmore Kerley President. The remuneration from the city is less than the cost of maintaining the work, and there is an annual deficit which this year the auxiliary will meet.

Graduates of the Normal College are making an effort to raise a fund of $100,000 to be used in the new college buildings. For the benefit of this building fund of the Associate Alumnae and for the Children's Educational Theatre there will be an afternoon and evening performance of "The Prince and the Pauper" on Saturday, Jan. 10, in the Aerial Theatre, on the roof of the New Amsterdam.

The Normal College Chapter of the Lenox Hill Settlement was at home at the Settlement House, 446 East Seventy-second Street, on Friday afternoon. Mrs. James H. Moffet and Mrs. Stamm had charge of the arrangements.

Sunday evening, Feb. 1, is the date chosen by the New York Philanthropic League of the Independent Order of True Sisters for its annual concert. It will take place in the large ballroom of the Astor. The league is giving hot luncheons to the three classes of crippled children in Public School 27 and is helping other cripples, and with the proceeds of the concert will extend its work. Mrs. Julius Baran is President of the league.

Mrs. Timothy Martin O'Connor and Catherine E. Schultz will give a card party on Friday, Nov. 28, at 2 o'clock, in the Albemarle Hoffman, for the philanthropy department of the Chicago Women's Club supporting the East Side Home and Day Nursery. Hostesses for the afternoon will be Mrs. Walter H. Gahagan, President; Mrs. W. R. Chapman, Mrs. A. N. Palmer, Mrs. D. Evertitt Wald, Mrs. W. J. Worden, Mrs. J. N. Love, Mrs. W. F. Waller, Mrs. W. G. Hamilton, Mrs. R. B. Corby, and Miss Elizabeth Lonergan.

A dance in the ballroom of the Plaza has been planned by the Lehbog Junior Circle of the Silver Cross Day Nursery. It will take place on Tuesday, Dec. 30. Mrs. William Wallace Clendenning is Honorary President of the Circle, and the other officers are: Frances Simmons, President; Muriel Bliss, Vice President; Margaret Black, Treasurer; Margaret Styles, Recording Secretary; Dorothy Hearn, Corresponding Secretary; Adele Clinton, Chairman of Supplies; Dorothy Douglas, Chairman Printing; Jennie B. Greenidge, Chairman Visiting. The young girls who will help make the dance a success are the Misses Helen Schriner, Mildred Chave, Eleanor Remer, Dorothy Fischer, Edna Fischer, Amelia Lundstedt, Gladys Styles, Avis Pelham, Edith Koch, Beatrice Nickel, Gula Howell, Marguerite Smith, Helen Burrows, Ada Titus, Angelique Hart; and June Love.

The Lehbog Circle of the Silver Cross, an organization similar to the Lehbog Junior Circle, will give a Fête d'Hiver at the Manhattan Hotel on Saturday, Dec. 13. There will be a cabaret and general dancing. Mrs. Clendenning is also Honorary President of the Circle. Olive Tinker is President; Frances Vaughn and Enda Haaren, Vice Presidents; Bertha Fennell, Treasurer; Vera Albertson, Recording Secretary; Hazel Guild, Corresponding Secretary; Genevieve Schriner, Chairman of Printing; Florence Rechtel, Chairman of Supplies; Florence Welker, Chairman of Visiting; Nettie Mitchell, Chairman of Membership. Other members are the Misses Ethel Alver, Louise Townsend, Margaret Kelly, Adele Grenet, Mrs. William Zeigler, Jr., Mrs. Ward Pearson, and Mrs. Edward Bascom.

There was a meeting of the Century Theatre Club at the Astor on Friday. The next social meeting will take place on Friday, Nov. 28, at 2 o'clock. "Farce" will be the subject under the direction of Mrs. James Ballantine.

A social meeting of the New York Theatre Club will be held on Tuesday at the Astor, with Mrs. Sara Foster, Chairman of the day.

Miss Lucille Fitch, a débutante of last season, is at Fort Monroe for the month of November, a guest of Lieut. and Mrs. John Pirie.

Mrs. Leonard Day of 356 West 145th Street will give a luncheon on Tuesday, for Mrs. Harry Patterson of Nyack, N. Y.

About 300 members and guests enjoyed the reception and dance given by the Harmony Fellowship Club on Wednesday at the Astor. The President, Mrs. William B. Smith, was in Buffalo attending the State Convention of Women's Clubs. There are nearly 500 members in the club, which is only two years old.

Two afternoon entertainments will be given at the Astor by the Widowed Mothers' Fund Association on Mondays, Nov. 24, and Dec. 8. There will be competitive dancing for prizes—boxes in various Broadway theatres—and motion pictures for the amusement of the guests. The committee in charge includes Mrs. Charles Oppenheim, Chairman; Mrs. Edward Goodman, Mrs. Charles Henry Israels, Mrs. Harry Kraft, Miss Annette Kohn, Mrs. Henry Meyers, Mrs. Edward Seligman, Mrs. Henry Zuckerman, and Mrs. Henry Bodenheimer. On the first afternoon Mrs. Albert Clayburgh will sing and on the second there will be motion pictures of Sarah Bernhardt as Queen Elizabeth. Tickets, at $5, may be obtained from Mrs. Kraft at the Langdon, from Mrs. Henry Bodenheimer, 1,239 Madison Avenue, or at the offices of the association, 192 Bowery. Each ticket entitles the holder to the two afternoons or two persons to one afternoon.

With the help of the Ladies' Auxiliary, the Union Hospital Association will give a card party and dance in the Armory of Battery D, 166th Street and Franklin Avenue, on Wednesday evening. The proceeds will be applied to a building fund for a suitable site and larger building.

A regular meeting of the National California Club will be held on Tuesday at 2 o'clock. A few moments will be devoted to business, a brief social hour will follow, and the programme will be given at 3:30. Miss Adelaide Stedman will have charge of the programme. The guests of honor will be members of the Advisory Council of the Literature Committee of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs. On this day there will begin a series of talks on current events under the chairmanship of Mrs. G. Upton Hallett, the speaker being Mrs. C. G. McComas. Also at this session the first of a series of talks on California history will be given under the chairmanship of Mrs. A. A. Fisher. Mrs. Virginia Stedman Stedman will act as Chairman of Reception. All visiting Californians in town are invited to attend and make themselves known to the President, Mrs. T. J. Vivian.

In order to carry on its work in maintaining classes to teach patriotism to immigrants, the National Society of Patriotic Women of America will give a card party on Tuesday at the Majestic Alpin. The game will begin at 2 o'clock under the direction of Mrs. Harvey Tyson White.

Mrs. Wallace Reid of the Wyoming entertained the members of the Knickerbocker Chapter Daughters of the Revolution on Monday afternoon. Auction bridge was played, the prizes going to Mrs. Charles W. Dayton, Mrs. Charles E. Banker, Mrs. Pugh, and Mrs. R. R. Smith.

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Frederick Schiller opened her home on Riverside Drive to the Bel-Canto Club. The club will have a booth at the annual bazaar of the Professional Woman's League which is to be held at the Waldorf on Dec. 19 and 20. On Friday, Dec. 5, the club will give a dance and the regular monthly reception will be held on Saturday of this week at the McAlpin.

On Sunday Dec. 14, the American Dickens League will give its second annual benefit at the Harris Theatre for the Little Nell Hospital Beds—beds free to suffering children in the various city hospitals. The league dedicated its first bed at the Health Home, West Coney Island, in June, for the Children's Aid Society. The honorary committee includes Cardinal Gibbons, Most Rev. Joseph Hertz, Chief Rabbi of England, W. Bourke Cockran, the Rev. Madison Peters, Dr. Ernst Lederle, Prof. Franklin Hooper, and Francis Garvin.

A package party was held on Monday in the home of Mrs. William J. Harding, 1,340 Pacific Street, Brooklyn. Each woman took a parcel, which was auctioned off, the proceeds to be applied to the patriotic work of the State Society, Daughters of the Revolution. The Colonial Chapter was the one which gave the party. A Christmas package party will be held in December for the same fund.

Mrs. A. W. Wattenburg of 574 West End Avenue gave a bridge and tea on Friday in her home. It was a subscription affair, the proceeds to go into the fund raised by the doll table at the approaching Little Mothers' Bazaar. Mrs. J. Stuart Smith is Chairman of the doll section, which will be a huge shoe covered with chrysanthemums. The enterprise table, in charge of Mrs. John L. Sardy, Mrs. C. Albert C. Small, and Mrs. Goldsmith, will be decorated with crimson ramblers; Mrs. John Jay Cowdray's booth will be decked with carnations; Mrs. E. E. Edwards has chosen buttercups for her booth, and Mrs. Wiley and Mrs. Bangs will have sunflowers for their table.

Another fair has been planned to take the time and attention of the already more than busy west side. It will take place this week Wednesday and Thursday in the church rooms of St. Luke's, Convent Avenue and 141st Street. The tables and their Chairmen are: Ribbon booth, Mrs. E. M. G. Tower and Miss Tower; flowers, Mrs. Hudson Storer and a committee of thirty; variety booth, Mrs. Charles de Cordova and Mrs. H. G. Nelson; fancy table, Mrs. Frederick T. Weed, Mrs. Robert E. Values $7.50 to $10 Waists at $5

An enormous variety to choose from, including Waists of net lace, chiffon and silk. They are in the newest styles, copies and reproductions of recent Paris models. Some samples included, one of a kind, that are especially handsome.

Colored chiffon and black, in all the good styles, many yoke and V neck models, smartly trimmed with lace and contrasting colors. Some of chiffon over fancy laces; some over silk. Some of embroidered net. A large gathering of Waists of crepe de chine, white and colors.
Second Floor.

$4, $5, $6 Sample Skirts, $3

MANY of these were made up for us from a good maker's remainders of cloth, and the rest are the sample lines of several good skirt makers.

They include skirts of diagonal, faille de laine, serge, corduroy, fancy crepons, wool brocades, novelty worsteds, etc. A very comprehensive range of sizes in regular and odd proportions so that almost any woman can be fitted at once in a handsome skirt with no alterations necessary. Any one of them excellent value.

Silk and Wool Dresses, a Clearance, Values to $17.15 : : : All at $9.75

Well made Dresses of fine wool crepes and serges and of crepe de chine and other good silks. All of them fashionable models, including black and the favored colors for day and evening wear.

They are trimmed with laces, nets, ribbons, buttons, draped and with girdles and sashes, some in tunic style.

Most of them were made up for us by a good maker out of his remainders of silk and cloth; some of them were samples, some are from our own stocks.
Second Floor, Fulton Street.

$3 All-Silk 40 Inch Broche Crepe de Chine
$2.50 All-Silk 36 Inch Broche Satin Charmeuse } $1.59

TWO EXQUISITE SILKS, among the very loveliest creations of this season—tomorrow at a low price that has not previously been equaled.

First is a Brocade Crepe de Chine made to sell at $3 a yard—and of which a very large amount has been sold here for that price. This quantity was bought at special advantages because the maker considers the Silks not quite perfect—yet you will find nothing to interfere with their wear or appearance.

The other is a brocaded satin Charmeuse in exquisite patterns—and this is also as perfect as any ever sold for full prices.

We have these two Silks in ivory, white, ciel, mais, lilac, heliotrope, copper, olive, taupe, navy, pink, flame, French blue, Copenhagen, sapphire, gold, wistaria, brown and black.

Metropolitan Opera House

Opening of Opera at Metropolitan Marks Current Week — Many Concerts—"Il Trovatore" at Century

THE opening of the Metropolitan Opera House to-morrow evening marks the beginning of what many people still consider the real musical season. At any rate, the Metropolitan will doubtless engross a large part of the attention, interest, and funds that the New York public has to give to music, now as in the past, perhaps too large a part; although it is not to be expected that other forms of music will suffer serious neglect. Carnegie Hall will still be filled to the last seat at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Aeolian Hall at the concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra, and those of the Kneisel Quartet. The great soloists who are to appear in the season will interest their multitudes of admirers, and the Philharmonic Society and the Musical Art Society and the other pillars of music in the city will also continue to show how great a public there is here for music and how lavishly it gives support to what it likes.

One of the interesting questions that will arise with the opening of the Metropolitan concerns the effect it will have on the new opera at popular prices at the Century Opera House. Is there a public willing to give continued maintenance to this enterprise, to find satisfaction in the reasonable excellence of its performances — even though they may wish they might be better in such important matters as chorus and orchestra? Will its patrons stick to the Century Opera, and refuse to be beguiled by the names of Caruso and the others whose magic fills the Broadway house? Will they be content to sit in reasonably good seats and hear a reasonably good performance for one or two dollars, rather than pay one or two dollars for a glimpse, or for no glimpse at all, from a great height, at a performance admitted to be superlative? The answers to these questions, when they are found out, will be of a good deal of importance in the future of music, or at least of opera, in New York.

***

There are to be new operas, and revivals of old ones in the coming season. Perhaps the celebration of Verdi's centenary may account in part for the first of such revivals, which is to be one of "Un Ballo in Maschera," as the first Saturday matinée. Perhaps the opportunity it is expected to give to Miss Frieda Hempel accounts for it in part. Managers in these days have to be always providing "opportunities" for coloratura singers; they do not seem to come of themselves, as they used to, in the natural order of things. "Un Ballo in Maschera" will not present itself as a novelty, however, even to the younger generation of opera goers. Mr. Grau revived it in the last season of his management, 1902-3, though he found it expedient only to give it once. Mr. Hammerstein hit upon it as something of value for his enterprising scheme, and gave it twice in his first season at the Manhattan Opera House, and four times in his second, those respectively of 1906-7 and 1907-8. Then he, too, dropped it, and it has not since been heard in New York.

***

The opera-going public in the past has been edified with the doings of the "Governor of Boston," Mass., who is, strictly speaking, the protagonist on the opera. He it is who has been represented as making love to the wife of his Creole secretary, visiting an uncanny spot somewhere in the Middlesex fells, to follow her in her search for a magical herb, (at present unknown to local botanists,) and giving a masked ball in his "palace"—heaven save the mark!—in that outpost of civilization and stronghold of Puritanism that must have roused the ire of Cotton Mather.

All this tissue of absurdity, which has been done away with in the version of the opera to be given this week, is a result of the checkered history of the opera. In the middle of the last century the composition and production of lyric dramas, especially in Italy, were adventurous and exciting occupations, and kept the lives of composers, librettists, and managers in frequent collision with the police, and quite free from somnolence. The Government censorship was extremely sensitive about "dangerous" subjects represented on the stage—subjects dealing with conspiracies, the assassination of kings, and the wickedness of royal lives, for instance.

Now, in its original form the libretto is hardly more than a direct translation of the libretto of an opera, "Gustave III.," prepared by Scribe for Rossini, and afterward composed by Auber, and still extant in choice French. The King of Sweden, in that story, is assassinated at a masked ball; the incident is historical, and was an event which marked the close of a bitter contest between the crown and the nobles of Sweden in 1792. The motive was purely political; but no librettist, and least of all Scribe, would hesitate to make use of the incident as if it were the outcome of a jealous husband's revenge for a love affair of the King. Verdi's librettist followed Scribe in representing the assassination upon the stage.

It so happened that while "Un Ballo in Maschera" was under renearsal in Naples, Orsini made his unsuccessful attempt to assassinate Napoleon III. in Paris. This sent the police of the whole Continent into spasms of terror, to the police. The scene was shifted to as remote a place as they could think of—namely, to Boston, Mass., U. S. A. The principal character became, instead of a European King, an English Earl of Warwick, Governor of Boston at the beginning of the eighteenth century. Renato, his secretary, became a "Creole"—to help with the local color, doubtless, Creoles, in the Italian conception, being abundant in the Boston of that period. So all was well. Nobody minded the incongruities in Naples in 1859, and the opera was acclaimed with enthusiasm.

But the vicissitudes of "Un Ballo in Maschera" were not yet over. The opera was taken to Paris in 1861, where an important personage "censored" it still further. At the Théâtre Italien the great tenor Mario was to impersonate the Governor of Boston; but he found the Puritan costume of the early eighteenth century—or whatever notion of it the Parisian costumers had evolved—very unbecoming to him, and positively refused to wear it. So, to set off Mario's ...m and figure more advantageously, scene was again shifted, this time ... Naples. The English Earl of Warwick became a Spanish grandee, the Duke of Olivares, Governor of Naples, to whose costume the most beautiful and fastidious of tenors could take no exception.

Sometimes the opera is given in its Bostonese setting, sometimes in its Neapolitan. Mr. Grau's performance presented a charming mixture of Puritan and Neapolitan costume. This week it is to be removed from both Boston and Naples, and will be supposed to play in some undetermined northern country, which might be Sweden as well as any.

A real novelty will be disclosed in the third week of the season, if present plans hold good — Richard Strauss's "comedy for music," "Der Rosenkavalier," the German composer's next-to-the-last operatic sensation. The opera, which some wish to call an operetta, has made as much stir in Germany as those that preceded it in Strauss's list, and it is now approaching the beginning of the fourth year.

Another new opera will be Montemezzi's "L'Amore del tre Re." Italo Montemezzi is as yet little more than a name outside of Italy; though this is his third opera. His first, "Giovanni Gallurese," written for a competition, was originally in one act, but has since been remodeled into three, and had success at its performance in Turin in 1905. "Hellera," at Turin in 1909, had less. "L'Amore del tre Re" was recently brought out at La Scala, in Milan, with reported success. Montemezzi is apparently no seeker after "verismo," and the scene of "L'Amore del tre Re" is in Italy in the Middle Ages.

Another American opera is to be given this season, the fourth under Mr. Gatti Casazza's régime, being Victor Herbert's one-act piece called "Madeleine." This is expected in January. In February Gustave Charpentier's "Julien" is promised. It was first produced in Paris last June, as a sequel to "Louise," although it appears to be, according to some accounts, more a stage adaptation of Charpentier's earlier "symphony-drama," as he called it, "La Vie du Poète." It is described, at any rate, as differing from "Louise" in being less realistic and more symbolical. In March Wolf Ferrari's "L'Amore Medico" will be given, a new opera in the style of "Le Donne Curiose," and, like that, based on one of Goldoni's plays. And finally, a more substantial honor to the memory of Verdi will be done near the close of the season, when his "Falstaff" will be revived.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

THE first of the Sunday afternoon concerts of the Philharmonic Society of New York will be given this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The assisting artist will be Mme. Gerville-Reache, contralto, of the Chicago, Philadelphia Opera Company. Mr. Stransky offers a programme for this occasion whose orchestra numbers consist of the Lalo overture, "Le Roi d'Ys"; the Massenet suite, "Scenes Pittoresques," and the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky. Mme. Gerville-Reache will sing the Berlioz aria, "The Death of Dido," from "The Trojans"; the "Spring Song," from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; and the "Air de Posthumia," from Massenet's "Roma."

***

On Thursday evening and Friday afternoon at Carnegie Hall the Philharmonic will give the third of its regular pairs of concerts. Leopold Kramer, the new concertmeister of the society, will make his initial bow as soloist before Philharmonic audiences. He will play Bruch's second concerto in D minor. Mr. Stransky will open his programme with the Max Reger "Ballet Suite," which is dedicated to him by the composer, and which will receive its first New York hearing at these concerts. It is said to be written in an entirely different style from the other works of this composer. The final number of the programme will be the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky.

***

The programme of the Symphony Society of New York for this Sunday is made up entirely of modern works. First come the symphonic pictures, "Thebes," by Ernest Fanelli, a work that has not been played before in America. "Thebes" was suggested to the composer by the first three chapters of Gautier's "Romance of a Mummy." Owing to the length of the work the first of the three movements will be omitted at these concerts. Miss Kathleen Parlow will play Bruch's concerto for violin in D minor. There will be a serenade for strings in F by Volkmann, and at the end Strauss's "Merry Pranks of Till Eulenspiegel."

The symphony of next Friday and next Sunday will be the Beethoven "Pastoral." Mme. Margarete Matzenauer, who will be soloist, will sing an air, "La Juive," by Halevy, and "Spectre de la Rose," by Berlioz.

***

Mme. Adele Krueger will give a song recital at Aeolian Hall to-night, with Sydney Dalton at the piano. Her first group of songs is by Trunk, Brahms and Strauss. The second is in French, and then follows a group by Russian composers, the texts in German. She closes with four songs in English.

***

Samuel Gardner gives a violin recital to-night at the Little Theatre. His largest number is a sonata in D major by Handel, and he plays several new compositions, among them a Mosaique and Scherzino, by Halversen; Mazurek, Op. 49, by Dvorak, and a Wiegenlied, by Juon. Other names on the programme are Tartini, Brahms, Scott, Debussy, and Wienlawski. Mr. Gardner will be assisted by George Dostal, tenor, and the accompanists will be Emil Newman and Walter Golde.

***

George Harris, Jr., tenor, gives a recital to-morrow afternoon at Aeolian Hall. He begins with five songs by Grieg, Schumann, and Hugo Wolf. Then comes a group in which the composers are Massenet, Aubert, Palmer, Ward-Stephens, Coleridge-Taylor, and Marshall Kernochan. His last group comprises five songs by Arensky, Tschaikowsky, and Moussorgsky, three of them sung in Russian.

***

Fritz Kreisler will give a violin recital in Carnegie Hall Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. This will be his first recital appearance here in several seasons. Much music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries figure on his programme, which is as follows:

"In the Quarters," allegro maestoso.
allegro vivacissimo;
"In the Woods," andante sostenuto;
"In the Big House"—Virginia reel, allegretto giocoso.
Sonata in D minor, Op. 121.....Schumann

On Tuesday evening there will be given in Aeolian Hall the first concert of the Adele Margulies Trio, which consists of Adele Margulies, pianist; Leopold Lichtenberg, violinist, and Leo Schulz, 'cellist. The programme will comprise Brahms's Trio in B major, op. 8; Grieg's F major violin sonata, and Wolf-Ferrari's Trio in D, which has not yet been played in New York.

***

Wilhelm Bachaus, pianist, will give a recital at Aeolian Hall Wednesday afternoon. His programme follows:

Free organ recitals in the public high schools will be extended this Sunday afternoon by the Board of Education by the inauguration of a series of Sunday afternoon recitals at the Morris High School, Boston Road and 165th Street, the Bronx. This afternoon the organist will be Edwin S. Tracy, and next week Dr. Paul Martin, Jr. Recitals will be continued at Erasmus and Eastern District High Schools in Brooklyn.

In Manhattan the second of the Sunday afternoon recitals at the Ethical Culture School, Sixty-fourth Street and Central Park West, will be given under the auspices of the board by Gottfried H. Federlein, beginning at 4 o'clock. There will be seven numbers.

In the evening at Public School 101, 11th Street, west of Lexington Avenue, Arthur Rowe Pollock will conclude his course on "Sonatas for Violin and Piano," and next Sunday evening Mrs. Mary Hill Brown will begin a course on Wagner's "Der Ring des Nibelungen."

The following are other lectures and recitals for the week:

Monday—"Composers and Music of Norway and Sweden," Clarence De Vaux Royer, illustrated by piano and violin selections, at Public School 46, 156th Street and Briggs Avenue.

Thursday—"Schubert, King of Song Writers," illustrated by songs, by Mrs. Jessie A. Colston, at Public School 100, 188th Street and Fifth Avenue.

Friday—"Norse Legends, Folk-Lore and Folk-Songs," by Bruce Calvert, illustrated by Mrs. Anna Gulbrandsen Calvert in folk-songs, at Public School 66, Eighty-eighth Street, east of First Avenue.

AT THE METROPOLITAN.

The opening opera at the Metropolitan Opera House to-morrow night will be Ponchielli's "La Gioconda." It will be sung by Mmes. Destinn and Matzenauer and Duchêne and Messrs. Caruso, Amato, De Segurola, Reschiglian, Begue and Audisio. Mr. Toscanini will conduct.

"Die Zauberflöte" will be sung on Wednesday evening by Mmes. Hempel, Destinn, Alten, Sparkes, Case, Curtis, Mattfeld, Eubank, and Robeson, and Messrs. Urlus, Goritz, Griswold, Braun, Reiss, Murphy, Schlegel and Bayer. Alfred Hertz will conduct.

"La Bohème" will be Thursday night's opera, with Miss Bori, Mme. Alten, and Messrs. Martinelli (his first appearance,) Scotti, De Segurola, Didur, Pini-Corsi, Ananian, Reschiglian, and Audisio. Giorgio Polacco will conduct.

"Lohengrin" will be given on Friday evening with Mmes. Fremstad and Ober (her first appearance,) and Messrs. Urlus, Weil, Braun and Schlegel, Alfred Hertz conducting.

The cast for the revival of "Un Ballo in Maschera" Saturday afternoon will be as follows: Amelia, Mme. Destinn; Oscar, Mme. Hempel; Ulrica, Mme. Matzenauer; Riccardo, Mr. Caruso; Renato, Mr. Amato; Tomaso, Mr. Rothier; Samuele, Mr. De Segurola; Silvano, Mr. Reschiglian; Un Guidice, Mr. Bada; a servant, Mr. Audisio; conductor, Mr. Toscanini. The scene has been transferred from Boston to a Northern European country.

"Parsifal" is announced for Thanksgiving afternoon at 1 o'clock, with Mmes. Fremstad, Mulford, Sparkes, and Mattfeld, and Messrs. Jörn, Weil, Witherspoon, Goritz, Reiss, and Schlegel. Mr. Hertz will conduct.

WITH THE CONCERT-GIVERS.

PADEREWSKI will give his second Carnegie Hall recital Saturday afternoon, Nov. 29. This will be the last opportunity New York will have to hear him, at least until the Spring. The illness which caused the postponement of some of his recitals and the cancellation of others reduced his appearances in this city from four to three. His programme has not yet been announced.

***

Wilhelm Bachaus, pianist, will be the principal soloist at the second Sunday night popular concert which Nahan Franko and his orchestra will give in the Hippodrome Sunday evening, Nov. 30. The other soloists will be Cordelia Lee, violinist, and Alfredo Ilma, an Arabian baritone who has recently arrived in this country from South America, where he has been singing in opera.

***

Mme. Frances Alda, soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, gives a recital at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, Nov. 25. She will be assisted by Gutia Casini, 'cellist, and Frank La Forge, pianist.

***

Franz Egénieff, the Berlin baritone who was prevented because of illness from giving his first New York recital yesterday, will offer his introductory programme at Aeolian Hall on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 4, singing songs by Schumann, Hugo Wolf, Kerntler, Kaun, and Pataky. Mr. Egénieff will have the assistance of the Hungarian composer-pianist, Jenö Kerntler.

***

The "Messiah" will be rendered at a popular-priced Christmas performance on Sunday evening, Dec. 21, at Carnegie Hall by the People's Choral Union. Caroline Hudson-Alexander, Florence Mulford, Frank Ormsby, and Clifford Cairns are the soloists. Edward G. Marquard will conduct, and an orchestra of fifty will assist.

***

The Catholic Protective Society gives its second annual concert at the Hippodrome Sunday evening, Nov. 23, and has engaged for this event the following artists: Mme. Frances Alda, prima donna soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House; Orvilla Harrold, tenor; Guitia Casini, 'cellist; Ruby Helder, Ida Divinoff, violinist; Frank La Forge, pianist and accompanist, and a symphony orchestra under the direction of Mendel Klein.

CENTURY OPERA HOUSE.

The Messrs. Aborn have selected Verdi's "Il Trovatore" as the offering for the tenth week of opera at the Century. The opening performance will be sung on next Tuesday evening. The artists who will sing are Lois Ewell in the rôle of Leonora, and Kathleen Howard as Azucena. Walter Wheatley will be the Manrico, and Morton Adkins the Count di Luna. Inez, the attendant of Leonora, will be sung by Florence Coughlan, while the Ferrando will be Alfred Kaufman, and Ruiz, Vernon Dalhart. The alternating Leonora will be Ivy Scott, while Jayne Herbert and Mary Jordan will alternate in the part of Azucena. Bardsley and Bergman will alternate with Wheatley in the rôle of Manrico, and Kreidler will sing the Count di Luna at the Wednesday popular Matinée.

LET YOUR PLAYER-PIANO BE ONE THAT WILL DEVELOP YOUR MUSICAL TALENTS IN A NATURAL WAY —an instrument that leaves to you the charm and incentive of personal expression.

Don't turn into a mechanical musician—a mere slave of automatic expression contrivances that absorb the mind and take away all the pleasure of playing

If you would know the joy of playing good music with natural and musicianly effect, you will select the Kranich & Bach, the highest grade player-piano in the world built completely in one factory.

If you are satisfied to simply operate an automatic piano, (to furnish foot power only) buy some other make.

The Kranich & Bach Player-Piano

provides adequate means for obtaining every change in expression that makes music enjoyable. BUT YOU HAVE THE UNQUALIFIED PLEASURE OF MAKING THESE CHANGES YOURSELF, and without expensive or especially cut music rolls, which handicap your enjoyment by producing them automatically. You never lose interest in this instrument because it always provides incentive for personal variation and improvement in expression.

TOPICS OF THE DRAMA AND FIRST NIGHT ROSTER

CHARACTER AND CHARM IN ACTING.

By ADOLPH KLAUBER.

IT is a commonplace of the theatre that all acting is character acting, and that the man who plays the hero and the woman who plays the heroine in what are known technically as "straight parts" must characterize to be successful. In other words, the actor encourages himself in the belief that he is creating a character on the stage, even though his rôle is not one of the sort in which a heavy make-up or other external artifice is employed. And in theory it is undoubtedly true that real acting even in straight parts involves something of characterization.

But the vogue of personality in the theatre has reduced the necessity for this particular sort of effort. It is no new thing that many of our most popular actors and actresses, though not without a certain amount of technical resource, are favored over others because of a purely personal appeal. Given the same amount of actual ability in acting minus the peculiar temperamental or personal qualities which reach out and beyond the footlights, their preferment to their fellows would be less in evidence. And it is and always has been true in the theatre that success in acting involves a peculiar personal quality distinct and apart from artistic accomplishment.

The strangest part of the matter is that this personal quality manifests itself almost as often in the case of artists engaged in what are known as character parts, and there, too, its absence is just as likely to prove a deterrent on general popularity. Moreover, the fact has been repeatedly demonstrated in the theatre that the ability to sink personal identity to such an extent in a rôle that actual individuality is lost may work irreparable injury to an actor's ultimate general appeal. The character actors who have occupied the most prominent places in our theatre have been men who invariably allowed something of their own personalities to color whatever rôles they were playing. And in general they could not have helped doing so had they tried. For though one hears and reads a great deal about the ability of the great artist to sink his identity in a rôle it is only in the very rarest instances that this is done. Fine character acting in general consists in a harmonious adaptation of the actor's personal and mental qualities to those suggested in his rôle. And there must be, of course, enough technical adroitness to make possible a physical simulation suggestive of the peculiarities of the character. So, though something of Mr. Joseph Jefferson, Mr. Richard Mansfield, Mr. David Warfield, and Mr. Leo Ditrichstein has been present in each and every rôle portrayed, the sense of the actual character has been maintained.

And in a greater or less degree each character actor to justify the title has been capable of a sufficient variation to suggest natural differences in the types portrayed.

The resident charm of Mr. Joseph Jefferson's acting made itself felt whether he was playing Rip Van Winkle, Caleb Plummer, or Bob Acres, but each was a distinct creation. And so an actor like Mr. E. J. Dodson, though he was manifestly versatile, never succeeded, at least in later years, in eliminating his own personality from the parts that he was playing.

Mr. Cyril Maude is another actor whose portraits invariably carry something of the individual quality of charm which is such a valuable asset on the stage. But he, too, is unusually successful in suggesting a variety of types. And he differentiates them sufficiently to be practically a new man in each.

Mr. Maude's range is exceptional, in fact, even for a "character actor," and he has an astonishing capacity for elaborating even the so-called straight rôle until it has a touch of individuality. That, indeed, is what actors ordinarily mean when they say that all acting is character acting, but, generally speaking, their theory is not illustrated in actual performance.

Mr. Maude's acting represents a very rare and unusual gift and accomplishment in acting, and it becomes more uncommon every year, because the fact is more and more apparent that personality elimination prefaces popularity effacement. The actor who is recognized the moment he comes upon the stage even through a heavy character mask is the actor who, in the long run, is apt to win the suffrage of the public. It is a pity that this is true, for it provides an added incentive to the actor to develop and cultivate the purely personal side of his art.

Mr. John Cope, an actor who has played a considerable line of interesting character parts on our stage, has provided the most recent example of what may truthfully be described as a complete elimination of personality. In "The Man Inside" he appears as a sort of wastrel "crook" grown old and gray in the service of crime and skiing out an existence through the charity of younger and more fortunate members of the craft. Mr. Cope in real life is a rather well-set-up, lithe and muscular man of vigorous middle age. His speech is crisp, his bearing erect, and his general manner compelling and alert. In the rôle of "Pop" Olds the external physical identity is completely changed. This is not necessarily a matter of no great difficulty, since grease paint, false hair and padding will work wonderful transformations. But the remarkable part of the characterization is its complete elimination of identifying mannerisms of speech and movement, so that even one who knows Mr. Cope very well must look at the name on the programme to be really assured that he is the actor in the part.

It is not necessarily an achievement of the greatest sort, but it is unusual at a time when complete characterization is rarely seen.

To illustrate to what extent the dominant personal characteristic may color a character in another direction it is only necessary to turn to Arnold Daly's performance of the blarneying Irish doctor in "General John Regan." Mr. Daly is undoubtedly one of the most expert young actors in our theatre. He has made an intelligent study of his art and has acquired an exceptional technical facility. And his acting of the rôle is an unusually admirable example. But there is present a sort of combative quality which robs the figure of not a little of its charm. It is a personal quality rather than one which the actor wittingly puts into the rôle—an exact reverse, in fact, of that which permeates practically every figure which Cyril Maude brings into the theatre, and which will ultimately bring him as large a congregation of worshippers in this city as he has in London.

There is another type of character actor who, no matter what rôle he is playing, either finds it an advantage to maintain his identity, or is incapable of departing very far from it. William H. Crane, for example, never so far loses his own personality in a rôle as to be any one but himself, though he is successful in so blending the part with his own organism that an illusion of character results. A distinctive character achievement now on view is the Mr. Potash of Barney Bernard, long a depicter of a comic Jewish figure on the vaudeville stage. He now reproduces faithfully the peculiarities of a distinct type, and the figure has an underlying charm which makes it generally appealing. But Mr. Bernard's personal equipment is so definitely marked that it would be practically impossible for him to develop a line of varied characterizations in the larger acting sense. And while on this subject it would be unfair not to mention the peculiarly ingratiating quality of Joseph Allen's disreputable old hermit in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," a figure which is most appealing and could easily enjoy a general vogue were it developed into the central figure of an effective play.

Actors are not necessarily to be blamed for their devotion to a distinct type since the large general public not infrequently condemns them to it. Mr. Warfield, for instance, never did anything finer than the "Grand Army Man," but the public demanded "The Music Master," and it has required the most persistent effort to induce them to accept him in succeeding rôles, so that even now with such a splendid achievement as Peter Grimm to his credit his name seems associated indelibly with the sentimental old gentleman of the Charles Klein play.

The name of "David Crockett" acted for years like a red flag before a bull to the late Frank Mayo, although he made several fortunes in that claptrap romance. But his D'Artagnan, Geoffrey Delamayne, Nordeck—not to speak of several Shakesperean rôles—and his Pudd'nhead Wilson were larger, finer achievements in an artistic sense.

In respect to personal appeal, what is true of the male mime is equally true of the women of the stage, and it would be possible to cite instances of actresses who, while finished artists in a sense, have never had a compelling charm on the stage simply because their natural personalities were more or less unsympathetic.

Therein, indeed, lies one of the secrets of theatrical success—the large, comprehending, natural sympathy which is somehow felt, though it may not be understood. And practically every actress who has made a great and lasting success has had it. Whatever she may have lacked in other virtues, the ability to respond freely to an emotional appeal has been an almost invariable part of the personal equipment. It is this easy susceptibility which enables the actress to be one thing to-day, another to-morrow, and, though her sympathies are just as likely to be misplaced as to be directed rightly, the capacity for responding promptly must be there. And just to that degree in which it is present will the actress exercise a magnetic influence on the public.

THE WEEK'S OFFERINGS.

"THE STRANGE WOMAN," a comedy in three acts by William Hurlbut, with Elsie Ferguson. At the Lyceum Theatre Monday night.

"ALL STAR MINSTRELS" and one-act plays and other features by well-known actors and actresses for the benefit of the Professional Woman's League. At the Casino Theatre Tuesday afternoon.

"GRUMPY," a comedy in three acts by Horace Hodges and T. Wygney Percyval. At Wallack's Theatre Wednesday night.

"THE MERCHANT OF VENICE," with Forbes-Robertson and Gertrude Elliott. At the Shubert Theatre Friday night.

ONE new play, "The Strange Woman," with Elsie Ferguson in the stellar rôle, "Grumpy," Cyril Maude's new comedy, and the first appearance in this country of Forbes-Robertson in "The Merchant of Venice" will be the new offerings for the first-nighters at the theatres this week.

Klaw & Erlanger will present Miss Ferguson and "The Strange Woman" at the Lyceum Theatre to-morrow night. The play is a new comedy by William J. Hurlbut. The scenes are laid in Delphi, Iowa, and all the characters are American born, even Inez de Pierrefond, the character played by Miss Ferguson.

The story of the play tells how Inez de Pierrefond, born in New Orleans, but nearly all her life a resident of Paris, with radical views, particularly regarding matrimony, meets John Hemingway, a young architect from Delphi. They are mutually attracted, and John takes her to his mother's home in the Western town. Their engagement is the subject of discussion among the commonplace residents of Delphi, who are strong devotees of conventions and have no sympathy with advanced ideas. They do not hesitate to make their position clear to Inez, and she, in turn, gives the gossips an upbraiding which, while it fearlessly bares before them her innermost faith, quite upsets the peace of mind of the old-fashioned rural folk who have challenged her point of view. Inez is on the point of explaining her beliefs to John's mother, but the mother's simple recital of her unselfish, loving care for her son brings about a complete change in the status of affairs.

The supporting company supplied by Klaw & Erlanger for Miss Ferguson includes Charles D. Waldron, Alphonz Ethier, Georgie Drew Mendum, Mrs. Felix Morris, Sarah McVicker, Sara von Leer, Frances Whitehouse, Annie Buckley, Lois Frances Clark, Hugh Dillman, and Otto F. Hoffmann. The curtain will rise to-morrow evening at 8:20 o'clock.

On Wednesday night Cyril Maude will offer the third play of his répertoire to be shown during his season at Wallack's Theatre. This is "Grumpy," a comedy by Horace Hodges and T. Wygney Percyval, the authors of "Sunday." This play would have been this year's production at the London Playhouse had Mr. Maude not undertaken his American tour. It has only been acted twice, once in Glasgow, Scotland, the week prior to Mr. Maude's sailing for this country, and once in Montreal, just before the beginning of his New York engagement.

In "Grumpy" Mr. Maude plays the part of an old K. C. retiring after a strenuous career, and anxious to be left to his own devices. A criminal case comes very close to him, however, and much against his will he is drawn into a vortex of activity. All the old instincts of the legal sleuth-hound are aroused, and he plunges into the case with such zeal that he succeeds where younger men have failed.

Miss Margery Maude will again appear as her father's leading lady, playing the part of the young heroine.

On Monday and Tuesday and at the Wednesday matinée Mr. Maude will again be seen in the two Jacobs plays, the three-act comedy "Beauty and the Barge," and the one-act drama, "The Ghost of Jerry Bundler."

Forbes-Robertson will make his first appearance in New York as Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice" at the Shubert Theatre on Friday evening, with Gertrude Elliott as Portia.

Forbes-Robertson made his first production of "The Merchant of Venice" in Manchester, England, in 1906, but he did not appear in London as Shylock until last Spring during his London farewell season at Drury Lane Theatre. He departs considerably from the traditional idea of Shylock in that he develops the sympathetic side of the man, emphasizing the humanity of his inner nature and its conflict with Christianity in contrast to the mere physical and more material sides of the character.

Forbes-Robertson's programme for the other nights of the week includes "Hamlet" on Monday and Wednesday evening, "Passing of the Third Floor Back," followed by "The Sacrament of Judas" on Tuesday and Saturday nights; "Mice and Men" on Thursday night and the first matinée performance of "The Light That Failed" on Saturday afternoon.

The Professional Woman's League will hold its annual benefit performance at the Casino Theatre Tuesday afternoon, and many of the prominent actors and actresses now in New York will be seen at this special performance, which will open with the "All-Star" Women Minstrels, of which Miss Clarice Vance will act as interlocutor. The "bones" will be Belle Gold, Catherine Jack, and Amy Ames.

A novelty will be the first presentation on any stage of a one-act playlet, called "Her Only Way." The principal rôles will be played by Arnold Daly, John Dean, and Fanny Ward.

PLAYS AND THE PUBLIC.

Dramatic Editor, The New York Times:

In illustration of your argument in to-day's TIMES you may be interested to know that I went to a performance of a recent play because some criticisms said it contained good ideas. While the central thought was interesting, the play was so slight and short that I felt defrauded. It was an imposition to charge me $2, I felt, for so slender an entertainment. At least another short play should have been added, especially as only half a dozen players and the simplest scenery were needed. In the main piece. Thrice since I have stayed away from the theatre because I was not sure that I should not again be served with half a meal of watery food.

There are thousands of potential playgoers who are eager for (1) a play with lots of ideas, a play that treats of some vital theme of our time, and (2) a play which is reasonably sufficient for an evening's entertainment, not a skimpy sketch which would be most suitable for a "turn" on the variety stage.

Dramatic Editor, The New York Times:

No question but many hundreds of people read your article in THE SUNDAY TIMES on "Driving the Public from the Playhouse" and said Amen! loud and deep.

I thought I should tell you that as for myself I have been spending from $100 to $150 per year on theatres, but I have cut this down because of just the reasons you state in the article.

Then, too, I am tired of going to the box office and have the "nice gentleman" say, "Nothing front of the fourteenth row."

For the accommodation of hotel guests, &c., why do not the theatre managers locate a few offices of their own and sell the tickets, say, for 25 cents' advance to pay the expenses?

You know that in London and elsewhere one has only to pay a shilling, but this paying $1 extra for two seats for often a bum show is making many people weary, and I have heard many express themselves as above.

You are doing the managers and producers a positive kindness in telling them publicly the truth.

WILLIAM F. OSBORNE.

JARDIN DE DANSE.

At the Jardin de Danse Joan Sawyer has been welcomed back after her fortnight's illness. Mae Murray remains and will continue to play partner for Sebastian in the "Barcarole," from "The Tales of Hoffman," which remains the midnight feature. Caroline Edwards, the contralto; the Marvelous Millers, and many others contribute continuous entertainment from 8:30 to 1 o'clock.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

The attractions which continue at New York theatres are "The Madcap Duchess" at the Globe, "Ourselves" at the Lyric, "The Man Inside" at the Criterion, "The Little Cafe" at the New Amsterdam, "General John Regan" at the Hudson, "The Tongues of Men," with Henrietta Crosman, at the Harris; "The Temperamental Journey" at the Republic, "Seven Keys to Baldpate" at the Astor, "The Great Adventure" at the Booth, "At Bay" at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, Laurette Taylor in "Peg o' My Heart" at the Cort, five one-act plays at the Princess, Donald Brian in "The Marriage Market" at the Knickerbocker, Fanny Ward in "Madam President" at the Garrick, "To-day" at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, "The Family Cupboard" at the Playhouse, Christie MacDonald in "Sweethearts" at the Liberty, "Nearly Married" at the Gaiety, "Potash and Perlmutter" at the Comedy, Ethel Barrymore in "Tante" at the Empire, John Mason in "Indian Summer" at the Fulton, "Prunella" at the Little Theatre, and "The Pleasure Seekers" at the Winter Garden.

AT OTHER THEATRES.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" will bid New York farewell with the week's engagement at the Grand, beginning to-morrow night and including Wednesday and Saturday matinees. Among the players in the cast are Master Burford Hampden, Helene Lackaye, W. H. Denny, Ethel Brandon, Harriet Sterling, Alice Butler, Margaret Millette, Editha Kelly, Dore Davidson, Charles Hampden, John Sutherland, George Sylvester, and Angelo Romeo.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Trilby," Paul M. Potter's adaptation of Guy Du Maurier's story, will be revived by the stock company at the Academy of Music for the week, beginning with a matinee to-morrow. Theodore Friebus will return as a member of the company and will appear as Svengali.

KEITH'S HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—"Kindling," by Charles Kenyon, will be the attraction at Keith's Harlem Opera House this week. Lotta Linthicum and Ramsey Wallace will play the principal roles.

PROSPECT THEATRE.—"Little Lost Sister," a play dealing with white slave conditions, will be produced this week at the Prospect Theatre. It was written by Virginia Brooks. This will be the first presentation in New York of the play.

BRONX OPERA HOUSE.—To-morrow night "The Spring Maid" will come to the Bronx Opera House with a cast which will include Hattye Fox, James Heaney, D. W. Merkert, Joan Irwin, Arthur Wooley, Frank Wooley, Stephen Stott, Pearl Evans, Addie Reeves and a large chorus.

WEST END THEATRE.—Beginning to-morrow night Winthrop Ames will present the fairy play, "Snow White," which was the matinee attraction at the Little Theatre all last year. In addition to the evening performances there will be four matinees for children on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

ROYAL THEATRE.—"What Happened to Mary" will be the attraction this week at the Royal Theatre.

MURRAY HILL THEATRE.—Al Reeves and His "Big Beauty Show" will be at the Murray Hill Theatre this week, presenting a burlesque entertainment that consists of a first part and afterpiece and a number of specialties. Reeves will be assisted by Andy Lewis, Zella Russell, Vera George, Mlle. Carmencita, Chick Cameron, Olivette Tremayne, and Joe Opp.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.—The Rehman Show will begin an engagement of one week at the Columbia Theatre to-morrow afternoon. Two one-act travesties will be presented, one called "The Most Contented Man on Earth" and the other "Shenandoah," a satire on the famous Bronson Howard play of that name. The company includes Lew Kelly, Eileen Sheridan, Fred Wycoff, Vic Casmore, Lon Hascall, George Douglas, Tom Martelle, Freda Florence, Laura Hayden, Aneta Pynes, and Gertrude Lynch.

MINER'S BRONX THEATRE.—The attraction at Miner's in the Bronx for the week will be the "College Girls." Abe Reynolds, Morris Franklin, Dolly Morrisey, Cleo Lewis, Leah Henry, James Hunter, Arthur Henry, Walter Johnson and Beatrice, the Ragtime Violinist, are in the company.

MINER'S PEOPLE'S THEATRE.—"Robie's Beauty Show" will appear at the People's Theatre this week in a new two-act burlesque, "Oh, Oh, Josephine!" Among the comedians are James Rowland, Johnny Walker, Sandy Chapman, Sam Green and George Reynolds; while others are Libbie Blondelle, Augusta Long, and Doris Thayer.

IRVING PLACE GERMAN THEATRE.—The bill at the Irving Place German Theatre for the coming week will be: Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday; "Kasernenluft," Wednesday, and Saturday, Ibsen's drama, "The Pillars of Society."

FRENCH PLAYS AT HARRIS.

The French Drama Society of New York, of which Lucien Bonheur is the President, has outlined four performances for members during the present season, to take place on Monday afternoons at the Harris Theatre, starting with the initial performance on Dec. 15. Dress rehearsals will be given in the same theatre on the Sunday night preceding the regular performances.

Miss Beverly Sitgreaves, a well-known actress on the American stage, will be a member of the company presenting the plays. Mme. Yorska, a pupil of Sarah Bernhardt, will assume the artistic direction as well as enact the leading parts. She will be supported by a company of French players headed by Claude Bénédict of the Théâtre du Vaudeville, Paris; José Rubin of the Théâtre Sarah Bernhardt, and Mlle. Georgette Passedoit.

THE LIVELY "BLUE BIRD."

Some interesting bits of theatrical history are recalled by "The Blue Bird's" farewell week. It is said to have been the most costly and elaborate New Theatre production and the only consistent "winner" after the New Theatre experiment ended. Winthrop Ames still controls the American rights, which since Oct. 1, 1910—the date of the opening—have yielded Maurice Maeterlinck the sum of $175,000.

At least two-thirds of these royalties have been paid by the touring company under the Shubert management. A statistician in the Shubert office has compiled the following: American performances of "The Blue Bird," 1,043, of which 268 were in New York. Total attendance, 1,000,000. Receipts of the first month in New York, over $100,000. Receipts on the road, $750,000. Extended runs—New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Itinerary of the American company, 50,000 miles.

Since the play was produced in New York every other great capital has had its own production. First Paris in the Spring of 1911, where Mme. Maeterlinck played the part of La Lumiere (Light). A holiday revival in London followed some time after Herbert Trench's presentation at the Haymarket. Passing by the six months' run of the Japanese version in Tokio and the Australian showing in Melbourne, it is interesting to remark that Russia is the only European country vying with America in the number of performances. Finally, in January of this year, Max Reinhardt produced "The Blue Bird" at the Deutsches Theater in Berlin—as it happened, simultaneously with the first engagement of the American company in San Francisco.

The unusual success is said to be due, in the first instance, to the reading public. Among the millions of patrons here and abroad—starting them theatreward—was the leaven of hundreds of thousands who previously had been charmed by the text. In almost every city of the American tour "Blue Bird" study clubs were already flourishing. Members of these clubs recited the story to young folks in the civic centres and at the story-telling hour in the libraries. Dramatic conferences and discussions were rife. But "The Blue Bird" was saved the fate of "literary" plays by the spectacular features that continue to attract the masses.

PAVLOWA'S ENGAGEMENT.

Anna Pavlowa and her company of Russian dancers come to the Manhattan Opera House to-morrow to open a second engagement of three days, with both matinée and night performances Tuesday and Wednesday. The programme, it is announced, will be changed at each performance and this will give opportunity for the dancer to present ballets and divertissements which were not seen at her recent Metropolitan Opera House performances. Monday night's programme will comprise the "Oriental Fantasy," Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," and eight divertissements.

MEXICO IN PICTURES.

At the Hippodrome to-night the Shuberts and William A. Brady will present moving pictures of conditions in Mexico that not only give a resume of Mexico, past and present, but also show the hatred of the Mexicans for the Americans, the ardor of the natives inflamed by reports of an American invasion, and the zeal that almost mounts to a frenzy with which the swarthy troops are preparing to meet the expected United States troops.

TWO MONTHS FOR POMPEII.

George Kleine's production of "The Last Days of Pompeii," the Ambrosio version, begins its second month on Broadway at the Bijou Theatre this afternoon. In this country Mr. Kleine now has twenty-two companies covering the territory from Maine to California, and Manitoba to Mexico, with these pictures.

"MOVIES" AT THE BERKELEY

At the Berkeley Theatre, commencing this evening and continuing every afternoon and evening, will be exhibited the moving picture, "A Boy and the Law." From lawbater in Russia to lawlover in America is the keynote, and a large part of the play shows in detail the methods of Judge Willie Brown in dealing with misunderstood boys, the Judge himself posing in many of the scenes.

"HOW WILD ANIMALS LIVE."

Commencing this afternoon, "How Wild Animals Live," a series of nature studies photographed in moving pictures and commented upon by Frederic Dean, will be shown at Carnegie Lyceum every afternoon and evening.

BROOKLYN AMUSEMENTS.

DE KALB THEATRE.—"Bought and Paid For" is to be the attraction at the De Kalb Theatre the coming week.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.—"Believe Me, Xantippe," is to be the bill at the Majestic Theatre commencing to-morrow night. Heading the cast will be John Barrymore and Mary Young.

MONTAUK THEATRE.—Charles Frohman will present Richard Carle and Hattie Williams at the Montauk Theatre during the coming week in the musical comedy, "The Doll Girl." The entire Globe Theatre production and cast will appear.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.—At Keith's Orpheum Theatre Jack Norworth will head the bill, and others will be Jesse Lasky's "The Red Heads," Trovato, Seldom's "Poems in Marble," Jack Devreaux and company in "Don't Do That," Chris Richards, Kelly and Lucey in "The Piano Movers and the Actress," Rafayette's Dogs, and Miller and Mack. Sunday concerts will be given to-day as usual.

BUSHWICK THEATRE.—At Keith's Bushwick Theatre Henry Woodruff will be seen in "A Regular Business Man." "The Green Beetle" will be seen here for the first time in Brooklyn. Percy Wenrich and Dolly Connolly will be on hand, and others include Ed Morton; James F. Kelley and Emma Pollock in "Ginger Snaps"; The Four Bards; Percy Bronson and Winnie Baldwin; Lockett and Waldron, and Montambo and Wells. The usual concerts will take place to-day.

FLASHES FROM THE FOOTLIGHTS

FIXING UP THE LOVELY LADIES

How a Novel Process of Surgery Will Restore Lost Beauty to Some Members of One Troupe.

AT the Manhattan Opera House a hundred men—carpenters, papier-maché specialists, and electricians—hurry hither and thither every day preparing the stage, getting the scenery in order and repairing the "props" for "Hop o' My Thumb," which is to be shown in the near future. The entire stage is being rebuilt so that it can be arranged in five elevations. This is done with a series of trapdoors which will extend across the entire stage. When completed the stage will have the appearance of five huge steps. After the traps are arranged two steel winches capable of hoisting twenty tons each will be used to raise it into place.

"Now," remarks the manager, "I am going to show you our hospital."

He opens a door. You follow him into a large room.

"Here is where the 'props' are doctored," he remarks.

In reality the place does suggest a ward in a hospital. Along the wall are supported a dozen figures of women made of wax. Some are minus legs, others lack arms. Even the heads of a couple are missing. You understand now why he referred to this as the hospital.

"Watch," he remarks, "and you will see some wonderful surgery."

Several men in white aprons very closely resembling those worn by real doctors are manufacturing new legs, arms, and heads. This is done with clay mold, melted wax, and plaster of paris.

"These men," he tells you, "are jacks of all trades." And, sure enough, they seem to be able to accomplish almost anything.

"What are the holes in the side of the figures?" you ask.

"Put there so that if she breaks we can get inside to fix her up," answers one of the men.

In the performance these figures are employed with the De Sierris troupe of living figures representing the women and children kept in cold storage by the Ogre to be eaten when he desires a tempting morsel. It is said to be impossible to distinguish the live figures from the wax ones, until they bow their heads as the curtain goes down.

In this room are flocks of mechanical pigeons all needing more or less repairs. These birds are supposed to eat the crumbs thrown on the earth by Hop-O as his father leads him and his brothers into the wood. They work on wires and give the impression that they are flying.

"Got to be a human doctor, a pigeon doctor and everything else," one of the men in the department complained.

You are led through an aperture leading underneath the stage. As you enter the narrow, dark passage you feel a sense of mystification of wonder. "What is next?" you conjecture. Suddenly a light is visible. In another moment you see what at first appears to be the scaffolding of a large building in the course of construction—girders, cross-pieces, braces, and beams meet your gaze. Here again are some twenty or thirty men, all skilled mechanics, busily engaged, following the instructions of the foreman, who in his turn studies a large blue print.

"This work is very important," your guide suggests. "Everything here must be carefully constructed so as to hold the stage, otherwise a serious accident might occur when the heavy scenery is put in place."

Here, too, are stored vast quantities of scenery—large columns that add to the beauty of the king's castle which Hop-O discovers after he has stolen the Ogre's seven-league boots and escaped the dreadful fate of being roasted and eaten which seemed in store for him. In one corner, against the wall, stands the large tree, from the top of which Hop-O sees the wonderful castle. It is somewhat battered and twisted by its long journey across the Atlantic—for you must remember that this is the initial visit to the United States of this production, and being crowded in the hold of a steamer is not the best thing for such delicate material. Besides getting the stage in readiness, all this scenery must be repaired, painted, and put in first-class condition before the opening night.

"Stored here and on the stage is all the scenery," the manager tells you, and then he points out and explains the use of several pieces.

"Here is part of the woodcutter's house. That is where Hop-O and his brothers live until the father takes the boys into the woods to lose them," he remarks.

A jumbled mass of cardboard, canvas, and wood attracts your eye.

"That," says your guide, "is the bed in which the Seven little Princesses sleep—at least, it will be when it is painted and put together."

"Wouldn't let my dog sleep on it now," interrupted the foreman, who overheard the conversation. And then he added: "It's going to take some tall hustling to get everything ready in time."

In answer to your next question of how they keep track of all the various parts the manager tells you:

"Oh, easy enough. Every part, no matter how small, is numbered, and these numbers appear on the blue prints."

As you look at these many blue prints you realize what a complicated affair a spectacular production must be.

THE DRAMA OF DABS.

"The Drama of Dabs" is the descriptive phrase applied by H. T. Parker of The Boston Transcript to the output resulting from the playwriting courses in Harvard University.

"With all allowance for youth in these university playwrights," he adds, "are they not much more concerned, so far as their work discloses them, with effects in the theatre and the making of them than with observation of life, study of character, the play of true imagination over action, and artistic selection of the best that they can do, and rejection of all that falls below it? Do they not try to imitate success and momentary convention in the theatre instead of trying to discover and tight out a way of their own with long patience and long faith and the ideals of work and the intellectual and spiritual loyalties—they count even in the theatre—that are the best thing a university can give those whom it teaches—the things that are not talked about, but the things that determine the qualities of a man's work? When they write 'popular dramas,' like 'The People,' do they do more than imitate the current or the past fashions of journalism on the stage? When they write sentimental pieces like 'Let's-Go-a-Gardening,' do they not mistake mushy and verbose sentimentality for true, honest, humanly plausible feeling? When they write the comedy of manners and temperaments is it more than the thin and feeble comedy of suburban tea tables? And when they would write of the graver things of life are they not thinking more of the star who may bear their play to success than of any divination of the realities of living and truths of character that perchance their young imaginations have attained?

"Finally, are not the answers to these questions written clearly in their work? Judged by it their standards of playwriting, to say nothing of their standards of drama in its finer sense, are not so high as those of many a youngster who has known no university but life and the world and his own spirit. Judged by it, their actual craftsmanship is below that which many a youngster has learned in no other school than the study of the theatre and in self-criticism and self-discipline in solitude. Judged by themselves, as they babbled in the smoking room of the Castle Square, between the acts last evening, had they many other notions of the theatre than those which could be heard under like conditions in a café along upper Broadway? Year after year the playwriting undergraduates and recent graduates of Harvard have lived in a warm, sunny little world of appreciation from within and from without. At present it much needs the play of clear, chilly Autumn lights upon it."

CHESTERTON AT REHEARSAL

Quite unexpectedly Mr. G. K. Chesterton quietly stole into one of the boxes and watched a rehearsal of his play "Magic," to be produced at the Little Theatre in London by Mr. Kenelm Foss.

Theatrical work is new to the Falstaff of Beaconsfield, and he thoroughly enjoyed the atmosphere of rehearsal, making a suggestion now and then in the left ear of Mr. Kenelm Foss.

In a lull between the acts, writes a Pall Mall Gazette representative, I managed to get a word or two with him.

"Did you encounter any special difficulties in changing from the article and essay form of writing to that of a play?"

"As a matter of fact, I did not think I could write a play, which, of course, may turn out the truth. What I thought would happen after I had done my work was that Foss would take it into his subterranean alchemist's chamber and transform it into something presentable.

"You may as well know all the truth. I had originally conceived the story as a novel, but with many more complications; and many more characters, and much more true to life.

"Please remember, I'm all on the side of the dramatic way of doing things. Of course, it is dramatic if a man suddenly hits you on the tip of the nose—it is so sudden. But intellectual things are also very sudden—such things as conversion, mortal sin, and repentance.

BUNEE WYDO
UNION SQUARE

I cannot conceive of a spiritual thing being slow. I revel in the dramatic way of doing things.

"The change from the essay to a play is as sudden as conversion."

"The delineation of feminine character is not quite in your line, and you know, of course, that the theatre public don't expect much of you in that line?"

"True. As you know, I have generally avoided the theme of woman. I don't think I'm quite the right person to attempt a full and complete delineation of woman in twenty chapters. You see, female psychology is so intricate. So many more women than men are incomprehensible.

"I am sure that you cannot imagine my saying I am now going to depict the woes and loves of Araminta Wiggins in four acts. My own opinion is that most of the exhibitions of a woman's soul from the pen of a man are positively indecent, while a delineation of the body is quite another matter. You must come and see what kind of a woman I have drawn."

"You are dealing with real magic, I believe, and your play treats of spirits?"

"There is a stranger in the play, and I pride myself that this character is well drawn. He is a man in touch with the mystic and magical. It is a controversial play, and the controversy it is likely to provoke may provide a lot of fun."

"Are you thinking of writing other plays?"

"Don't you think it would be a splendid idea to write a series of counterblasts to the plays of my generation? For example, there is the 'Doll's House,' but my counterblast would be entitled 'The Doll's House Continued.' Then, again, 'The Master Builder.'

"How differently one acts in 'real life.' In real life the old architect would have said, 'I used to go up the tower when young, now I don't want to.' People don't want to do things they did when young. Of course, I know that if people behaved sensibly there would be no play."

IN VAUDEVILLE THEATRES

Cecilia Loftus is to head the bill at the Palace this week, and other acts on the programme will be a one-act sketch, "Myrtle Clayton, or Wrong from the Start," written by Everett Shinn; Alice Els and Bert French, Belle Baker, Jesse Lasky's tabloid musical comedy "The Water Cure"; Willa Holt Wakefield, May Wirth, Mycoff and Vanity, and new Pathe weekly pictures.

At Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre will be Gus Edwards's "Big Revue." A combination of Richard Harding Davis as author and Frank Sheridan as actor will deliver "Blackmail," while Jasper, the thinking dog, it is claimed will outdo Don, the talking dog. Others will be Raymond and Caverley, Goldsmith and Hoppe in "The Manager and the Salesman," McMahon, Diamond and Clemence; Miss Leitzel and Jeanette, Pearl and Roth, Max Laube, bird and fowl mimic, and the Two Tom Boys.

The Rev. Alexander Irvine will be seen at Hammerstein's this week in "The Rector of St. Jude's," and others will be Belle Blanche, Jack Wilson, assisted by Ada Lane and Jack Boyle; Sophie Tucker, Bernard Granville, Bankoff and Girlie, Isabel D'Armond and Frank Carter, Fisher and Green, Van and Schenck, Kajiyama, Van Hoven, Azard Brothers, Annie Kent, the Great Castellaine, the Two Clips, "Aerial Basket Ball," and Paul Morton and Naomi Glass.

At the Forty-fourth Street Music Hall Edith Helena will be heard in her repertoire of songs. Tortajada will continue in her Spanish songs and dances, and Rosika Dolly, of the well-known Dolly sisters, who will be seen with Fred Leslie, the eccentric dancing comedian. Mado Minty, the French "spider," remains another week. Others will be the sixteen royal Japanese Samo wrestlers and jiu-jitsu demonstrators; Maud Knowlton, together with Conroy Tearl and Henry Mortimer in "Francy Free"; Walter C. Kelly, the "Virginia Judge"; Ward brothers, Archie and Bertie, and the Schwartz brothers. Monday night will be celebrated as Japanese night on account of the Japanese wrestlers.

At Keith's Colonial Theatre Marie Lloyd, representing England; Maggie Cline, for Ireland, and Gertrude Barnes upholding the American end, will be on the bill, and others will be Clayton White and company in "Cherie," Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Barry playing "The Rube," Gen. Pisano, sharpshooter; Rinaldo, the violinist; John and Winnie Hennings, Five Idanias, European gymnasts, and Ceballos and Desmond. Sunday concerts will be given as usual to-day.

Keith's Alhambra Theatre for the coming week will have a Fall festival made up as follows: Lillian Lorraine, William Cressy and Blanche Dayne, in "The Man Who Remembered"; Valerie Bergere and company in "Judgment," Merrill and Otto in "Her Daddy's Friend," Ben Deely and company as "The New Bell Boy," Robert Emmett Keane, Don, the talking dog; Hickey Brothers, Moore and Young, Volant, Lynch and Zeller, and Sprague and McNeece. Performances will begin each day at 1:45 and 7:45 P. M. Two concerts will take place to-day as usual.

Eddie Foy and the Seven Little Foys will head the bill at Keith's Bronx Theatre. Others will include Edmond Hayes and company in "The Piano Movers," Claud and Fannie Usher in "The Straight Path," Jack Gardner, Clark and Verdi, Minnie Allen, Maria Lo's Dresden China Statues, Henry Lewis, Ismed, Miller, Moore and Peters; Will and Kemp, and Holland and Dockrell. To-day the usual concerts will be given.

The bill at Proctor's 125th Street Theatre will be headed by the Florence Opera Comique Troupe. Others who will appear the first half of the week are La Estrella, Spanish dancer; Stewart and Hall, "1,040 West," Jack Boyce, Gayety Trio, Von Shillaghs, Darcy and Chase, Knight and King, Leo and Chapman, and the four Valentines. In addition to the above black and white photo plays will be shown between the specialties.

Topping the bill at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre the first half of the week will be the Seven Minstrel Kiddies in a miniature musical comedy. Other turns listed are George Smedley, Morgan Chester and company in "Schultz, the Shoemaker"; Whirling Erfords, Kola, the frog man; Cain and Newcomb, and black and white photo plays, which are changed daily.

Favor and Sinclair will top the bill at Proctor's Twenty-third Street in "Regan's Legacy." Others are the Three English Girls, Luce, Bruce, and May, Frances and Frances, Al Anderson, Bud and Clair, Capt. Treat's comedy seals, and black and white photo plays.

At Keith's Union Square Theatre this week will be given the initial presentation of the one-act playlet, "Sergeant Bagby," a dramatization of Mr. Cobb's successful story. Gertrude Vanderbilt and George Moore will offer a new skit, and the Moneta Five will also appear. Others will be Eddie Gerard and Myrtle Gardner in "Kis-Muh"; Cook and Sylvia, Marron, Heins and La Mar, Clara Ballerini, Warren and Francis, and Barows and Milo.

At the Eden Musee President Wilson, Mayor-elect Mitchel, and ex-Gov. Sulzer in wax have been placed on exhibition in the central hall. Dunninger appears every afternoon and evening, changing his act every week.

'OURSELVES' IS A GRIPPING PLAY

Makes a Forceful Plea for an Equal Standard of Morality for Men and Women.

SOCIETY GIRL REFORMER

Rachel Crothers's Modern Vice Drama Is Without Objectionable Dialogue or Repulsive Situations.

Florence ..... Dorothy Taylor
Harriette ..... Sylvia Zan
Miss Carew ..... Mattie Keene
Beatrice Barrington ..... Johyna Howland
Sadie ..... Estelle Thebaud
Stella ..... Caroline Page
Lena ..... Louise Coleman
Mabel ..... Blanche Natalli
Rosie ..... Louise Conti
Kitty ..... Alice Hastings
Leeza ..... Catherine Alden
Clara ..... Majorie Marr
Lettie ..... Blanche Lawrence
Molly ..... Grace Elliston
Mary ..... Grace Gardner
Irene Barrington ..... Selene Johnson
Wilson ..... Gertrude Le Brant

Collin Ford ..... Stanley Dark
Bob Barrington ..... Thurlow Bergen

If "Ourselves," Rachel Crothers' play which came to the Lyric Theatre last night, had been the first instead of, let it be hoped, one of the last of the modern vice plays, it would have been a tremendous box office success. As it is it is a gripping, living drama, full of interest up to the moment the final curtain drops on the fourth act, but whether or not theatregoers have tired of this particular style of play is a question.

Miss Crothers's play is better than "The Lure" or "The Fight," and although dealing more or less with a subject considered tabooed in the theatre until those two plays attracted the attention of the police, there is not an objectionable line nor a repulsive situation in any of the acts.

There is considerable preaching in each of the four acts, considerable effort to drive home a plea for an equal standard of morality for men and women, but the preaching is well done and flows naturally from the situations, and the moral standard for men and women, as pointed out, is meant to be the woman's standard, and there is no attempt made to justify a woman taking advantage of any other code.

"Ourselves" tells a story of a young society woman who goes to a reform home for girls to try and do something for the inmates. There she finds a lot of girls, girls of the streets mostly, who are hoping only for the time when they can be free. One of the girls, Molly by name, is taken to the home of the visitor for reformation, and there learns to hate the life she lead, and to repulse the cadet who follows her and tries to order her back to her old life.

But while Molly has learned to hate the men of the type of her former master, she has learned to look for men in the higher walks of life and so she naturally falls in love with the brother of her benefactor. The brother happens to be married, and his wife, a frivilous society woman, does not begin to really love him until she discovers that she is to be a mother. Soon after she reveals this secret of her great happiness to her husband she discovers his liaison with the former girl of the streets, who is now a servant in his sister's home.

The man throws over the girl, and, although his wife swears never to see him again, the impression is conveyed to the audience that she will not keep her word. Molly, left alone, finds that she has really learned the right way at last, and tells the woman who aided her that she is going out into the world to teach other girls how to live.

The play is not without laughs, the first two acts being largely given over to comedy, but the third and fourth acts are intensely dramatic, and the theatre last night was in complete silence during most of those periods in the play.

As Molly Grace Elliston did the best work she has done and Jobyna Howland was excellent as the society woman who wanted to help the girl reform. Thurlow Bergen gave a most convincing performance of the married brother who led his sister's ward astray, and Selene Johnson, as the wife, was perfectly at ease in a rôle not too exacting until the emotional scene where she vows never to see her husband again. In that scene Miss Johnson was at her very best.

The first act showed the parlor of the girl's reform home with some dozen or more of the girls fighting or dancing as the humor happened to strike them. The second and third acts are in the home of the society reformer, and the last act shows the studio of the artist husband. The play is produced with much attention to detail.

The Strange Woman
This is Mr. Hurlbut's description of the strange woman:
"Her appearance is not only beautiful, but brilliant. There is about her the atmosphere of perfection, the perfection of what she stands for—the last word of the Continental woman of intellect, smartness, and temperament. She radiates an exotic vitality, there is a sensuous allurement about her, but tempered by intellect, and underlying all her nature is felt the steel of her will, that can fuse into a white heat of passion. She is certain of herself, superior in the pride of her intelligence, yet never because of that intelligence overbearing or patronizing in manner or word. Very feminine, a pliant and keen humor and about her always, as intangible as an odor, the magnetism of her charm."

"After the 'Deep Purples' and the 'Master Minds' and the 'Raffleses' and the other sincere insincerities of crookdom offered as fodder to the Sara-Jane minds in a recent unforgettable epidemic, it was a relief last night to view

THE MILITANT AND THE CHILD

Mrs. Francis Scott Takes Issue with Miss Edna Kenton on the Burning Question of Feminism—She Declares Its Champions Are Obsessed by the Subject of Sex.

By Mrs. Francis M. Scott.

THE following words occur almost at the beginning of Edna Kenton's paper on "The Militant Woman—and Women" in the November Century: "The middle of the last century saw the stupendous upheaval, with the 'Origin of Species' and 'The Descent of Man' marking the epochal divide." Thereafter follows a brilliant, glittering series of assertions which are never demonstrated, of accusations largely unfounded, and no conclusions at all that the amazed and earnest reader can discover. It is not my purpose, however, to attack Mrs. Kenton's bewildering article in detail, nor, indeed, to attack it at all. The woman question or movement is world-wide, it is a part of the immediately modern environment in which we live, it both threatens and blesses, it inspires, it horrifies, and it often amazes.

The Lessons of Science.

If the "stupendous upheaval" of the nineteenth century had any teaching for us at all we should have learned at least these things: that specialization of function is a part of the evolutionary process; that differentiation of sex has been of age-long development, and always in one direction, the higher the development the more complete the differentiation; that evolution growth is slow and orderly; that abnormalities die on the way, effecting nothing; that the propagation of any species and its improvement is the only work in which Nature is interested, and, finally, that not until man was reached has there been, so far as we know, any appearance of what we call morality, nor any effort to govern or control or deny the sex desire.

Frankly I do not know just what is meant by "sex freedom" and "sex war." I do not know whether it means freedom and war for denial or freedom and war for the gratification of the fundamental impulse of life, therefore I am somewhat at a loss; but as I wish to touch the difficult part of this feministic doctrine as delicately and as frankly as I can I will not stop for definitions. In the high hysterical mood so characteristic of the arguing woman when she attacks sex questions it is difficult to make her stop and remember that sex intercourse is as natural as breathing, and while not as necessary for life to the individual, here and now at this minute, is a necessity for the creation of the future generations who are to inherit the earth.

The obsession which impels the feminists to let this one aspect of life blot out every other is no more reasonable than an attempt to create a wild excitement on the subject of breathing, letting that important act direct and color every thought. Sanity and common sense demand that an end should be put to the unnatural, and, because unnatural, abhorrent attitude which is being assumed toward a phase of life gravely important if you like, but not its only controlling influence.

The Child.

The only way in which it should be held to be the controlling influence is in its consequence, and that consequence is utterly ignored in all the present wild talk and action. That consequence is the child.

In Mrs. Kenton's paper there are few allusions to the child. The following are the most important:

A statement that "in homes of one or two children lies another great reservoir of waste energy among women."

A little story of an English mother naturally and properly indignant at the laws ignoring of her claim to be considered legally the "parent" of her child, and held justified thereby in becoming a "wild woman" in spite of her husband's wishes.

The paragraph in which the offensive phrase, "and England • • • still feels that the chief end of life is to spawn soldiers."

That is all. When the law was framed which the woman of the second quotation resents, the father alone was held responsible by the State for the well-being, the education, the feeding and housing of the child; consequently he alone was recognized in legal forms regarding the child. All this is an outworn, outgrown condition. The law always lags, for its function is only to confirm, to put into a compulsory form for all what the people have already generally adopted and approved. Changes in the law do not demand fire and stones, but rather such an upbuilding of public opinion as shall force needed changes upon the statute books, as has been done and is still being done continuously in our own country.

It is a little difficult to write temperately of the third of the above quotations. The needless, cruel insult flung at every mother who has given her son to her country defeats itself by its own unworthiness. It is not as spawn that we would consider the overlooked, the forgotten, the deliberately ignored child. There are many other things written of by Mrs. Kenton—votes for women, office for women, economic independence for women, war for women, bombs and fire, hammers and stones, rioting and hunger-striking, and at last sex freedom and sex war for women! But what of the child? This fierce individualism which clutches at everything it sees, where will it bring the succeeding generations which must suffer for the madness which urges these women on beyond all reason?

Human Government.

Human society has slowly climbed from unspeakable depths of ignorance to its present place, from which it can at last take stock of itself, and, learning from its past, continue with intention and self-knowledge its upward way. The various forms of government which men have agreed to impose upon themselves have brought about in the last 500 years changes that are stupendous, changes that are generally speaking all for the betterment of the human race, and all these changes for good have been wrought with the help of, and under the control of, what this article characterizes as "the blind, stupid, heavy thing that men conceive to be government."

What conception of government the feminists have it is difficult to comprehend. Mrs. Pankhurst, the high priestess of militancy, according to the newspaper reports, has just declared that "at last women have learned the joy of war, a joy too long withheld from them by men." Yet the despised men are outgrowing war, and more and more regarding it as only the last bitter resort, not a joy.

The New Psychology.

To quote further: "Perhaps the new psychology of the human race will have for its starting point neither male nor female, but the individual and its own." What does this mean? Are we then to be modestly aware of gender only and lose our hard-earned sex, to be a possessive neuter, or are we to return to a dividing cell form of reproduction? Pseudo-science, to the informed, is only laughable, and such a sentence as the above, if not entirely meaningless, shows an amazing misapprehension of the stately march of human development.

That march includes, must include, the intellectual development of the whole race, women and men alike. No real difference of opinion exists on this point among intelligent, thoughtful persons, and no one desires to withhold from any human being the opportunity to fulfill him or herself. Let us grant this before we go further. I speak with assurance for every one of those with whom I have been associated in opposing votes for women. The vote is only a way of avoiding a physical contest over every difference of opinion. It is a convenience, a method of compromise, a very human and fallible instrument for the expression of the will of the people, but it has been made the war cry, the shibboleth, the crux of this modern movement. The desire for what it has come to mean has given birth to the militant woman. Mrs. Kenton is right when she says that "Militancy is not a disease, it is a symptom." Militancy is the discharging ulcer of the insidious disease of feminism.

Service.

"Every woman is a servant to or of some one or some thing, the servant half of the human race." Why this scorn? Is service then a contemptible thing? Have the long ages of the world rolled on and has the human race not yet learned that service is all there is of life, that individual freedom is a myth, that we work, suffer, love, and are glad together, that even at birth and death our lives rest on others, and that not our slightest act, perhaps not our slightest thought, is without its shaping influence?

Some years ago Benjamin Kidd wrote a notable book on Western civilization. He therein deduced from his examination of the laws made and in process of making, from the lectures he heard, the conversations he had, and the keen observation he used in all his various inquiries, that the principle which inspired the civilization of Western countries was that of preparation for the future of the race, its physical and moral welfare, and to provide more perfect conditions for its development and growth. Such an admirable, and dignified, and worth-while principle is not animating these "wild women" who demand sex freedom, sex war, the legalized destruction of unborn children, economic freedom, and war any way! They willfully misconstrue service into slavery, unless it is impersonal service, and demand a liberty amounting to license.

The Old Ideals.

When the feminists "refuse to accept the old ideals of the relations between men and women" what do they mean to substitute? The "ideals" have been good and pure ones, the following them, the practice, has too often been another matter, but if we cannot look to our women to conserve the purity of the family then we must abandon the family, and only a very few of the most logical of these women see the necessity of this conclusion, and, alas, accept it.

"It is a wise child that knoweth his own father," but, unless he can trust the woman, no man can know his own child, while no woman can be mistaken as to the paternity of hers. All a man's faith must rest on the woman. For her children's sake should she not carry her torch of purity high? This is no plea for a double standard of chastity. Let there be but one, and let it be the woman's, but because men since the history of the race began have been lax, do not let us, in proof of our emancipation, put ourselves, as Mrs. Kenton suggests, outside the "pale of mere convention," by breaking laws "as a protest against the law makers in power."

The stress laid upon economic freedom, and its "spiritual necessity" is out of all proportion to its importance. Marriage is a partnership, in which there should be a fair and equitable division of the labor of the family, and the first requisite of the woman's share in that partnership must be her freedom to consider first the welfare of the child, the future citizen, and nothing should be undertaken by the mother which might interfere with that most important duty.

It is for this reason, and this alone, that wherever possible a woman with children should be relieved of responsibilities which take her out of her home. It is because she may be needed, and needed imperatively, that it is wrong for her to undertake work the proper attention to which compels her to be constantly and regularly away from her home. This does not make her a slave to her husband, nor even to her children. It does, however, and should, make both mother and father the slaves of the future as foreshadowed in the child.

Wild Riot Will Die Down.

Fortunately this stormy gust which threatens to overwhelm us will be succeeded by a period of quiet, for the winds do not blow always. We are too close as yet to discern the wheat below the chaff which is blowing in our eyes, and then the sound of the wind is deafening. We may be sure that the feminists will not alter the human race, although for a little time they may harmfully and wantonly disturb some part of it. The wild riot of individualism will die down and the temple of service will stand clear again on the eternal hills. The little child shall again lead us, and we shall build painstakingly and slowly for the future of the race, having learned that we must take nature for our teacher, abide by her laws, follow her precepts, and reach such perfection as we may through constructive effort, and not by the incendiary, ungoverned haste and impetuosity of the militant woman.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

This department does not pretend to be infallible. It will endeavor to answer questions sent to it by THE TIMES readers to the best of its ability.

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

Birthstones.

M. MUDFORD.—Will you please give me a list of the precious stones which are assigned to various months? I was born in December, and I have always thought that my birthstone was a turquois, but recently a friend told me that my birthstone was the ruby.

There are two systems of birthstones, one Polish and the other Jewish in origin. The Polish system is the one now more generally accepted, but of course this is simply a matter of custom, not to be settled arbitrarily.

The Polish system is as follows: January, garnet; February, amethyst; March, bloodstone; April, diamond; May, emerald; June, chalcedony or agate; July, ruby; August, sardonyx; September, sapphire; October, aquamarine or beryl; November, topaz; December, turquois.

The Jewish system is: January, garnet; February, amethyst; March, jasper; April, sapphire; May, chalcedony, carnelian, or agate; June, emerald; July, onyx; August, carnelian; September, chrysolite; October, aquamarine or beryl; November, topaz; December, ruby.

New York Engravings.

M. K. V. R.—There seems to be a revived interest in views of Old New York. I should be greatly obliged if you could tell me the value of the engravings in inclosed list. The one by St. Merwin should be very rare if I know anything about such matters; also the Old City Hall, by D. Knickerbocker, 1789. Has Knickerbocker been identified?

We will take up one by one the items on your list. The view of New York Bay and Harbor from Battery Park (Burton) is worth about $2.25. The colored engraving of the City Hall, showing the iron fence from Southwest (Davis-Batch) is worth about $2.

The view of the North Battery from the foot of Hubert Street sells at $1. The engravings of Park Row, Bowling Green, Le Roy Place and the City Hall which you describe are worth $5 each if they are the quarto engravings, and 50 cents or $1 if octavo.

The views of Broadway from the Park, showing an old omnibus, Barnum's Museum, and St. Paul's, and of Bowling Green, are worth 50 cents or $1 each. The engravings of New York from Jersey City (Berford) and of the Navy Yard are worth $1 each.

The Dakin view of New York and the Wier view of Hoboken are worth $2 apiece. The Davis view of St. Paul's sells at $1 each, and the views of Washington's Headquarters at Newburg (Wier) and of Delaware Water Gap (Durand) sell at the same price.

The Wharton-Graham view of New York from Brooklyn Heights is worth about $2. The view of the old City Hall dated 1789 and signed "D. Knickerbocker" is taken from Washington Irving's famous "Knickerbocker's History of New York," and is worth $1 or $2.

An India proof of Old Trinity (J. A. Rolph,) lettered as you describe, has brought at auction $38. The Davis and Eddy "Trinity Church" is worth $1 and your view of St. John's Chapel should bring about $3.

The Davis-Wright view of St. Thomas is worth $1. We have no record of the value of the "Eight Etchings for Characteristics of Women." The "Astor House from the East" is worth 50 cents or $1. The original of the St. Merwin views of New York is worth $40. It has the date 1796 in small type. That with the date 1798 is the Manual reprint, of much less value. The two volumes of views (reprint) bring about $7 at auction.

Stamps and Slavery.

A. M.—A friend of mine met an elderly lady at Lakewood last week, who for some time past has been collecting our postage stamps (1c. and 2c.) and mailing them to a holy order in Canada.

She says 10,000 of these stamps will free one slave in Africa. The stamps have to be carefully assorted and put up in bundles of 100 each.

My friend, impressed with the sincerity of the lady, is following suit.

It seems to me to be a "hobby" of an old lady who has nothing else to do, as I cannot conceive of any worth or value being attached to used stamps.

Kindly enlighten me if you can, as I am interested in the subject.

It is a fact that missionaries of certain religious orders working in Africa and China are able to exchange canceled postage stamps for slaves. A great many children and grown people have been rescued in this way, and given a Christian education. We do not know of the Canadian order which you mention, but you can get detailed information about the work by writing to the editor of Ave Maria, Notre Dame Congregation, South Bend, Ind.

Letter to "L. C. S."

This department has received from "D. M." a letter in which she asks to hear from "L. C. S." who wrote to THE SUNDAY TIMES over a year ago concerning a drugless cure for rheumatism. She writes, in part: "I should like to get into communication with 'L. C. S.,' who wrote to THE TIMES about rheumatism last November. I intended long ago to reply to the letter, but I let the matter slip unintentionally."

WHAT THE WELL-DRESSED WOMAN IS WEARING

Talk of Spring Fabrics Includes Rumor That Chinese Effects Will Reign Once More.

AT last fashion seems settled. That is, for the time. Possibly no one wants it to remain quiescent for more than a few months. Changing raiments are a necessity to the world of commerce, an inspiration to the world of designing, and the sole pleasure in life to thousands of women, some of whom are rich and some of whom are poor.

Those who cannot afford the theatres or the costly pleasures of life can look at and read about wonderful clothes even if they cannot buy them, and this is a mental delight that all women appreciate.

Already we hear talk of Spring fabrics and fashions, and yet there are thousands of women who have not yet bought or made their Winter raiment. The great shops in great centres are already announcing sales of French models and American copies which were shown in the September exhibitions.

The woman who is canny about buying and who has the opportunity to be present at these sales finds that she saves her purse and provides well for her wardrobe by taking advantage of the offer. But the oddness of it strikes the observer with full force; in Autumn there are reduced sales of Winter clothes. Why should any woman buy gowns earlier than November if she is quite sure she can get the best models at reduced prices during that month?

Commercialists do not make mistakes in that line, and they do not announce sales until they are sure there is a necessity for them; and yet, the observer cannot help but wonder what the necessity is of opening the Autumn season in September if the Americans do all their buying in the two months that lapse between the openings and the bargain sales.

The probability is that an enormous amount of material is made up and put out purely for exploitation purposes, and it must be gotten rid of before the shops settle down to the actual business of the Winter.

The Benefit of Sales.

There are hundreds of women with full purses who take advantage of these early sales to build up an incomplete wardrobe. They fill in the cracks, as it were, with inexpensive gowns that are not absolutely necessary, and it is the experience of many of these women that such gowns give them more use than any others.

Women save a costly gown for special occasions no matter how much they argue that they will not do it, and for this reason the gown picked up for thirty or forty dollars usually gives four times its value before it is discarded.

And right here lies the secret of the real impression that many women make on the public; they look well on occasions, but not every day. If the little gown or blouse is attractive and becoming, all very well, but far too many women wear clothes that have neither of these qualities, because they are cheap or because they are on hand. The public doesn't know this. It only recognizes that the woman in question is not well dressed.

This subject alone would provide a chapter in clothes. An entire understanding of it would relieve women of much trouble and secure for them a better appearance day by day.

It sounds like a wickedly extravagant thing to advise the rapid discarding of old clothes, and if a woman cannot bring her mind to doing it, then she should limit her purchase to just what she needs.

But this discussion is one of economy more than fashion, yet it includes both, and is fascinating. It is a salad of human nature, style, economy, judgment, and result.

The women who really appreciate the benefit of sales are those who actually need clothes at a small price, and whose social environment compels them to dress well. Of course, there are women to whom style means nothing, who insistently bank upon moral and mental virtues to offset their lack of clothes, but I have often wondered if it did not take more indifference, or more conceit, than the average woman was capable of, to be quite content when dowdy.

Buying French Models.

Every woman does not wish a French model; neither can she wear it if she had it. One must have physical traits that go with French models which cannot be limited to a pen and ink outline. Words and phrases do not exactly express the qualities in many women that allow them to wear the newest fashion. The appraiser can tell in a glance the kind of woman who can dress fashionably and the kind who cannot. Woe be to the latter if she tries. The primrose path in gowns is not for her.

But there are American copies of French models offered at these sales which are admirable for the average woman who wants to look as though she lived in Main Street and not in the Place Vendome.

There are French models that are plain, and there are hundreds of French women who dress with a splendid simplicity of which we know nothing, but these models are rarely brought to America, through whose fault we know not. The buyers say the American public will have nothing but what is startling, the public says that buyers will give them nothing but what is freakish, both put the blame on the French couturier, and they retort that they could not sell to America the gowns that they make for the French society women—at least, not to the American buyers.

But that, again, is another chapter on clothes. The bypaths of fashion are so much more attractive than the broad highways, and yet at this season of the year the reader wants facts, not philosophy. Well, there are plenty of facts, and here are a few of them:

Talk of Spring Fabrics.

If you are interested in the incoming news of Spring fabrics, here is a bit of gossip that sounds fearful at the first saying, but it evidently is not as bad as it sounds; the new materials will have Chinese landscapes on them copied from Chinese vases and porcelains.

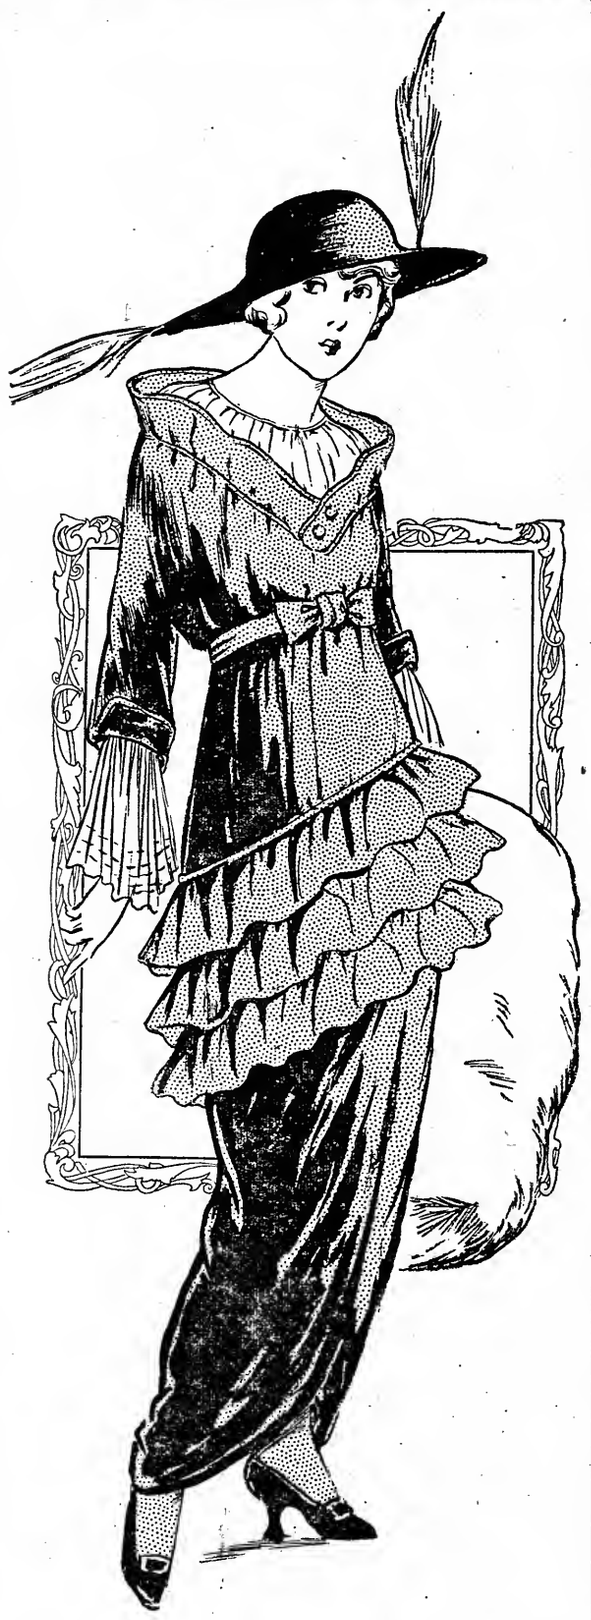
The Futurist idea was never as bad as this, although it came very near representing vineyards, which, after all, are parts of landscapes. But the Futurist artist limited himself to apples and peaches and blackberries, whereas the coming artist will introduce trees and ferns and lush, growing things.

The most hopeful part about it is that Rodier is making the fabrics. This French designer is an artist, and rarely sends to us a fabric we do not wish. He invented ratine, velours de laine, silk and cotton crepe, matelasse, duvetyn, and his record is good; whatever it is he is doing with these Chinese landscape fabrics, they will probably not be outrageous. They may be more Chinese than landscape!

None of the surfaces of the new clothes promise to be smooth. There are stripes of corduroy run on a crepe background, and they are stamped, figured effects. However, this is enough to know of what may happen as far as the actual fabrics are concerned. The interesting thing is that China is evidently to be called upon to furnish some interesting fashionable innovations.

We are so deep in Persia these days with a mixture of Servia, Turkey, and Russia, that it is not unlikely China will be added to the allied forces. Japan furnishes much and always has. That shoulder collar that drops outward at the back and rolls slightly away from the shoulders, remains with us, and the wide sash with its bow at the back is still one of our happiest ideas for waist drapery. We now drop the bow instead of lifting it up, but that is merely a trick that Premet taught us, for it was at this house that the Japanese idea sprung, full fledged, into Caucasian clothes.

The Persian influence is the strongest we have had since the Directoire, and it is believed by those who are high in the councils that it will remain for months and months to come.



An afternoon dancing gown of black velvet, with ruffles and collar of black taffeta. Notice the new, wide neck with outstanding collar.

The Strength of Persian Influence.

It is exceedingly difficult for any one but an Oriental scholar to put the finger on the exact point where the Persian influence ends and the Turkish influence begins, and the other way around. The East is a jumble of many things that come from a common origin and resemble each other closely, and it is probably better to use the word Oriental in describing the new influence in fashion.

One gown may be made up of a Zouave skirt, a Minaret tunic, ropes of pearls in Persian fashion drooping from shoulder to wrist, a stimulated Turkish packet, and a Japanese sash. One thing may be distinctly stated; none of the modern clothes are governed by Caucasian influences. They are modeled and modulated by Caucasian taste, which makes them quite available for our women to wear.

The woman who is fond of beads can indulge that fondness to any extent she wants this Winter—the Persian influence allows that. Even her sleeves may be of five strings of crystal beads caught at the shoulders and wrist with bracelets of brilliants.

The girdle on her evening gown may be from two to six inches wide, a lattice work of pearls held by a huge colored cabochon in front, and the fullness of the tunic may be held down by garlands of pearls that are usually suspended from the jeweled belts of dancing girls.

The Minaret tunic is only one of the many manifestations of Persian influence. The upward drapery of the skirt toward the front is a highly accented one, and the low bodice of tulle with its waist arrangement of jewels extending to the bust is a third manifestation.

The Pleated Skirt Again.

The revival of the pleated skirt in August at such houses as Premet and Paquin caused a ripple of interest, and those who were not on the inside shouted happily that the narrow skirt was out. Well, the narrow skirt has been out for a year, except where the hem was concerned, and the pleated skirt had nothing to do with this change, nor will it influence the narrow hem to-day.

It is of special interest now because the new skirts made for the mid-season trade are fashioned in this manner. Of course, the peg top, or Zouave, or Turkish skirt—whichever you choose to call it—might be called a pleated skirt also, but one thinks of it as draped.

This new kind of pleated skirt is attached to a deep yoke which entirely covers the hips and flattens them into a straight line; it is even at the edge or irregular. Some of them are shaped away on a strongly biased line from the front to back to harmonize with the line of the cutaway coat. Others are dipped down in front and vanish to a point at the waist in the back where they are finished with a flat bow, in imitation of the apron drapery which Cheruit introduced.

There is nothing about these skirts to suggest the absurd ones of several years ago which ended in a flaring pleating and were held down by a wide sash. This new skirt is eminently smart and dignified, and it is probable, mind you only probable, that it will succeed the widely pleated peg top skirt after the first of the year. That prophecy, however, is at too long range to have any particular value attached to it. Something new may come up between now and Christmas which will change the forecast.

The peg top skirt, as it is called over here, or the Zouave skirt, as it is called in Paris, is the fashion of the day. Everybody recognized that the moment Callot introduced it on the first day of the third week of August.

The Bolero Blouse.

It was only natural that with the incoming of the Turkish and Persian skirts, women should begin to wear the Zouave jackets which are so much a part of the East. One does not see as many of them here as in Paris, but they are immensely attractive, and provide a distinct change from the ordinary blouse which we have worn for fifteen or twenty years.

These blouses are a combination of a bolero jacket and a full, pleated shirtwaist front with a high sash to hold both in.

Cheruit first introduced the waistcoat blouse which was a decided change from the conventional garment we have worn, and this bolero blouse provides a good rival to it in novelty. It is made long enough at the back to be pushed up and over the belt, and the fronts are loose, and open over a vest of finely pleated or gathered batiste, handkerchief linen, or chiffon cloth. This is finished at the top with a turnover collar and loose cravat, or it is gathered to a straight neckband, which is covered by a straight collar attached to the bolero. This may be trimmed with fur or galloon, or left plain.

The waistcoat blouse is fastened straight down the front, is opened in a slight "V" at the neck, and sometimes finished with a high collar that rises above the coat collar and falls over it. It has two points below the waistline in front and a narrow belt with a buckle at the back. The sleeves are long and without fulness, and are finished at the wrist with a row of buttons. Like most others of the day, they are held in tightly to the wrist and flare over the hand.

Changing Sleeves.

The designers must have taken a great deal of time off to invent all the new sleeves that appear in the market. It would take a page to describe them, and then some one would arrive with a new one. There never was more laxity as far as fashion is concerned. It is not even necessary to make them of the gown fabric, and they need not harmonize with its color scheme. Paquin's idea of putting a plain sleeve in a dark frock did not become popular, and the scheme of Bechoff-David in putting Futurist sleeves in blue and brown gowns quickly died out, but Poiret's idea of putting velvet sleeves to match a velvet skirt in the loose armholes of a Ruslan blouse of another color promises to have a following.

It is not unfashionable to have plain sleeves in a conventional armhole, and yet a gathered sleeve that starts half way up the shoulder or at the neck line is more fashionable. In jackets and in blouses the wide kimono one is good, and it is draped under the arm in a voluminous manner that adds inches to breadth of the figure.

In evening gowns it is not necessary to have a sleeve. There are individualists who are going in for the Greek shoulder drapery, modified, which is especially attractive for débutantes. The bodice is cut to two points over each shoulder held together with a tiny jeweled button. The armhole is outlined with crystal or metal trimming, and the folds of the material rest against the neck in a deep "V," back and front, without ornament.

A BRIDAL LUNCH

A SLIPPER luncheon for a prospective bride was a success not long ago. Each of the guests, excepting the bride, was asked to bring some slipper gift for the bride—anything that had anything to do with slippers, real or make-believe.

The imaginations of the guests evidently worked well, for the gifts were delightful. One brought a pair of ribbon boudoir slippers and another brought a pair of buckles for dancing slippers. There was a small silver pin cushion shaped like a slipper. There was a dainty silver shoe horn. There was a pair of figured silk mules. There was a dainty pair of silk-covered shoe trees. There was a silk "party bag," with pockets for slippers. The guests had consulted with each other a little so that there were no duplicates.

They all reached the house of the hostess a little before the bride did—by arrangement, of course. Then they packed their offerings into the gift of the hostess—a chintz covered slipper box, fitted with pockets on the inside to hold half a dozen pairs of slippers, and with floor space for more slippers or odds and ends of any sort.

Of course, the bride was delighted when she arrived and unfastened the packages containing her "slipper shower," as any bride ought to be delighted about any sort of shower.

The centrepiece on the table was a white crêpe paper slipper, made over a pasteboard frame. From it a narrow white ribbon led to the place of each guest, and inside the slipper a small china slipper, filled with bonbons, was fastened to the end of each ribbon. The top of the slipper was filled with lilies of the valley, arranged in bunches so that each guest could have one to wear.

The place cards, of course, were in the form of slippers, and the ice cream was served in slipper moulds.

BEHIND THIS MESSAGE IS A PUNCH

LAST month, October, The Eagle published more paid advertising than any other New York City newspaper, with one exception. Not only did it have that distinction, but the records compiled by the official Statistical Department of the New York papers show that The Eagle was the only one of New York City's four leading dailies that showed a gain over the same month in 1912.

The Eagle gained 21,838 agate lines. The first Manhattan newspaper lost 91,722 lines. The third Manhattan newspaper lost 9,751 lines. That is food for thought. Advertisers are using The Eagle more than any other newspaper in New York City except one. Just as important is the fact that The Eagle was the only one of the leaders to show an increase.

When we analyze the figures we find that The Eagle's largest gain was in the principal classification of advertising—that of "Dry Goods." In that department it gained more than any other daily and Sunday paper in New York—32,700 lines are the exact figures. Most of the papers lost.

Real Estate, Financial, Instruction, Automobiles, Hotels and Resorts are some other classes of business in which The Eagle made good increases.

The successful merchants and careful buyers of advertising space study characteristic conditions and select for cultivation the fields that can bring them profit. For Brooklyn and Long Island, the great home centers with a population of over 2,000,000 people, The Brooklyn Eagle is their choice of mediums.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS TO KNOW

Do You Inhabit Your Home?—Are the Rooms Just a Setting for Your Life or Are You Really a Part of Them?

ALL persons might be divided into two classes. One class includes those who really inhabit the rooms they live in, or, to put it quite as clearly, really live in the rooms they inhabit. The other class includes those who pass through the rooms of their houses as they pass through a landscape or a pleasant garden, seeming no part of their surroundings. They seem as much a part of their own living rooms as they seem a part of the reception rooms of a vast hotel they may chance to visit.

The rooms that are a real part of their owners are the rooms that persist in the memory.

What is it that makes a picture of a Dutch interior so interesting? Isn't it because the interior invariably expresses the personality of its owners?

Think of some favorite room of your childhood. Perhaps it was a kitchen in a rambling farmhouse. Every corner of it looked lived in. The chairs were worn into comfortable hollows. Even the clean floor was shabby at the door, where hundreds of feet had passed through. The cushions on the deep rocking chairs were pressed into crevices where tired backs had rested. A teakettle hummed forever on the stove, doubtless in old fashioned but surely in friendly fashion, ever ready for a cup of tea. The very cat, curled warmly on the hearth, expressed the contentment of the woman who presided over the room.

That was a room that was lived in. Perhaps, according to our standards, it was too much lived in. Perhaps there was a darkened "front room" which was never opened excepting for funerals and like formal happenings that ought to have come in for some use. But at all events, the kitchen was lived in in a way that left its impress on every article of furnishing in it—the cat included.

Persons Who Leave Impress.

There are fortunate persons who immediately associate themselves with their surroundings. Their rooms could belong to no one else in the world. Their possessions all proclaim their owner.

Look at the work rooms of some men. There is a lived-in look about them, which even an industrious maid's energetic duster cannot displace. The way the desk is placed in relation to the light, the way the pictures are hung on the wall, the arrangement of books and papers and cigars and pipes and tobacco jars, the fashion of the chairs and foot rests all betray the individual tastes of their owner.

Even the desks of some men in big offices show individuality. Surrounded by walls that are bare, desks that are piled high with work, other people's chairs and belongings, there will yet be an individuality about these desks. The little touches that go to make this individuality are intangible, but they are there.

Did you ever know a woman to go into a furnished house and rearrange the furniture she found in such a way that the house looked like her house, and like no other's? It is this sort of woman who lives in her rooms, who makes them a part of herself and herself a part of them.

Once upon a time there was a woman who wanted to make her living room expressive of an interesting personality. She had an interesting personality, interesting because it was rather ridiculous. But she wanted to have a personality that was interesting in another way. So she arranged her living room to fit the imagined personality.

A caller, entering the room one afternoon, noticed a book of Walt Whitman's poems lying half open on a little table in a corner. Near the table was a low chair, across one arm of which was a half-finished piece of embroidery—rich, interesting, ecclesiastical embroidery, it seemed to be—and lying on the floor, where it had apparently fluttered when the hostess had left her chair, was an illuminated page from an old missal, from which she was obviously copying the colors in the embroidery.

"I didn't know she was that sort of woman," commented the caller to herself as she waited for her hostess to appear.

The caller, like every one else, had always thought the other woman was a "flutterbudget"—the sort of woman who rushed from one frivolity to another, with good intentions and scattered brains.

A month later the same caller called again. The same half-open book lay on the same spot on the same table, the embroidery, still half finished—as, indeed, it had been when it was bought—lay still carelessly on the arm of the chair, the page from the old missal lay where it had lain before.

All these objects had been arranged with a pathetic desire to make their owner seem a part of her living room.

Her method was all wrong. If you don't impress your personality on your rooms, you don't. You certainly cannot impress on them a personality you don't possess.

There are some persons who are too aloof—perhaps too unworldly, too lacking in a liking for the material things of life—to become a part of their surroundings. There are others who simply do not take the trouble to make their rooms livable and lived in.

Almost every house possesses one lived-in room, at least. Perhaps it is a little upstairs sitting room or a boudoir. It may be the study or library or work room of the man or son of the house. It may be the children's playroom or it may be the family living room. But in almost every house there are some rooms that look unlived in. And these are uncomfortable, because unpersonal, rooms.

In many houses the drawing room is a horror of formality. Of course, the formal room has its place. If there is another living room, where the familiar interests of the family centre, the formal drawing room or reception room is a delightful place for entertaining and for receiving formal calls.

But the small house with a formal drawing room and no other living room is inexcusable. The family must scatter to its bedrooms to sew and embroider and play mandolins and paste up photograph albums and write letters and do any other pleasant sort of work. It is this sort of room that ought to be avoided.

Let all the rooms of your house be as expressive of the personalities they harbor as they can be, and you will have a house that is worth living in.

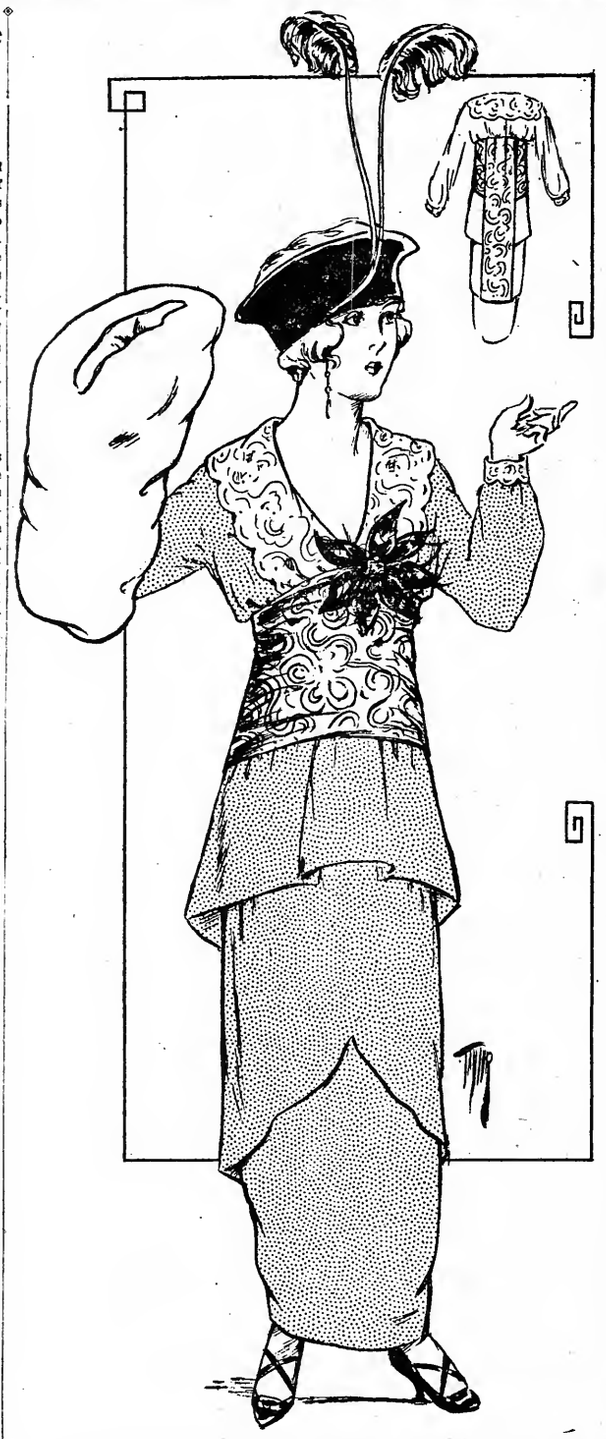
NOVELTIES SEEN IN THE SHOPS

A charming little pincushion is fashioned like a grandfather's chair, with a high back and side arms. It is upholstered in flowered pink silk. The edge of the arms and the back are outlined in pins with colored glass heads. The seat of the chair is wadded to form the pincushion, and it has further usefulness in that it lifts up by a silk ring and discloses a small space for one's watch or rings. These little chairs are priced at $2.50 each.

A new little traveling clock of gilt, measuring about three and a half inches square, or possibly four inches, is most practical. Each has a leather case, stamped in gilt decoration. These cases are either red, or a green so dark that it is almost black. They are priced at $1 each.

Small boxes of handkerchiefs for children, each embroidered in one corner with a different animal, are of the finest quality linen, and are so arranged in the box that the various animals are to be seen on opening it. The price at which they are to be had is $4.50 for the half dozen.

From the quantity displayed it would seem as though chiffon were to be the most popular material of the season. Some chiffons are really exquisite. Those which are tinseled, the product of the new American looms, just brought from France, are remarkable. The plain chiffons of good body for gowns and waists in all tints, are from 75 cents a yard up to $1.75. There is newly to be had chiffon edging. This resembles embroidery by the yard, and comes in different widths, though about eight inches is the average. Some of this edging is scalloped, some pointed, and some has a close edge. The patterns are machine done in white, or colors on white. The price is $3.25 a yard.



Green taffeta and chiffon gown. The sash is of green and silver brocade and a bright red flower is worn at the waist. This gown was worn by an actress on the opening night of the Cigale Theatre in Paris.

Bonbon boxes and small jewel boxes, imported from Germany, are made of gilt and glass, with an exquisite plaque of Dresden china inset in the top. All these plaques are in either pink or blue flowers repoussé. In one or two the tints are combined. All the boxes are round in form, though the size varies. They cost from $3.95 up. One at $5.95 is especially satisfactory in size and effect, and any woman would be delighted with such an addition to her boudoir table.

Those who are making gifts for Christmas find it not too early to begin. One suggestion offered is in a white cotton crêpe kimono of finest quality and short length prepared to be made up and embroidered. This kimono is very inexpensive to make, costing but 50 cents and $1 for the ready-stamped material. The design shows four dainty wreaths, with a shower falling from each of the tiniest of tiny blossoms. It is planned to be worked in a combination of soft shades, but could also be done in any one shade quite as successfully. A one-inch white valenciennes lace edges the completed kimono, and the maker may also put a one-inch insertion of the lace about four inches down from the neck line if the additional fineness is fancied. The embroidery may be done in mercerized cottons or in silks, with equally satisfying effect.

SOME FASHION NOTES

CHENILLE flowers are used for corsage bouquets now. They are made of strings of chenille, in heavy, soft quality, looped into petals, and mounted on green chenille stems, stiffened with wire. Brilliant but at the same time soft shades of red and blue and violet and green and yellow are used. These little flowers have a charm all their own, and are especially effective worn on the dull, gloomy days for which November le famous.

Long white gloves are made with wide, turnback cuffs at the elbow, or slightly above it. These cuffs, which flare out and away from the arm, are made of black velvet, mounted on kid, and embroidered with gold or silver beads, applied in straight lines. The stitching on the backs of these gloves is also marked with beads, to match those used on the cuffs.

A charming new blouse of white chiffon is embroidered with dragonflies. There are two on each side of the front closing. They are worked with beads of silver, pale blue, mauve and iridescent green. The dragonflies are in graceful poses, and form a decorative touch to the blouse.

Bead tunics of many kinds are shown in the shops. They are not of the kind that have been on sale for several months—tunics of net embroidered with beads. To be sure, these are still sold. But the new sort are made of strings of pearl beads, formed into tunics. For instance, there is one formed of many strings of beads fastened to a chain of beads that goes about the neck.

The strands are caught in at the waist, then fall loose again to form a sort of tunic, which ends where they are caught in about the hips. There is a second tunic, formed by a second looping up of all the dozens and dozens of strands of beads—there are some extra ones put in under the arms at the waist—and then they hang in a little, loose tunic at the bottom. Other tunics are made in different fashions of strings of beads. Some are double, some are single, some are in straight and some are in irregular outline. These tunics must, of course, be made up over some fabric, for the strands of beads separate with every motion. They are especially effective made up over satin.

On some of the new satin blouses there are wide belts of gold lace. The blouses are worn, naturally, under the skirt, and the belts are so attached to the blouses that they fall over the skirt bands. The lace is mounted over gold net or chiffon.

ALCOHOL AND THE HAIR.

If the hair is dusty and unmanageable after a journey of any sort, try using alcohol to make it fluffy. The alcohol will dry in a few moments and the hair will be ready then to arrange. Many women who have taken a railroad journey of several hours' duration to a wedding or dance have found their hair, owing to the heat and dust of the journey, quite heavy and dirty, and have despaired of getting it in shape in time for the festivities. A shampoo takes too long to be indulged in while one is dressing—and sometimes it leaves the hair too fluffy for immediate managing.

To get back to the alcohol treatment. Part the hair and rub a little alcohol on a piece of gauze on the scalp until it is free from dust. Then rub the hair about the brows and ears and the nape of the neck with the alcohol. Of course, it should first have been brushed as free as possible from dust. Then let the hair hang loosely until the alcohol has dried out. The hair will be light and fluffy.

Cider Recipes Worth Using—Keg of Delicious Sap Lasts Short Time if You Make Jelly Sauce and Sparkling Beverages.

WHETHER it is the good hard cider, mellowed just long enough in the cask to possess a brisk hardness, or whether it is the bubbling cider just run through the cider mill, sweet and mild—it is all cider, and it is all delightfully suggestive of the return of Autumn and the long evenings indoors. And, thank the powers which bring the ever-changing seasons, it is Autumn again and it is cider time.

Even the small household should be able to use a whole keg of cider, for there are more ways of using cider than most housewives imagine.

Beat three eggs and add a few tablespoonfuls of sugar, according to taste. Have a quart of cider boiling and pour it over the eggs, stirring it constantly as you do so. Now put the mixture back on the stove and boil again. Serve hot in glasses or steins if you are afraid of breaking the glasses.

Cider cup calls for a pint of cider, one wineglassful of sherry, two tablespoonfuls of brandy, the rind of a lemon, half an orange sliced thin, three slices of cucumber, if in season, sugar to taste, a little grated nutmeg, and a liqueur glass of Curaçoa. The ingredients should be mixed fresh and served in tall glasses with spoons.

How to Make Cider Jelly.

Here are two rules for making cider jelly. The first one to be made in small quantities for immediate use calls for two ounces of gelatine in a little water. Add to it two and a half pints of cider and one pound of sugar until it begins to thicken. Strain through a cloth and turn out into a jelly mold. When cold and set serve with cakes and cream.

The other jelly recipe calls for good acid Winter apples which should be washed, stemmed, and cut into quarters and put in the preserving kettle with four quarts of fresh cider to every eight quarts of apples.

Boil until the apples are very tender and then strain, measure and for every pint of juice add a pint of sugar. Stir the sugar and juice until the sugar has dissolved and then put on the fire till it boils. Then draw off from the flame and skim carefully. Repeat this boiling and skimming process three times. Then pour in to jelly glasses that have been heated to the boiling point, and set in the sunshine to cool.

Cider Cake.

Here is a delicious cider cake rule. It calls for one cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, three eggs, four cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of allspice, a teaspoonful of baking soda and cider. Cream the butter and sugar and add the eggs well beaten. Then add the flour and spice and soda and enough cider to form a stiff batter. Bake in a hollow tin. It makes a well chosen dessert when served fresh and unfrosted, with nuts and raisins.

For all sorts of puddings a cider sauce can be used. It is made by rubbing together one small tablespoonful of flour and two tablespoonfuls of butter, and adding one cupful of brown sugar and two-thirds of a cupful of boiling cider. Simmer the mixture till it is smooth and creamy, stirring constantly. It should be served immediately.

How to Boil Cider.

A good many cake rules and all mincemeat rules call for boiled cider, but few explain how to boil it. Here is the best way: Take very new cider and boil steadily but not rapidly till it has been reduced one-half, skimming from time to time. Allow it to cool, and then bottle and seal the corks with sealing wax and use as needed. A mold will probably rise on top of the cider in the bottle, but this does not injure the cider in the least and can simply be removed when the bottle is opened.

If your cider gets too hard to drink, remember that it is not wasted, for the best possible table and cooking vinegar is made from cider. You will need one and a half pounds of rye flour for a barrel of cider, and considerably less for the amount needed in a small household. Mix the flour with a little vinegar, and add enough hot water to make a thick paste. Put it into the barrel or keg and stir well with a stick or wooden spoon. Put it in a warm place for ten days. After that it can be bottled and will keep for a year or longer if properly sealed.

But, after all, why should there be any cider left to make vinegar out of? If we follow the directions of a noted French specialist we would drink it all for our health. This man of science says that for gout it is excellent, and should be drunk when the fermentation has just completed, before it has begun to get "hard," and should be diluted with a third of water.

For any one, whether he has gout or not, the doctor says, it is a splendid tonic on account of the tannin it contains.

TANGO PLEASES ACADEMICIAN

Jean Richepin, in an Address Read Before Most August Body in France, Denies That the Popular Dance Is Indecent.

The annual public seance of the Five Academies composing the Institute of France, which was held on Saturday, Oct. 25, had been proceeded by more than the usual interest even vouchsafed such a distinguished gathering of French men of letters and scientists.

For a month past it had been rumored, and rumored in those circles where rumor has all the significance of actuality, that Jean Richepin, the distinguished academician, poet, novelist, and playwright, would not only lecture before the assembled learned bodies on the Tango, but would illustrate his lecture by reading fragments from his new play, the leitmotif of which is dancing, and by having a famous dansense give visual emphasis to his words.

Nothing quite so sensational happened. There were no extracts read from the play, and there was no dancing girl to delight the eyes of the academicians. All the same, M. Richepin read a paper—a sort of essay by a French Ella—dealing playfully with the dance in history and literature; adducing the testimony of Pindar, Homer, Plato, Socrates, and Sophocles as exponents of the dance, and asserted the antiquity of the tango from figures in the British Museum and from the tombs of Thebes.

He cited Claudian as "a Parnassian before his time, the José Maria de Heredia of the fourth century," and quoted from the Epigrams of Martial discovering in one of them, a probable reference to a dancing master from Cadiz, who taught the tango in ancient Rome, while the modern tango came from Spanish America.

M. Richepin also protested against the charge that the tango was indecent, and that it ought to be condemned on account of its low origin, for he himself had seen the tango danced by princesses, who were models of distinction, while, on the other hand, he had long ago seen the insipid polka and the respectable lancers danced in a way "to make monkeys blush." Here is the full text of his address:

By Jean Richepin of the French Academy.

GENTLEMEN: In order to calm certain expressions of astonishment often carried to the extent of terror and indignation and answer certain severe censors, more royal than the King, and to remind us of the seriousness of the simple announcement made of the lecture which I shall have the honor to deliver to you, permit me, first of all, to affirm how the subject of this lecture, contrary appearances notwithstanding, has nothing either gay or off-color to display before your kind attention. It is rather a most appropriate theme, worthy of consideration, interesting and rich in material for reflections of every kind. It is worthy to be submitted to you without fear of a futile employment of your precious leisure, for each one of you is prepared by his special studies to throw some light on it, and thus, in short (why should I not have the audacity to express my entire thought?) the only competent audience before which one ought to speak in regard to the Tango, is essentially an assembly in which the five academies of the Institute of France are united.

The only point on which there is any doubt is to know which academy among the five is in best position to deal feelingly with such a subject and to furnish the most important solutions to the various problems which it suggests.

Doubtless, at first sight, it would seem that this privileged body should be the Academy of Fine Arts, to which dancing, including the Tango, unquestionably belongs. And it would go to them if it were merely a matter of technique, in which case the present lecture would not advertise my humble and profane voice but the authoritative voice of a confrère belonging to this Academy, which reigns over the arts in general and dancing in particular and consequently the Tango. And thus I should suddenly have to cede my place to the eminent confrère, who was formerly director of the Fine Arts, and to-day is the Permanent Secretary of the Academy of Fine Arts, my friend Henry Roujon.

But he himself, I am sure, would hasten to say that technique alone does not constitute an entire art, and that it is necessary in order to discourse more broadly and, at the same time, more amiably to think also of what has been contributed to it by history, both scientific and episodic, and more especially by philosophy, idealism, and spirituality.

And directly you see how the other Academies of the Institute would despoil me of my usurped function having rightly among their own particular attributes the preservation and the cultivation of these venerable domains, especially those of history and philosophy, where I have no right to hunt but only the fascination of poaching.

What exquisite and unforseen things would not the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres and the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences instruct us in! Even though they had never thought very much about them, they would suddenly apply to them the inexhaustible treasures of their erudition.

With only a feeble light furnished by my simple, classical remembrances may I discover to you these fabulous palaces and uncover their marvels. I behold there reanimated all the past life of the dance from its sacred beginnings; from the ages when it was religious, invented, and practiced by gods in order to symbolize for the benefit of mortals the creation of the world and the movements of the stars in the firmament; from the days when ancient Greece, that youth of humanity, taught that the beauty and eurythmy of the soul flourished by the eurythmy of the body. I recall that Zeus, Demeter, and Apollo were qualified as dancers by my great ancestor Pindar, that the unsociable Artemis also loved to dance, as well as the austere Pallas Athena, and that the first dancing choirs of men and women were organized by my other ancestor—greater even than Pindar and almost a god—the poet-musician, and dancer, Orpheus.

In the same way I remember that my Cornelius Nepos once congratulated the Theban hero Epaminondas for having excelled in the dance; that Homer shows me among the Phoenicians before Odysseus overcome with joy, the young men dancing while Demodokos sings; that Plato in his "laws" exacts that dancing shall crown a good education; and that Socrates, aged and ashamed of his ignorance of dancing, made Aspasia give him lessons in order that his wisdom might be complete; and finally that Sophocles, described as the most beautiful choir leader of his time, celebrated by his dancing before the Athenian people the victory of our civilization over the barbarians at immortal Salamis.

And what other beautiful things also dance in my memory! And still others and others which our confrères of the Academies of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres and of the Moral and Political Sciences could relate to us, not as a poet has sown and must reap, but as scientists with documents and in a manner, fear not, altogether charming. For the good French erudition which knows so much, and often more with a haughty imperious air, knows also the art to tell with grace what it knows; and the pins between her fingers become the flowers that one puts in the corners of the lips.

Thus she would reveal to you charming secrets on the Tango in person, have no doubt of it. What would she not say to you when even I know these things—I poor Gautier-minus-science? Yes, even on the Tango known to the ancients. Know that in the British Muesum one may behold revealed on the hypogeums of Thebes dancing women whose sole clothing is a woven girdle of gold. And know also what says Claudian, a Parnassian before his time, the José Maria de Heredia of the fourth century. And know that besides that even before that time Martial also mentions dancing in some of his epigrams:

Edere lascivos ad Boetica crusmata gestus,
Et Gaditanos ludere docta modos.

(To enjoy the wanton gestures at the Boetic festivals, and so dance after the fashion of Cadiz.)

We thus learn that even then, as to-day, there were professors of the Tango sent by Cadiz just as they are now sent us by the new American Cadiz.

Et de Gadibus improbus magister.
(And the wanton teacher from Cadiz.)

And if by chance of memory I am able to cite you such details apropos of the Tango, what would not a genuine scholar belonging to the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres or that of the Moral and Political Sciences, be able to tell you?—and without counting the philosophical exegesis whose right and duty it would be to entertain you. For there is metaphysics as well as mysticism in the dance. Is there also metaphysics and mysticism in the Tango? I dare not say so. But why is there not! But there is indeed, beyond denial and worthy of reflection, mathematics in the Tango.

And here is where I revert, repentant and very humbls, to that one of the five academies which I had almost forgotten, to which I express all my excuses. It is the most serious of the five without any doubt, and by that same token seemingly the most distant from the Tango. It would, nevertheless, solve for us the most annoying and strange mysteries as by dint of its mathematics in this Tango which comes from those filthy hovels, when it is danced as I have mentioned a while ago. And as to the rest, learn right here that of which you are ignorant, and know that those famous dances of past times, those aristocratic dances of our ancestors, so pretty, so fine, so delicate, and so graceful, all began, even they, by being popular dances. All, yes, all. All had rustic birth; all are old folk antics, old capers invented by the lowest of the low; all from the stately minuet which was once the accompaniment of a wine harvest's debauch, to the proud and charming gavotte made fashionable by Marie Antoinette, but the first measures of which were banged out by the great wooden shoes of the coarse youths of Brittany.

For our peasants have always loved the dance. The "Bourrée Auvergnate" and the "Bourbonnaise" prove that they love it still, and in the fields as well as the barns of Parisian suburbs, the "Bouree," which is, perhaps more complicated than the Tango, is danced. And like our peasants our society people also like the dance; and they refine it when once they have taken it from the people, just as they are doing now with the Tango; they even leave its complications, its fire and violence, giving to all the proper finish and modification. And this is why, in his "Orchésographie," the Canon of Langres, Tholnot Arbeau, chapel master of Henry III., described the nature of this exercise, this veritable gymnastics of dancing, in terms in which you will observe all the movements which precisely go to make up the Tango, although he hides them under the concentrated ardor of his secret and solemn mimicry:

"To dance," wrote the good Canon, "that is to say, to leap, vault, prance, turn, tiptoe, and move with emphasis the feet, hands, and body according to certain cadences, measures, and movements consisting of twisting and bending the body, of separating the feet and of bringing them together, of kneelings and risings and swayings of the body and other attitudes."

And to conclude, what matters, in fact, the foreign and popular origin of the dance? What matters also its character and figure? We Frenchify everything, and the dance which we like to dance becomes French. And so, in our infatuation for the present Tango, it is only necessary to see a revival of our love for dancing which will bring us joy. For France is, like ancient Greece, and alone with her, a country where dancing is one of the necessaries of life.

When Odysseus arrived in the terrible isle where dwelt Polyphemus and the anthropopharian Cyclops, and when he asked of the aged Silenus: What is this land of horror? the father nurse of Dionysos defined it by a single epithet: he called it "akhoron khthona," a land where there is no dancing.

Well, France must never become a country like that. It would not know how to become so, except by pain of death. Let us bless everything that prevents that, all that reanimates the old traditions by which she brings ancient Greece to life, by remaining a land where people dance, where people do everything dancing, and where they even know how to die dancing.

Was it not thus that the Spartans at Thermopylae, on the morning of their last day, dressed their hair, rubbed their bodies with oil, and softened the muscles by a Pyrrhic? And is it not with the same sentiment that the great Condé in order to carry by assault the impregnable Lérida made his musketeers climb to the song of the violins of Lulli? And similarly was it not so with the 25,000 fur caps at Austerlitz, who forced the squares of the enemy to the sound of the fifes whistling a "rigadoon" for them?

Surely all the heroes loved dancing and knew how to dance. And that is why, at the time when I was a youth in the cavalry, they were right to teach us dancing conjointly with fencing. And that is why, at the very beginning, I got the courage to talk about the Tango before the five academies of the Institute, certain that they would pardon me this audacity, because by the Tango I mean the dance and because the dance evokes that Pyrrhic invented by Pallas Athena, the sage, that Pyrrhic so exalted that all the young people of Athens, after the performance of the "Persae" of Aeschylus, began to dance like maniacs all night long, through the squares and the streets, and especially before the temples, where they beat with their fists upon the shields suspended at the doors and redoubled their frantic leaps in crying passionately: "My Country! My Country! My Country!"

There remains the popular origin. And here the detractors of the Tango have full swing, it would seem, and do not hesitate to abuse it, prudishly veiling themselves from all that is low and common—"popular" is a word hardly bad enough for them to call its origin; they should say, "vulgar." Just think of it. A dance which had for its cradle the filthy hovels of South America. A dance of cattlemen, drovers, and cowboys, of half-savages, and of negroes. Fi! Horrors!

"Ah!" sigh these fierce moralists, "let them give us again the beautiful and delicate dances of our ancestors, the dances in which blossomed exquisitely the delicacy and grace of the French aristocracy!"

They blossom just the same, my dear fierce moralists, in the Tango, the Tango belongs to the Academy of Sciences.

Who knows whether this academy will not instruct us by the formula (a plus b) that the Tango is the last survival of one of those sacred dances by which Egyptian and Chaldean priests figured the evolutions of existence and wrote from it the formulae of mathematics? Who knows whether in the complicated operations of its steps this mysterious and slow "ballet à deux" does not represent the first blossoming of numbers appearing from creative unity the same which led Pythagoras to give the world ciphering for its soul, whereas the cloudy Heraclitee decided that the essence of things was the rythm of his despairing "panta peel," the eternal movement of all with this addition furnished by the Greek grammar of a neuter subject which is in the plural while its verb is in the singular. And finally, who knows whether the dancers of the Tango, although they may know nothing of these formidable things, may not unconsciously feel in their absorbed and often sad revolutions something of the sorrowful past which turns a supposed pleasure into a sort of mournful delight?

But we must not spend too much time on the problems which associate the Academy of Sciences with the Tango. Suffice to have glanced at all that might furnish varied studies for the different Academies of the Institute of this persecuted dance which some persons deem unworthy of your attention. The short time which I have remaining I would employ in pleading the cause of this accused innocent, and I will do so as briefly as possible.

The three great reproaches that people fasten on the Tango are the foreign origin of the dance, its popular origin, and its unconventional character.

It is useless to reply to this last complaint—truly unjust—because the unconventional character of a dance is always due to the dancers. I have had the pleasure of seeing the Tango danced by Princesses who were models of elegant distinction, and, on the other hand, I have seen long ago the insipid polka and the virtuous quadrille and lancers danced in a way which, according to one of our most illustrious predecessors, would have brought the blush to the faces of monkeys.

As to the foreign origin of the tango, it is singular that people incriminate it in this hospitable Paris of ours, where have flourished side by side the English contredanse, the German waltz, the Polish mazurka, the Hungarian polka, the Lithuanian schottish, the Tzsch redowa, and the American boston.

THE TENTATIVE SCHEME OF COMPLETION

Prepared by authority of the Trustees and executed under the direction of the Consulting Architect. Ralph Adams Cram succeeded C. Grant La Farge as Consulting Architect of the Cathedral in June, 1911. Mr. La Farge and his partner, the late George L. Heins, drew the original plans for the Cathedral more than 20 years ago, and at the time of the severance of Mr. La Farge's relation with the work the Cathedral was not more than one-third compleed. Mr. La Farge was abroad when the announcement was made, and was said to have had no inkling of the change.

Gustavus L. Lawrence Increases Holdings in Dyckman Section by Corner Purchase.

BUYERS FOR TENEMENTS

Builders Buy Site for New Moving Picture House in East Harlem —Suburban Sales.

An important transaction in the Dyckman section, which is one of the few sections of the city that have shown active buying and selling throughout the Summer and Fall months, was announced yesterday by Warren F. Johnston, who sold to Gustavus L. Lawrence the northeast corner of 207th Street and Vermilyea Avenue.

The plot, which was sold by the Alliance Realty Company, is 100 feet square. Mr. Lawrence, who is a large holder of realty in the section, has improved the south side of 207th Street, between Sherman and Vermilyea Avenues, with taxpayers, containing fifteen stores, which are now fully rented.

Through the taxpayer there will be an entrance to the vaudeville theatre which Mr. Lawrence is completing, on plot 150 by 150, on the west side of Sherman Avenue, 100 feet south of 207th Street. The theatre will be known as the Dyckman, and is expected to be opened in about a month's time.

Theatre for Manhattan Avenue.

A site for a new theatre on the southwest corner of 109th Street and Manhattan Avenue has been purchased by the Manhattan Theatre Corporation from the Bernheimer estate. The plot has a frontage of 75 feet on the avenue and 100 feet on the street. S. Wechsler negotiated the transaction.

Telephone Company Buys Plot.

The New York Telephone Company has purchased, through Sigmund Wechsler, attorney for the estates of Isaac and Simon Bernheimer, a plot on the northwest corner of 108th Street and Manhattan Avenue, 100 by 100 feet. Ground will be broken at once for a new telephone service station.

Buyers for Tenements.

James Auerbach has sold for the Lawyers Mortgage Company, 68 East 119th Street, a five-story tenement on lot 20 by 100.11, between Madison and Park Avenues.

David R. Beach has sold for Maria Josefa Zcyas y Gobel 2,216 Fifth Avenue, a five-story flat with stores, on lot 25 by 90, adjoining the southwest corner of 135th Street.

Harlem Theatre Site.

Benjamin Marks and Isaac Silverman have purchased from the Mutual Alliance Trust Company a plot 60 by 100 on the east side of Second Avenue, 40 feet north of 123d Street.

The buyers will improve the site with a moving-picture theatre, for which a building loan of $27,500 has been furnished by the selling company.

Westchester County.

During the past week the American Real Estate Company has sold at Park Hill a plot on Edgecliff Terrace to Lewis Russell, of Hammacher, Schlemmer & Co., and he immediately had plans drawn for the construction of a house.

A plot on Hillcrest Avenue was sold to Mrs. F S. Ingram of Troy, N. Y., who has had plans drawn for an attractive Spanish mission house.

New Rochelle.

O'Connor & McCann report the following rentals: For Grace B. Traugott 180 Centre Avenue, for Catherine Pene 5 Orchard Place, Rochelle Park; for Margaret C. Flynn 192 Sickles Avenue, for W. B. Gray 175 Sickles Avenue, for John Delerlein 13 Spring Street, for Thomas Smith an apartment at 177 Winyah Avenue, for Robert J. Cooper, Jr., an apartment at 180 North Avenue, and for William Bloomfield his former residence, 100 Chauncey Avenue.

Long Island.

W. L. Slandorff has sold at Westbury to A. Blum a plot 140 by 100 on Grand Street, to B. McMahon a plot 100 by 100 on Grand Street, and to W. V. Moller a plot 40 by 100 on Castle Avenue, who will erect a $4,500 dwelling.

Ernst & Cahn have sold the Pierpont Hotel at Sea Cliff, a four-story frame building on a lot 120 by 90, running from Prospect Avenue to Seventh Avenue, to Joshua M. Powell, who gave in part payment three one-family houses in Brooklyn, known as 8,631, 8,633 and 8,635 Sixteenth Avenue.

New Jersey.

Louis N. Nicholson has sold at Lyndhurst to Alexander G. Foley a two-family house on Stuyvesant Avenue; plot, 50 by 150 feet; price, $6,500. To J. Lanzer a five-room bungalow on Forest Avenue; plot, 36.6 by 100 feet; price, $2,000. To L. M. Mathiesen, a six-room bungalow on Delafield Avenue, on a plot 33.4 by 110 feet; price, $3,500; and to Anton Leffler a plot on Lyndhurst Avenue, 50 by 150 feet, for $700.

Sale in Newark.

Louis Schlesinger has sold the vacant plot at 669 and 671 Belmont Avenue, Newark, for Louis Echikson to Stephen S. Swatland. The new owner intends to erect a two-family frame dwelling.

Commercial Leases.

The Cross & Brown Company has leased for G. Bavard MacBride to Paul La Croix the store at 3 East Fifty-second Street, and, in conjunction with J. C. Einstein, the sixth floor at 38 to 42 East Thirty-second Street to S. Schwartz & Co.

J. Arthur Fischer has leased the store and basement in the building at 105 West Thirty-eighth Street to A. Gilbear for a restaurant, and the three upper floors to Mrs. Murphee for dwelling purposes.

Tucker, Speyers & Co. have leased, in conjunction with S. M. Bondy, the westerly parlor store at 66 West Thirty-eighth Street to Frances E. Reiffert.

Tucker, Speyer & Co. have leased, in conjunction with S. M. Bondy, the eleventh floor at 28 and 30 West Thirty-eighth Street to Maurice Cohen, and, in conjunction with Norman Denzer, the second loft at 39 and 41 West Thirty-eighth Street to Hahn & Benjamin, and, with the Julius Friend, Edward M. Lewis Company, the fifth loft in the same building to L. & L. Bandeau Company.

GREAT INDUSTRIAL FUTURE FOR STATEN ISLAND— SHIPPING TERMINAL PLANS ALONG THE WEST SHORE

NEW DWELLING AT FORT WADSWORTH

One important result of the early completion of the Barge Canal and the Panama Canal, with the attendant increase in shipping and commercial interests, is the object lesson becoming clearer every day toward improving the facilities for docking and freight handling in New York Harbor. That the port of New York needs many improvements to equip it properly for the great demands to be made upon it in international commerce is recognized by all leaders in the financial and industrial world.

Many projects for improvement are being advanced from time to time, and some of them have already attained definite form. The enormous work of the New York & New Haven Railroad in its connecting system through the Bronx, entering Queens across the immense bridge at Astoria, is one of the most important movements toward providing increased shipping facilities for the city's industrial growth. In addition there are the great dock improvements in South Brooklyn, the erection of long piers there, and the extension of the pier facilities in Manhattan. The rapid industrial development of Queens, the increasing tendency on the part of manufacturing concerns to look to the Jersey shore for large sites, and the projected improvement of the Newark meadows are all evidences of a remarkable awakening in the industrial future of New York.

With adequate transit facilities it will not be long before every mile of available water front anywhere near the city will be utilized by big commercial interests.

In this period of a revivified activity in great industrial projects, it is interesting to note that the great future of Staten Island in this respect is attracting serious attention. The tour of inspection on behalf of the Industrial Committee of the Merchants' Association through Staten Island a week ago seems destined, in conjunction with other affiliated interests, to inaugurate a new era of great prosperity for Richmond County.

It is nothing new, this project of great railroad and shipping terminals on Staten Island with extensive factory plants. It was seen years ago by the late Erastus Wiman, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, with its terminal facilities and bridges across the Kill von Kull, has laid the foundation for additional progress. It is on the western shore, along the Kill von Kull, to which the efforts of the Merchants' Association were primarily devoted in the recent inspection, and those who are most deeply concerned in these projects are sufficiently optimistic to believe that either the Baltimore & Ohio or other interests will before long build a connecting road bordering the Kill von Kull or Staten Island Sound.

Their territory contains over ten miles of partially undeveloped land for industrial uses, and with quick communication with the railroads on the Jersey shore the availability of this choice section of Staten Island will be immensely enhanced. With these advantages is also included quick freight communication with the main shore by means of the tunnel planned to connect Staten Island from South Brooklyn, a plan which, although somewhat in the future, is by no means visionary.

The railroad shipping facilities have many advantages, as they are connected by a railroad drawbridge over Staten Island Sound, with direct rail connections with the New Jersey trunk lines over which routes and tariffs are maintained to all parts of the country. There is also a car float service from St. George terminal to the railroad float bridges on the New York and New Jersey shores. The present lines could be augmented and expanded to meet the increased demands and without involving the danger and delay of water traffic. The present inconveniences to water movements due to ice, fog, and storms are great, and will not decrease, and the added inconveniences due to the increasing water traffic of the harbor will be great.

A branch from the present railroad near Arlington running along the west shore of Staten Island, and connecting at the lower end near Tottenville, would make immediately available the entire Staten Island shore along Staten Island Sound, and such a line would have the advantage of establishing rates and routes. This would make immediately available several thousand acres of land suitable for all kinds of heavy manufacture requiring rail and water transportation. If such a line in connection with the present Staten Island lines of the Baltimore & Ohio system cannot be built, an independent railroad along the west shore, with car-float interchange with the trunk lines, should be the next consideration. The facility with which tunnels are now thus also suggests the practicability of such an outlet for this territory either to the Perth Amboy or Elizabethport territories.

Staten Island is already an important factor in manufacturing. Among the commodities manufactured there and widely distributed throughout the country and for export are terra cotta, copper and brass, dental goods, paint colors, varnish, fireworks, hardwood veneers, soap and soap powder, linoleum, machinery of various kinds, wall plaster, and there are also plants for finishing paper and fabricating steel.

That the manufacturing conditions of New York Harbor will be greatly changed by the completion of the Barge Canal and Panama Canal is best attested by a recent statement of an expert in the iron and steel industry to the effect that this will become the most logical and advantageous point for the manufacturing of pig iron. To secure the best results, a mixture of the various ores is necessary and it will be possible to assemble the ores from the Lake Superior and Adirondack Mountain deposits, as well as from the deposits of Cuba and the west coast of South America, at less cost in New York Harbor than any other point.

This fact, together with the recent development of the bi-product coke oven, will make New York the most economical place for manufacturing of pig iron in the United States. With the other shores of the harbor developed and utilized almost to their full capacity and prohibitive in prices, such future expansion of industry will naturally seek the west shore of Staten Island.

"On the New Jersey shore of Staten Island Sound," said Cornelius G. Kolff, Secretary of the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce, "where these have proper railroad facilities, land has recently been sold at the rate of $7,000 to $10,000 an acre, whereas on the Staten Island shore, owing to the absence of railroad facilities, land is going begging at $1,000 per acre, or even less.

"To those who have made a study of Staten Island, it is apparent that its future lies not so much in its development for residential purposes, as in its industrial development. Great as the advantages are as a place of residence, these features are excelled by the advantages which the borough offers for an industrial growth, and it is useless to add argument that the industrial development will bring a rapid increase in population, as the man who finds employment on Staten Island of necessity becomes a resident.

"The United States Government, which has been maintaining a channel twenty-one feet at mean low water, with a channel width of 300 feet, is now deepening the Kill von Kull channel to twenty-five feet, and a proportionate width. From present indications, the channel will gradually be deepened to a matter of thirty feet."

Another interesting possibility is the development, which is likely to come in the future, of an immense water and rail terminal on the south shore, near South and Midland Beaches. The changes in the commercial conditions of New York Harbor following the completion of the Barge Canal and the Panama Canal are difficult to predict. The present intensive uses of the Manhattan, Brooklyn, and New Jersey shores will of necessity force new business, which may be expected as the result of the increased shipping to new locations.

Several years ago the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee to consider this question, and Lewis Nixon, as Chairman of the committee, proposed a plan contemplating the assembling at one point of the several classes of shipping making up the commerce of the port. A series of piers and warehouses were to be provided where incoming steamers from all parts of the world could dock and unload their cargoes. At the same point vessels arriving from the Barge Canal could discharge their lading direct to steamers for export or into warehouses.

In December, 1910, the Canal Terminal Commission visited Staten Island and was much impressed with the desirability of this site, and the plan is still under consideration by the State authorities and the commercial organizations of the city.

The American Dock Company's shipping facilities at Tompkinsville, below the St. George ferry, have grown rapidly in the last few years, showing the existing demand and the great future possibilities. In 1912 over 100 transatlantic steamers unloaded their merchandise from all parts of the world at these docks. The pier and bulkhead area there is over 400,000 square feet, and a large new concrete warehouse is nearing completion.

On the residential side of Staten Island's development there has been steady advance. In this respect one of the marked features is the increasing demand for apartments. In the vicinity of St. George, close to the ferry, the demand is said to be greater than the supply, and the high-priced houses, such as the Castleton, Beverly, and Richmond are entirely occupied. The Castleton Realty Company is now constructing a four-story house near the park, and a five-story elevator house is nearing completion on Central Avenue, adjoining the Carnegie Library.

Along the north shore, and in the territory tributary to the industries, there is a great deal of development in the line of two-family houses, and the same holds good in parts of Stapleton, Tompkinsville, and Clifton.

The higher parts of the island, such as Ward Hill, Grymes Hill, Dongan Hills and Richmond Hill, all of which command a magnificent view of the ocean and the surrounding country, are being devoted to the erection of more pretentious dwellings, costing from $10,000 to $50,000, each. These sections, formerly somewhat inaccessible owing to their elevation, have, since the coming of the automobile, become favorite places of residence.

The demand for theatrical growth has been shown in the recent announcement by William Fox, who has constructed several large houses for vaudeville and moving pictures on the upper west side of Manhattan, to erect a large theatre in Stapleton. He has commissioned D. T. Cornell to secure a proper site and several localities are now under consideration.

CITY PLANNING EXHIBITION

To be Opened in the Public Library November 24.

Borough President McAneny, who is Chairman of the Heights of Buildings Committee, has been asked to formally open the City Planning Exhibition, to be given by the City of New York and the Merchants' Association in the public library, Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street, on Monday, Nov. 24.

Mr. McAneny will speak, and, in addition, addresses are expected from Borough Presidents Lewis H. Pounds and Cyrus C. Miller, who are both members of the committee.

On Sunday, Nov. 23, there will be a private view of the exhibition, to which Mayor Kline and other city officials have been invited. Tuesday will be Merchants' Association day. In the afternoon President William A. Marble of the association has been asked to deliver a lecture. On the last day Mayor-elect Mitchel has been asked to be the guest of honor.

New Bronx Courthouse.

By Jan. 1 it is confidently expected that the new Bronx Court House, at Third Avenue and 161st Street, will be finished and ready to house the new county officials who go into office on that day.

MERCHANTS TO DINE.

Annual Dinner of the Broadway Association Nov. 11.

The first annual dinner of the Broadway Association will be held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel McAlpin on Thursday evening, Dec. 11.

There will be no speech-making, and immediately after the dinner a programme will be started with many surprising attractions. Franko will supply the music, and motion pictures of Broadway, from the Battery to Fifty-ninth Street, will be shown for the first time.

Among guests who have been invited are Mayor Kline, Mayor-elect Mitchel, the Public Service Commission, and other officials. The committee in charge of the dinner comprises W. D'H. Washington, Chairman; L. M. Boomer, John David, Marc Klaw, Lee Shubert, Fred Fiegl, A. F. Berry, August Janssen, John Slater, Alf Hayman, G. E. McCune, David Robinson, and Jefferson De Mont Thompson.

THE WEEK'S REALTY RECORD

Conditions Somewhat Improved and the Market More Active.

Realty market conditions improved somewhat last week with thirty recorded sales against thirteen for the previous week and twenty-nine a year ago.

The number of sales south of Fifty-ninth Street was ten, against seven for the previous week and ten a year ago. The sales north of Fifty-ninth Street aggregated twenty, compared with six for the previous week and nineteen a year ago.

From the Bronx seven sales at private contract were reported, against twelve for the previous week and twenty a year ago.

The amount involved in the Manhattan and Bronx auction sales last week was $505,670, compared with $313,825 the previous week, making a total since Jan. 1 of $44,953,770. The figure for the corresponding week last year was $632,500, making the total since Jan. 1, 1912, of $41,038,663.

Brooklyn Board of Brokers.

The annual meeting for the election of Directors of the Brooklyn Board of Real Estate Brokers and for the transaction of such business as may come before the board will be held on Tuesday evening, Nov. 18, at the Clarendon Hotel.

The following brokers are nominated to serve as Directors for three years: Frederick W. Snow, William H. Smith, Sig Cederstrom, Stephen Barrera, and C. C. Mollenhauer.

CENTRAL PARK WEST.

Taxpayers Agree Upon a Plan for Widening Avenue.

After a conference with President Shonts and General Manager Hedley of the Interborough system, on Friday, the Central Park West Taxpayers' Association agreed on a plan for the widening of Central Park West from 59th to 110th Street that will not require the tracks to be moved.

If the improvement recommended by the association to the Board of Estimate is carried out, it will make Central Park West a sixty-foot roadway by cutting twelve feet from the sidewalk on the park side of the thoroughfare. This will give fifteen feet of roadway between the northbound track on that side, and reduce the width of the present sidewalk from twenty-seven feet to fifteen feet.

The railway officials said they did not favor the building of a subway in Central Park West to connect at Fifty-ninth Street with the present Subway and run to 104th Street. They insisted that the operation of a subway through Central Park West would disarrange the Subway system.

Few Tenant Farms.

There are 216,000 farms in New York State averaging a little more than 100 acres each. Of this total, [illegible] are tenant farms.

LOWER VALUES FOR BROADWAY BLOCKS

Gilsey Appraisement Shows Effect of Changed Conditions Below 31st Street.

ASSESSMENTS ARE REDUCED

Wholesale Business and Lofts Are Usurping Old Theatrical and Retail Section.

Some interesting facts regarding the fluctuations in Broadway realty values as a result of changed conditions were revealed in the report just filed by the referee in the appraisal of the estate of the late Lucy Gilsey. The property involved was the old Princess Building on the southwest corner of Broadway and Twenty-ninth Street, with the adjoining building at 30 West Twenty-ninth Street, on which an appraisement for the inheritance tax was made of $1,008,438. The property on the assessment roll for 1914 is valued at $1,041,000, which is about $33,000 above the refcree's appraisement, which was largely determined by the evidence of Henry Brady and William Floyd, who were called as expert real estate witnesses. The Gilsey estate, even with this difference, claimed that it was considerably higher than present market values would warrant.

The Princess Building covers a plot on Broadway of 105.9 feet by 72.5 and irregular, and with the adjoining Twenty-ninth Street building the frontage on the street is increased by 22 feet. The Princess plot stands assessed for 1914, including the structure, at $965,000, a reduction of $30,000 over 1913.

An inspection of the new assessment values for property on both sides of Broadway in the five blocks from Twenty-sixth to Thirty-first Street shows that, with two exceptions, every parcel has declined in value over the assessment for 1913. The two exceptions are the Victoria Hotel, which runs through the block on the south side of Twenty-seventh Street from Broadway to Fifth Avenue. It now stands at $2,050,000, as against $1,890,000 a year ago, and the Gilsey Hotel Building, lately altered into a commercial structure for wholesale business, which remains at the old figure of $1,215,000. This is on the northeast corner of Twenty-ninth Street.

The Breslin Hotel, immediately opposite, on the southeast corner of Twenty-ninth Street, has been reduced by $35,000, now standing at $2,165,000, as against $2,200,000 a year ago. The reason for the Victoria Hotel advance is due to its large Fifth Avenue frontage. A comparison of some of the more important plots, including the corners in these five blocks, will show that the tax Department has made reductions in this locality ranging all the way from 3 to 10 per cent. The changes will be seen from the following table:

N. e. cor., Wallack's	1,250,000	1,190,000

These figures clearly show the effect which the changed conditions of the last two or three years have had upon property in this section. From a popular theatre and retail neighborhood the locality has suffered from the uptown movement. The five prominent theatres famous in these blocks for years were Wallack's, Fifth Avenue, Bijou, Weber's and Daly's. The big attractions once popular in those amusement houses are no longer seen there, and the Fifth Avenue is the only one that remains continuously open, being one of the Keith houses.

It was purchased by the Keith interests in 1906 from the Gilsey estate for $1,800,000, at which time it was assessed at $1,270,000. Last year the assessment was $1,400,000, but it is now gradually returning to its former valuation, being assessed for the forthcoming year at $1,870,000. Foreclosure suits have been instituted against the Bijou, and it is understood that another effort to sell it at foreclosure will soon be made.

Henry Brady, in his testimony in connection with the valuation of the Princess property, stated that the neighborhood was rapidly running into wholesale trade and lofts, a class of business which makes a radical difference from that brought by theatrical and retail patronage. These Broadway blocks are experiencing the same transformation as the blocks around Twenty-third Street and below. Property owners, however, are inclined to be optimistic, and in the adjustment of conditions there will be a general equalization of values which will give greater stability.

The new loft lately completed on the old Hoffman House corner, at Twenty-fifth Street, is well rented, and the big Johnson-Kahn building, on the old Café Martin site, on the block below the Victoria, is well rented with wholesale firms. The alterations in the old Gilsey House have made that a well-paying commercial structure, and the intention of the Johnson-Kahn interests to improve with a tall loft the Victoria site when the lease there expires within a year, indicates the confidence of owners in the future business prospects of the district. The big loft improvements on the north side of Twenty-sixth Street, between Fifth and Madison Avenues, have also been very successful from a renting standpoint.

Ornamental Stations.

Ornamental elevated stations will be constructed at Fort Hamilton Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street and Bay Parkway on the proposed rapid transit line through New Utrecht Avenue, Brooklyn. The Public Service Commission for the First District has sent to the Art Commission designs for these two new stations.

A Reasonable Limitation of Height to be Advocated by the Mayor's Commission.

REPORT IS BEING PREPARED

Summing up the work of the "Heights of Building Commission," which has completed its work and will probably present its report at the next meeting of the Board of Estimate, Edward M. Bassett, Chairman of the Heights of Building Advisory Committee, said yesterday:

A reasonable limitation of the height of buildings ought to be adopted in New York City.

The charter provides that the Board of Aldermen can pass ordinances limiting the height of buildings, subject to the approval of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. The Heights of Building Commission has since May of this year been collecting all of the facts in this and the other great cities of the world, analyzing legislation that applies to this and other cities, and has obtained at first hand the opinions of local experts from nearly all the big cities on the practical results of height limitations.

Owners of high buildings, mortgage investors, architects, builders, engineers, city officials, taxation experts, and owners of land covered by low buildings have all been consulted. Men skilled in fire insurance, fire-lighting and fireproof construction have contributed their assistance. Transportation men and health officers have freely given us their aid. The problem is big and many sided.

Now is not the time for me to speak of remedies. In general, however, it may be said that proper rules of height limitation should protect land values and not hurt them, should seek to preserve for all of the owners in any block rights to air, light, and sun proportionate to their holdings, and tend to stabilize localities for the purposes for which they are built up.

The people of this city are apt to consider that height limitation is a novelty and of doubtful legality. This is not the case. Practically every great city of the world, including those of this country outside of New York City, have for years limited the height of buildings. The courts have almost without exception upheld such limitations. If our city should to-day take steps in this direction, it would be nearly the last city in the world to come into line. Some say that New York is not like any other city and that where space is so limited buildings should be allowed to go to any height.

Is this true? There is ten times more space in lower Manhattan covered with low buildings than is covered with high ones. The theatre, retail shopping, and hotel districts, built up with tall structures, are almost infinitesimal on the map of Manhattan, which is commonly thought of as the congested borough.

Tunnels and bridges under and over the surrounding rivers will soon make New York City a round city, the same as London, Berlin, and Paris, and it cannot claim exemption from rational treatment on the ground that it differs from any other city in the world. This is not to say that its problems are the same as in other cities, or that the remedies can be copied from elsewhere. Each city presents its own peculiar problems, and good sense demands a remedy adapted to its particular needs. Copying is usually a mistake.

Some consider that restricting the height of buildings in New York City is locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen. To some extent this is true in the lower part of Manhattan and here and there along its backbone, but what shall we say of all the other parts of this great city, where high buildings do not prevail and where in some future age there may be a development of which we do not now even dream?

Street capacity in lower Manhattan has much to do with the problem. In fairness to all land owners in the southern end of the city, can the city allow the continuation of the building of skyscrapers? Where would it stop? The streets will hold just so many people in rush hours and no more. Lower Broadway and Nassau Street are now crowded nearly to the limit three times a day.

If a hundred more buildings the size of the Woolworth and New Equitable Buildings should be erected and filled with tenants, the streets would not hold the traffic, to say nothing of the dangers of panic conditions.

When that day came, the city would have to prohibit anything except very low buildings in the district. This would almost amount to confiscation, but what other alternative would there be? Every year makes it more impossible to widen streets. Then, too, come the difficulties of transportation. There is a limit to the number of subways that can be built through this district. If all of the workers capable of being housed in the new Equitable Building should go to the subway at once, it would take twenty minutes for all the trains, express and local, to transport them if devoted exclusively to their service.

What one man can do on his land, his neighbor ought to have a right to do on his. If every block downtown were built up as high as the highest building on it, all owners would suffer. The lower stories would be dark and untinviting. Tenants would seek the top stories or go elsewhere.

Streets would be dark and cheerless. Loss in health, comfort and property would ensue. This condition might never come, even if the city left it free from limitations. Probably the operation of economic laws would prevent it. But even so the result would be that the owners of certain plots of land would prevent the light, air and sunshine of other parcels that were equally entitled to those rights, and the further result would be untold private injury.

Some say that the whole question in lower Manhattan should be left to the working of natural laws. They say with much truth that there is an economic limit of height for buildings, and if owners transcend it they get hurt. It is well known that the cost of construction per cubic foot becomes much higher as additional stories are added, also that more space must be set aside for elevators. A modern office building that does not give quick elevator service is doomed from the start.

To give quick service groups of elevators must run express to a certain height. All of this requires additional space, and an office building that is a mere shell of offices around a great elevator system cannot produce a fair return. It is a popular fallacy that office buildings pay in proportion to their height.

The reverse would be quite as near the truth. But apart from the foregoing considerations, which ought to impose natural limits on heights, how can a community protect itself against the new experimenter who is determined to put up a building higher yet, or who decides to leave a monument in the form of a high building, or who desires to put up a conspicuous advertisement, charging the loss to his advertising account? Corporations have done these things as well as individuals. I blame nobody.

The law allows it. The question is whether the time has not arrived when for the benefit of the community and for the sake of equal treatment to all land owners similarly situated, the city should enforce a measure of protection in a field where private protection is impossible.

RAPID TRANSIT FACILITIES.

Dual System Will Open Up New Sections of the Bronx.

Rapid transit facilities in the Bronx will be more than quadrupled by the completion of the dual system. Practically four entirely new lines of rapid transit railroads will be constructed in that borough. The Lexington Avenue Subway will have two branches—one extending up Jerome Avenue to Woodlawn Road and the other up Southern Boulevard and Westchester Avenue to Pelham Bay Park. In addition there will be the White Plains Road line, which will be an extension of the Bronx Park branch of the existing subway, and will run clear to 241st Street, near the city line.

Connecting with this line will be the Webster Avenue extension of the Third Avenue elevated. A connection will be made between the Third Avenue elevated and the existing subway at 149th Street; also between the existing subway and the Jerome Avenue branch at 149th Street. Another connection will be made between the Ninth Avenue elevated line from its present terminus at 155th Street and Eighth Avenue with the Jerome Avenue line at 162d Street. This will make possible the joint use of these new lines by trains from subway and elevated lines.

Through express service on both subway and elevated lines from the northern termini of the new roads will be possible. Residents of all parts of the Bronx will be given their choice of lines downtown, so that they will be able to go either by subway or elevated trains down the east side or down the west side of Manhattan.

To Fill Swamp Land.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Estimate Borough President Miller introduced a resolution providing the filling in of a number of sunken lots in Kingsbridge, in which water had accumulated and become stagnant. The Northwestern Bronx Property Owners and a number of residents in the section protested against the presence of disease breeding areas in close proximity to the homes and enlisted the support of Mr. Miller. Vigorous opposition came from one of the non-resident real estate owners, who objected to the entire proceeding, but the Board of Estimate adopted the resolution and the swampy land will be drained.

PLAN TO ORGANIZE REALTY INTERESTS

MANY BIG INTERESTS

An Equalization of Tax Values One of the Principal Objects of the Proposed Organization.

For the purpose of organizing the real estate interests of the Borough of Manhattan in an effort to secure an equalization of tax values, a number of brokers and operators met last week in the office of Elias A. Cohen. Explaining the object of the proposed organization, Mr. Cohen said: "It is our purpose to bring together investors, brokers, owners, builders, and real estate men in general in one large movement to fairly and adequately represent the enormous interests which are the chief taxpayers of the city. Many of the real estate problems resulting from the money panic of 1907 have arisen, thus showing the need of thoroughly and scientifically organizing the real estate business of the city. Every other business is so organized with the exception of this one.

"Real estate has been neglected from an investment standpoint during the last few years, not because there has been a dearth of opportunities, but because the prospective investor, both small and large, has been frightened away by unequal assessed valuations and the ever increasing tax burden. Despite all this, it can be shown by figures and records that not even one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the actual investments have ever been lost by mortgage lenders in this city.

"The time has come to show the superiority of real estate as an investment. It is evident that property was never better rented than it is to-day. The new buildings are filled up as rapidly as they are erected, and it is desired to bring home to the investing public that this city is growing commercially and in population by leaps and bounds far beyond the idea of the general public.

"The school population of over 800,000 will in seven or eight years be earning a living for itself, and that their places will be taken up by another army of 800,000 and in twenty years the population of New York will be not less than 10,000,000."

Robert E. Simon of the Henry Morgenthau Company, said: "I believe thoroughly in the idea of the organization of all the various realty interests of the city, covering Manhattan, Bronx, Queens, Brooklyn, and Richmond. That a board of delegates be elected in each borough to whom the administration could look for guidance as to the attitude of property owners, and I heartily favor the resolution presented by William Prager, that the Allied Real Estate Interests, the Board of Brokers, the United Property Owners' Association and the City Economy League, if it decides to perpetuate itself, be merged in one large body, and that we set ourselves to work out scientifically various problems connected with our business."

Aaron Rabinowitz of Spear & Co. stated that there were not 2 per cent. of vacancies out of 700 tenants in the district he represents, but that more reforms were needed in the factory laws, which in some cases were proving too onerous a burden on owners, and that their interests would best be conserved by a large organization.

A committee was appointed to confer with the Allied Real Estate Interests, the City Economy League, the Board of Brokers, and the United Property Owners' Association, toward a merger of these organizations. The committee to report within two weeks, when the Committee of One Hundred will be called together again by the Chairman.

Realty Board Elects Members.

George A. Fleury, President of the United States Title Guaranty Company of Brooklyn, has been made an honorary member of the Real Estate Board of New York. Vincent C. Pepe and John M. Thompson have been made active members and the following were made associate members: Richard Billings, George C. Boldt, William F. Clare, Lewis Coon, Fred. Dietz, James Elgar, Charles Gulden, Samuel A. Herzog, Nathan Hirsch, Stuard Hirschman, A. Fllmore Hyde, John H. Ives, Samuel E. Jacobs, John J. Kennedy, Klein & Jackson, A. L. Libman, George W. Loft, Lowenfeld & Prager, Cornelius W. Luyster, Jr., Newell Martin, Michael J. McCauley, Max L. Meyer, William Oppenheim, Ottinger Bros., John Palmer, Walter M. Pegram, Franklin Pettit, Podgur Realty Company, Alfred G. Reeves, M. V. Richards, John Robertson, Edward C. Sheehy, W. P. Silleck, William C. Strange, Morris Weinstein and Moses J. Wolf.

FARM MORTGAGE LOANS.

Committee of U. S. League of Building and Loan Associations at Washington.

A Committee on Farm Mortgage Loans of the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations, headed by Edwin F. Howell of this city, was in Washington last week, and appeared before a Committee of the United States Department of Agriculture, which has in charge proposed measures to devise easy ways for farmers obtaining mortgage loans to be redeemed on the amortization plan.

The committee pointed out that no new machinery is necessary, except perhaps slight amendment to some of the State laws, as the co-operative building and loan associations are now well organized for the very purpose that the Department of Agriculture has in view.

The committee stated that if these associations were reinforced by the moral assistance that the Department of Agriculture and the United States Government generally intends to give to this propaganda they could throw into the work 6,300 associations, with over two and one-half million members and assets of over one billion one hundred thousand dollars, organized in every State of the Union with the single exception of Vermont, and that these associations are in essence organizations of the debtors, and by including the farmers within their present organizations would secure for them money at the very lowest possible rates of interest.

TO WIDEN RIVERDALE AV.

Public Hearing on the Proposed Improvement Nov. 20.

A hearing will be given Nov. 20 by the Board of Estimate on the subject of the proposed area of assessment in the matter of acquiring title to the lands required for the widening of Riverdale Avenue, from West 235th Street to West 236th Street, Borough of the Bronx.

A hearing was given on June 27, 1912, concerning a proposed proceeding for acquiring this street from West 231st Street to Spuyten Duyvil Parkway. The matter was repeatedly laid over and on June 19, 1913, consideration was indefinitely deferred.

The Borough President now advises that in carrying out a grading improvement affecting West 235th Street, which meets Riverdale Avenue at a point where both a high level and a low level street has been proposed, an approach was constructed on private property within the area needed for the widening of Riverdale Avenue, between West 235th Street and West 236th Street.

The property owners have filed a claim for damages, and to permit of the improvement of the street along legal lines, it is now desired that title to this block be acquired by the city. The street has been given a width of 100 feet, and between the limits named has a length of a little over 300 feet. Title for a width of about 66 feet on the easterly side has already been legally acquired. There are no encroachments.

Favorable action has been recommended by Chief Engineer Nelson P. Lewis, and a district of assessment suggested. All of the cost is to be assessed upon the property benefited.

TO BOOST 46TH STREET.

Merchants Combine in an Effort to Help Trade.

The merchants of Forty-sixth Street, from Madison to Sixth Avenue, have combined in a boost movement. Their association, which was formed last week, is called the Forty-sixth Street Progressive Association, and numbers about seventy-five members.

Philippe Ortiz was elected President, E. M. Youmans is Vice President. Mr. Youmans, discussing the association's plans, said:

"Forty-sixth Street has been compared to London's Bond Street, and its great development necessitated the formation of an organization to not only advertise the street but secure improvements.

"We are going to get better lighting, have more attention paid to the cleaning of the street, wipe out advertising signs that are offensive, both from the angles of art and good taste, and we will get together on a plan to have the street decorated.

"We also want to have heavy and undesirable traffic turned into other streets, and generally follow out the campaign waged so successfully by the Fifth Avenue Association."

The next meeting of the association will be held on Nov. 24, when a Board of Directors will be chosen and plans for a wide publicity campaign discussed. Meetings will be held frequently.

BUILDING STATISTICS.

Plans Filed in the Five Boroughs for First Nine Months of 1913.

To Sell Wendland Estate.

On Wednesday next, Bryan L. Kennelly will offer at the Exchange Salesroom, 14-16 Vesey Street, at Trustees' Sale for the Wendland Estate, 150 East Eightieth Street, near Lexington Avenue, the three-story apartment building with garage in basement and three story brick building in rear, and 2,070 Madison Avenue, between 130th and 131st Streets, the three-story brown stone dwelling. Also on the same day the apartment house known as "The Philbert," 78 West Ninety-fourth Street, near Columbus Avenue, the five-story brick building on plot 50 by 72.8½ feet.

BUSINESS LEASING CONTINUES ACTIVE

MIDTOWN LOFT DEMAND

Owing to the growth of the hardware and printing trades in the district just north of the Criminal Courts and the proposed civic centre, the postal authorities have found it essential to establish a station there.

For this purpose the Postmaster General has leased through the Charles F. Noyes Company the store and a section of the first loft in the new Bradstreet Building, at the northwest corner of Lafayette and Howard Streets. The lease is for a period of ten years, and involves rental aggregating about $150,000.

The Bradstreet Building has twelve stories, covering an area 89 by 114 feet, and although but recently completed is largely occupied by publishers, a lease to the Frank Shepard Company having been announced last week by the same brokers.

Among other important leases of the week were the following:

M. & L. Hess leased for a long term the estate of Benedick Fisher, the store and basement at 30 and 32 East Twenty-first Street to Otto Jaeger & Son, dealers in silks, cotton plushes, and velours and selling agents for the Peerless Plush Manufacturing Company of Paterson, N. J. The tenant for thirteen years has been located at 140 Fifth Avenue.

George B. Corsa has leased for a term of nine years and four months the westerly inside store on Fulton Street, in the building now under construction at the southeast corner of Fulton and Church Streets, to Walter Markoff, who will occupy it as a jewelry and optical goods store.

Spear & Co. have leased 17,500 feet of space in 310 to 316 Second Avenue to City Button Works; also leased to Raden Brothers a store in 37 to 43 West Twenty-sixth Street and lofts in 688 Broadway to the Biltmore Shirt and the Golde Hat Companies.

The Cross & Brown Company has leased to L. Sheinberg and J. Callowitz the twelfth floor at 22 and 24 West Thirty-eighth Street, and to the Canadian Pacific Railway space in the northeast corner of Broadway and Thirtieth Street.

NEW HOME DEVELOPMENT.

Tract of Three Hundred Acres Near Summit Bought for Fine Homes.

A tract of 300 acres on the Lackawanna Railroad, overlooking Summit, N. J., has just been acquired by a syndicate for high-class residential development. The property has a frontage of over a mile on the Passaic River, which runs through the territory. The estate has been in possession of one family for thirty years and is well adapted to a residential park, and the scenic effects have been used to good advantage by W. J. Kaufman, the landscape artist and engineer.

The land is dissimilar from others of the Watchung Hills in that instead of being stony, it is very fertile. It has been used for years for raising horses and other livestock.

The President of the controlling syndicate is George R. Peare, who has been identified with other residential enterprises. The Vice Presidents are Chester G. Burden and Fred T. Frelinghuysen. Charles A. Wulff is Treasurer and A. Walpole Craigie, Secretary. On the Board of Directors are A. J. Drexel, Jr., Charles Lanier, Jr., Philip Carpenter, and Joseph W. Burden. The tract will be known as Long View.

A fifty-thousand-dollar clubhouse is already established on the estate and facilities for outdoor sports are a prominent feature of the company's plans. Public tennis courts are to be laid out. The river affords exceptional opportunities for boating, bathing, canoeing, and fishing. Punting, so popular upon English rivers, will be introduced.

PROPERTIES AT AUCTION.

Manhattan and Brooklyn Residences in Joseph P. Day's List.

New York and Brooklyn properties will figure in Joseph P. Day's auction offerings in the Vesey Street salesroom on Nov. 29. For the estate of Elizabeth Lapaix will be sold a one-story business building at 25 West Thirtieth Street, between Broadway and Fifth Avenue; for the estate of Karoline Frey will be sold the five-story tenement at 127 West Ninety-eighth Street, and the estate of Hannah Asiel will offer 140 East Eightieth Street, adjoining the southwest corner of Lexington Avenue, a three-story dwelling. Other Manhattan properties include 70 and 72 East 112th Street, adjoining the southwest corner of Park Avenue, two five-story tenements, and the four-story building on the northwest corner of Second Avenue and Twenty-second Street.

In Brooklyn the offerings include the five-story dwelling at 94 Prospect Park West, southwest corner of Fifth Street, containing 18 rooms; the southwest corner of Bedford Avenue and South Third Street, a six-story tenement, and the vacant plot on the southwest corner of Bergen Street and Grand Avenue.

Improved Water Supply.

The acquisition of improved water supply facilities by the City of Yonkers, the cost of which will aggregate $8,000,000, has been approved by the State Conservation Commission at Albany.

The approval embraces nearly all the improvements of the water supply system involved in the report of the joint Water Supply Committee appointed by the city to act with the Aldermanic Committee in 1911, which recommended extensive improvements in the acquisition of water for the city.

New Flats for Flatbush.

Wood, Harmon & Co. have recently sold in the Marlboro section of Flatbush a block of seven lots at the corner of Twenty-second Avenue and Sixty-fifth Street to the Embee Realty Company. The buyers will improve the property with a row of seven buildings, stores, and flats at a cost of $75,000.

MANAGERS ORGANIZE.

Many Big Structures Represented by Officers and Committees.

The Building Managers Association, which held its initial meeting several weeks ago, has formed a permanent organization with the following officers: President, B. E. Martin, Havemeyer Estate; Vice President, F. S. Bancroft, Pease & Elliman; Secretary, W. H. Glass, George R. Read & Co., and Treasurer, G. B. Best, William Cruikshank's Sons. These, with the following, comprise the Executive Committee:

C. T. Cooley, Equitable Building; P. M. Maresi, Maresi Estate; T. B. Artaud, Hudson Terminal Building; John C. Knight, Metropolitan Life Building; A. J. Bleecker, Singer Building; C. H. Burdett, New York Title Insurance Company; C. A. Leasenfeld, United States Realty and Improvement Company; Corwin Black, United States Express Realty Company; A. C. Bang, E. S. Willard & Co.; William M. Shackford, Daniel Birdsall & Co., W. H. Wheelock, Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown & Co.; W. R. Hooper, Wall Street Exchange Building; William Lett, Moffat Estate, and A. O. Wallis, Western Union Building.

Outside of the technical details that would necessarily come within the scope of an association of this kind, the new organization has formed a Tenants' Committee, whose duty it is to keep a record of all tenants reported undesirable, and to furnish the association with a list of such tenants and such information as shall be obtainable. The purpose of this plainly is to make it difficult for firms of no financial responsibility or of questionable character to get into buildings controlled by the association.

NEW THEATRES.

Three Being Built On One Upper West Side Block.

Uptown theatres are proving such a satisfactory investment they are being erected in pairs, and in one case there are three on a block. Two large buildings, one containing a first-class playhouse, are being completed on the southwest corner of Broadway and Ninety-seventh Street.

Already there is a vaudeville house on the Ninety-sixth Street corner of the same block. Recent announcements are to the effect that the Goelet estate will build a two-story picture theatre or "gallery," with stores, at the southwest corner of Broadway and Ninetieth Street, and that Klein & Jackson will build one at the southwest corner of Broadway and Eighty-ninth Street.

James C. McGuire is building one at the northwest corner of 103d Street, and two more are under construction on Bloomingdale Square. Standing room only is the nightly announcement at most uptown amusement places.

Fourteenth Street Lease.

An important Fourteenth Street lease has been made by the Durose Company, including a large portion of the former Rothenberg store to the Hospital Supply Company, manufacturers of operating tables, which will combine their Brooklyn factory and Manhattan offices in the new location. The lease was made for the Fourteenth Street Store-Rothenberg & Co., and includes 50,000 square feet on the fifth floor at 32 to 42 West Fourteenth Street and 33 to 39 West Thirteenth Street, and the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth floors at 41 and 43 West Thirteenth Street.

Park & Tilford's New Warehouse.

One of the largest structures recently built in the midtown loft zone is the new six-story Park & Tilford warehouse at 529 to 549 West Forty-second Street, and running through the block to 532 to 542 West Forty-third Street, which will be formally opened to-morrow.

The huge structure covers eleven city lots, containing about 27,500 square feet. The fronts on both streets are appropriately designed to indicate the character of the business carried on in the structure, and are built of pressed brick trimmed with white granite.

New Park Avenue Apartment.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new twelve-story apartment house being erected at the southwest corner of Park Avenue and Seventy-seventh Street by the Park Avenue Corporation, of which George F. Johnson, Jr., is President.

This building will occupy a site 153 by 102.2, which was accumulated last Spring. The building will be ready for occupancy next August. Pease & Elliman have been appointed renting agents.

Ferry and Bridge Traffic.

The vehicular traffic on the North River ferries is estimated at 20,000 vehicles a day, and upon the East River bridges at 19,000 vehicles a day, as follows: Brooklyn Bridge, 3,191 trucks, of which 232 were motor trucks, or 7 per cent.; Manhattan Bridge, 3,816 trucks, of which 916 were motor trucks, or 24 per cent.; Williamsburgh Bridge, 4,524 trucks, of which 660 were motor trucks, or 15 per cent.; Queensborough Bridge, 1,818 trucks, of which 774 were motor trucks, or 43 per cent.

47th Street Business Lease.

William Sittenham has secured a long-term lease on the five-story altered building at 68 West Forty-seventh Street from Fanny C. and May V. Peyser. Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company, and William C. Walker's Sons were the brokers in the transaction.

Pease & Elliman have rented for Frederick Zittel & Sons, as agents, the four-story dwelling at 163 West Seventy-third Street to Mrs. Samuel Hasbrouck.

Bedford Estate Sale.

Next Wednesday at the Exchange Salesroom, Joseph P. Day will sell at public auction, by order of the Supreme Court, made in the "Wright Trust Suit" to close the estate of Frederick Bedford, two large strips of land located opposite the Convent of the Sacred Heart, between Northern Avenue and Riverside Drive (Boulevard Lafayette) and 100th and 102d Streets. The plots contain approximately 8,182 and 17,280 square feet respectively, and have extensive frontages on the Park.

New Leslie-Judge Offices.

The Leslie-Judge Company has leased the fourth floor of the Brunswick Building, 225 Fifth Avenue, for its executive offices, for a term of years. The company formerly occupied a large part of the eleventh and twelfth floors of the building. The new quarters comprise about 15,000 square feet, nearly double its former floor space.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

For the Man Who Wants a REAL Real Estate Bargain.

The place to buy real estate bargains is in the auction salesroom.

The owners who will sell their flats, apartment houses and dwellings on my next

Special Sales Day Tuesday, Nov. 25

at 12 o'clock noon, at Exchange Salesroom, 14 Vesey St., New York City, KNOW that they will bring a low price in the present market.

But they know, too, that the auction room is the quickest way to sell real estate.

When an estate must be closed a suit must be settled—a piece of property MUST be sold—the owners cannot afford to quibble and waste time in an attempt to get a better price.

That is where YOUR opportunity comes in.

Write for the booklet I am preparing, giving all the facts and figures of properties to be sold on this date.

Joseph P. Day, Auct'n'r, 31 Nassau St., N.Y.C.

FOR SALE OR LEASE

Douglas Manor Inn

An unusual property, consisting of a large Colonial dwelling, (with every modern convenience,) set in spacious grounds (three acres) surrounded by historic trees, in the center of an exclusive North Shore residential section, commanding a view of Long Island Sound rarely surpassed. The house, with its broad veranda, high ceilings, antique fireplaces, solid mahogany doors, and true Colonial stairway, is of a type impossible to duplicate in the conventional suburban villa.

As an Inn for a discerning patronage, the property has an established reputation and clientele.

As a residence its architectural dignity and aristocratic surroundings give it exceptional character and possibilities.

The property will be sold or leased on extremely favorable terms and at a price below the value of the land alone.

The Country Estate of a Multi-Millionaire
Up to a few years ago Gedney Farm was the country estate—and the pet hobby—of one of New York's Multi-Millionaires. Hundreds of thousands of dollars—literally—were spent by him in beautifying, preserving and idealizing the 300 acres of which Gedney Farm is comprised. The result must at once be apparent, in all its natural and man-made beauties is now offered to the discriminating public in plots of varying size for the building of all-the-year around homes. We would like to send you illustrated literature describing Gedney Farm.

Gedney Farm

"CHEAP HOUSES"
The people who have taken houses at COVERT PARK say they are cheap. They refer to VALUES, and not to construction.
You can get more for your money at COVERT PARK than in any other suburb of New York. A community has been established just outside the city where the cost of living is low.
To enlarge the community a few more "cheap" houses will be sold to desirable parties. You can buy a house under construction, on large plot, or have your house specially planned without extra expense. CONSTRUCTION GUARANTEED. PRICES LOW. TERMS EASY. F. W. Meyesenburg, 200 5th Ave.

Exclusive Apartments

At Low Rentals

116 East 58th St., just east of Park Avenue, a new building which is one of the best finished and best planned houses in the City. House-keeping apartments of 7, 8 and 9 rooms and 3 baths; living room 16x22, with open fires. Southerly apartments have wonderful amount of sunlight; bathrooms and kitchens are tiled to the ceiling. Rents from $2,000 up. Also 3-room apartment at $1,000. These are the cheapest apartments of their size in the City.

11 East 68th St., northwest corner of Madison Avenue. In the Fifth Avenue block and within a few doors of the famous Whitney house, the finest location in the City. Overlooks Central Park. This apartment house, just completed, has very large rooms, ample closet space and exceptional servants' quarters. Apartments from 6 to 13 rooms and from 2 to 4 baths. Rents from $2,000 up. Especially designed for discriminating tenants.

27 East 62nd St., just off Madison Avenue, new fireproof apartments of from 4 to 6 rooms and bath, especially designed for tenants who wish excellent accommodations in New York while keeping their country places open. Rents are exceedingly moderate for a building so well designed and so advantageously located.

130 West 57th St., near Carnegie Music Hall and the 58th Street Elevated Station. Remarkably sunny apartments of 2 and 3 rooms and bath with vacuum cleaning and hotel service in one of the finest co-operative buildings in the City. Also restaurant with home cooking in the building. Especially desirable for single men or women. Also large studio with north light.

145 East 35th St., situated in the attractive Murray Hill section, in a most accessible neighborhood to the theatres and new business districts, with large rooms especially well planned. Single floor and duplex apartments of 7 large rooms with 1 and 2 baths; rents from $1,500 up.

829 Park Ave., southeast corner of 76th Street, thoroughly modern fireproof apartment of the best type, containing duplex and simplex apartments of 7 and 8 rooms and 2 and 3 baths. Rents from $1,700 up. Every room is an outside room and there are no such apartments on Park Avenue at the price.

In view of the lateness of the season special prices will be made on the remaining vacant apartments until next October. This is a wonderful opportunity which many people who had expected to remain out of town this winter should look into at once.

NOTE TO OWNERS.—If you are not satisfied with the present management or rental of your real estate holdings we will be delighted to look into the matter and advise you what had best be done. We are experts in this business.

OUR EXPORTS RISE TO LATIN AMERICA

Reach $335,000,000 This Year, a Growth of $212,000,000 Since 1903, or 183%.

TREND OF OUR TRADE THERE

More So Than Elsewhere—Increase Due to Greater Consuming Power of Southern Republics.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—A tremendous increase in the export trade of the United States to Latin America is announced by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. In the calendar year 1913 these exports will approximate $335,000,000, against $123,000,000 in 1903 and $87,000,000 in 1893. The increase in the decade just ended was $212,000,000, while in the decade from 1893 to 1903 the growth was $36,000,000. In the term "Latin America" are included all of South America, except British, French, and Dutch Guiana; the Central American Republics, Mexico, Cuba, Haiti, Santo Domingo, and the French West Indies.

That the trend in the export trade of the United States has been, in recent years, distinctly toward American countries, is illustrated by the fact that our exports to Latin-America increased 183 per cent. in the past decade, while our exports to all other parts of the world increased only 64 per cent. To Argentina the exports in 1913 were, in round terms, $55,000,000, against $11,500,000 in 1903; to Brazil, $42,500,000, against $11,000,000 in 1903; to Chile, $16,000,000, against $4,000,000 in 1903; to Mexico, $54,500,000, against $12,000,000 in 1903; and to Cuba, $70,500,000, against $21,750,000 in 1903, the figures in each case relating to fiscal years.

This growth of 183 per cent. in United States exports to Latin America is apparently, however, a result of the increased consuming power of those countries rather than an increase in the share which the United States supplies of their imports, says the bureau. Figures just completed by the bureau, taken from the official reports of the countries in question, show that the share which the United States is supplying of the imports into the Latin American countries was, in 1911, no larger than a decade ago. According to the latest official publications of the various countries in this group, mainly for 1911, only 22 per cent. of their imports were drawn from the United States; for 1903, 21 per cent; for 1895, 24 per cent, and for 1886, 23 per cent.

The total imports of the Latin-American countries in 1911 were $1,165,000,000, against $927,000,000 in 1903, $725,000,000 in 1895, and $452,000,000 in 1886.

Of the $1,180,000,000 imports in 1911, those of Argentina were $354,000,000, Brazil $257,000,000, Chili $127,000,000, Mexico $91,000,000, Uruguay $47,000,000, and Central America, as a whole, $35,000,000.

The annual imports of the entire Pacific frontage of Latin America, so far as ascertainable from the latest official figures, are about $520,000,000 in value, or approximately 20 per cent. of the total imports into the group designated as Latin America, distributed as follows: Chili, $127,000,000; Peru, $31,000,000; Bolivia, $23,000,000; Ecuador, $8,000,000, and Pacific ports of Colombia, Central America, and Mexico, approximately $330,000,000.

Of the total per cent. of the imports of Latin America drawn from countries other than the United States a very large proportion is from Europe—the United Kingdom ranking first, Germany second, and France third.

FOREIGN TRADE OPPORTUNITIES

The Daily Consular and Trade Report notes the following foreign trade opportunities. Further information regarding them may be obtained by addressing the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, care of the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C. New York merchants may obtain the information at the bureau's branch office, in Room 337, in the Custom House, by giving the number of the item referred to.

12,006. COAL.—An American Consul in a European country reports that an electric light plant in his district, with a capacity of 4,000,000 kilowatts per year, is now using lignite which costs $2.65 per ton. However, it is desired to import American coal for use, and quotations are desired from shippers in the United States. Correspondence should be in German.

12,007. WROUGHT-IRON PIPES.—A report from an American Consular officer states that a local business man, who is able to furnish good references, is desirous of representing American manufacturers of wrought-iron pipes. Correspondence may be in English.

12,008. SCIENTIFIC APPARATUS AND INSTRUMENTS.—A business house supplying a foreign Government with telephone instruments and with both telephone and telegraph appliances, as well as conducting a wholesale and retail business in scientific apparatus for use in universities and scientific schools, optical and chemical offices, informs an American Consulate that it wishes catalogues in either Spanish or French of scientific instruments and apparatus of all kinds. Correspondence must be in Spanish or French.

12,009. WHEAT.—A report from an American Consul states that a steam flour mill in his district, with a capacity of 12,000 tons annually, produces wheat flour and is an for domestic consumption only. The company would be glad to import American wheat if prices were right and quotations in Germany are desired from shippers in the United States.

12,010. MEDIUM-PRICED AUTOMOBILES.—A business man in the United Kingdom has written an American Consulate that he is anxious to obtain an agency for a good medium-priced automobile. He states that he has had connections with the motor industry for a long period, and has facilities for keeping one or two cars for show purposes.

12,011. APPLES. An American Consul has forwarded a copy of a letter from a business firm in Scotland requesting to be put in touch with fruit growers, especially in the State of Virginia. This firm is willing to buy or advance an agreed sum, per barrel, on the presentation of bills of lading at any of the banks as mutually arranged. Correspondence is desired with American growers and shippers at the earliest possible date.

12,012. COTTONSEED AND LINSEED CAKE.—A report from an American Consul in the United Kingdom states that a resident of his district desires to enter into communication with American exporters of cottonseed and linseed cake. He states that he desires to handle these products on commission in a territory in which he has good connections.

12,013. STEAM TUG.—The American Consulate at Madrid, Spain, reports that proposals are requested by the Junta de Obras del Puerto de Gijon-Musel for the purchase of a steam tug for harbor use, the estimated cost of which is $16,850. Plans are on file in the Secretaria de la Junta de Obras del Puerto de Gijon-Musel, Gijon-Musel, Spain, where they may be seen. Bids must be sent to the same office before Dec. 22.

12,014. MACHINERY AND ACCESSORIES.—A firm of commission agents in Southern Europe informs an American Consulate that it would like to get in touch with American manufacturers of machinery and accessories of all classes. Correspondence should be in Italian, and references are furnished.

12,015. DOCK CONSTRUCTION. The American Consulate General at Ottawa, Canada, reports that the Department of Railways and Canals has advertised for tenders, to be received until Nov. 20, for the construction of about 6,500 linear feet of quay wall, foundations for buildings, sewers, dredging of harbor to a depth of forty-five feet at low water, and filling reclaimed areas, in connection with the Halifax Ocean Terminals Railway. Plans and specifications and form of tender may be seen and full information obtained at the offices of the Superintending Engineer, Halifax, Nova Scotia, and the Chief Engineer, Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa.

He Actually Came Back.

Some months ago a ragged, tired-looking young fellow accosted a reporter at 2 A. M. in Newspaper Row with the usual plea of "Can you spare a dime for a bite to eat, friend?" But he added: "If you think I want it for a drink, why you can buy me a bite yourself." The last remark won the reporter's heart, and a quarter went to the young fellow's hand. The surprise came a few days ago, when a neatly dressed young man accosted the same reporter, and held out a quarter, saying: "I knew that I'd see you some day, friend, so that I could pay you back." Although asked for his name, and what he was doing, he refused, saying only that he has at last found employment, and is on the way to comfort.—Boston Journal.

FARMERS LEARNING BUSINESS METHODS

Southwest Is Putting Its Greatest Industry on a Better Financial Basis.

AN AGRICULTURAL MECCA

Attractions That Drew 20,000 Men and Women to the Dry Farming Congress.

More than 20,000 farmers and their wives, coming from all parts of the Southwest, but the greater part of them from within the confines of Oklahoma, visited Tulsa during the International Dry Farming Congress held there in the week ended Nov. 1. It was the eighth meeting of the congress, which is held in a different locality each year.

Col. Frederick E. Farnsworth, who represented the American Bankers' Association at the congress, said on his return last week that in educational value the congress was worth millions of dollars to the country through the dissemination of better agricultural knowledge.

In addition to the exposition of dry farming products and farm machinery, six days were given over to addresses on agricultural subjects by Governors and Commissioners of several Western States, Presidents of agricultural colleges, representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture and State departments. There were also present representatives of the Governments of Canada, Brazil, Argentina, Turkey, Switzerland, Mexico, Belgium, Hungary, and Russia. An entire session of the congress was given up to a discussion of the financial side of farming.

The farmer is apt to think that the bank can be useful to him only when he deposits money or when he borrows it, and sometimes fails to realize how closely banking and farming are related. The banks must finance the purchasers of the farmers' products, the railroads that transport those products and the industries that manufacture from the world's necessities. They must loan money to the grain and stock men, to the cotton buyers, the mail order houses, the makers of farm machinery, the implement dealers and the local merchants who could not afford to give such liberal credit to farmers unless they could sell their own paper to the banks.

"The country banker is interested in farming because of his close relation to it; the city banker is interested because of his relation to the country banks, and all bankers are interested in agriculture because they realize that it is the country's most fundamental and important industry," said Col. Farnsworth. "They know that the soil is the country's greatest bank and that their own banks are simply warehouses where the wealth that comes from the products of the soil is stored in the form of money and credit. Census reports and soil surveys show that the capital of this greatest of banks is dangerously decreased and its reserves are being rapidly exhausted. More has been taken out of the soil than has been paid back, and because the bankers must share the burdens of all forms of business, they realize that here is a national problem in which they have not only an interest but a responsibility.

"Bankers must not only safeguard the present, but they must provide for the economic future. They see that the present disproportion between city and country population, between consumers and producers, between the demand and supply of farm products, cannot continue. The work of the government experiment stations and the agricultural colleges, as well as the experience of foreign countries, has demonstrated that certain methods result in improved quantity and quality of production. Measured by these results, it is evident that our farms are producing only about half their capacity. In other words, standards have been established which only part of the farmers have attained.

"The money in the banks belongs to the depositors, whose interests must be protected when credit is given to industrial and other projects for the creation of more wealth. The bank or the business that is run on the 'every man for himself' policy is now regarded as unsafe. The banker must not only observe the standards that co-operation among bankers has established, but must know whether the business men to whom he is expected to give credit are employing methods that make for safety and success.

"It is because recognized standards of agricultural production are not being reached that the banker regards farming as a great industry which must be put upon an organized business basis, as a foundation for the country's prosperity. This can be brought about only through the co-operation of all the agencies directly related to agriculture —the farmers themselves, the bankers, the railroads, the cattle men and others. Together they must work out ways of making the farms produce more and pay better, not for the sole benefit of the farmers, of the bankers, or of any other single class, but for the general prosperity in which all share in proportion to their productive capacity and economic function.

"The bankers have not done their share when they simply loan money for agricultural purposes. There must be some provisions for keeping the security good. It is suggested that bankers, grade farmers, grade merchants and manufacturers, so that a farmer who could and would pay his debts promptly would be known as A No. 1; another who could secure only a certain amount of credit would be No. 2; a third who had plenty of property but who was careless about paying, would be in another class, and so on. Now the farmer's ability, as well as his willingness, to farm and to borrow on a business basis depends on whether he has the every farmer for himself' idea, or whether he realizes his business relation to agriculture as an industry and his personal responsibility toward other producers, including bankers."

The attention of the bankers was first directed to the economic seriousness of the agricultural situation by Joseph Chapman, Vice President of the Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis. As President of the Minnesota Bankers' Association, Mr. Chapman heard so many discussions at bankers' meetings as to how difficult it was for farmers in their localities to get help on the farm, that he appointed a committee in 1909 to investigate. They learned that people were leaving the farms so rapidly that one-third of Minnesota's population lived in three cities; that only one-third of the State's tillable land was under cultivation, and that only four-tenths of 1 per cent. of the school children were being educated to become producers. In the four years since then the bankers of Minnesota have obtained an appropriation of more than $1,000,000 for agricultural and domestic science education. Their system of consolidated rural schools and high schools is so popular that they cannot find teachers enough. The bankers' association has also organized grain and stock contests, given prizes themselves and worked so successfully with other interests in the State that this year's value of Minnesota products shows an increase of $40,000,000, or an average of $200 a farm. Other bankers in other States have followed Mr. Chapman's lead, and now thirty-four out of the forty-eight bankers' associations have agricultural committees.

"The bankers are not attempting to tell the farmers how to farm," explained Col. Farnsworth. "There is plenty of knowledge on that subject, but the problem is how to get it put into practice. The Government farm demonstration method seemed most successful, so the bankers have led the movement in their various States to secure a farm adviser for every county. They have co-operated with farmers and local business men in establishing farm bureaus, and with the State agricultural colleges and Legislatures in securing increased agricultural and vocational training.

"The motives of the bankers were sometimes questioned at first, by those who failed to understand their relation to farming and the value of their business knowledge in developing it, but the results of their work have been so obviously worth while for all concerned that co-operation has dispelled criticism. The man who accuses the bankers of having 'something up their sleeves' is apt to be the man who would exhaust the soil fertility of his farm by short-sighted methods of cultivation, buy another, and repeat the process as long as money can be made from the increase of land prices, due to a growing population rather than to any value to proper conservation. If prosperity is to be permanent, neither the banker nor the farmer can profit to himself alone, nor at the expense of industry as a whole."

COUNTRY PRODUCE MARKETS.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 4,039 packages. Not much new business, but, with continued light arrivals and slightly firmer Western advices, the market ruled generally steady. Creamery, extras, 34@35c; firsts, 28@32c; seconds, 25½@27½c; thirds, 24@24½c; held, extras, 31@32c; firsts, 28@30c; seconds, 25@27c; State dairy, finest, 31@32c; good to prime, 27@30c; common to fair, 23@26c; process, extras, 25½@26½c; firsts, 24@25c; seconds, 22@23c; imitation creamery, firsts, 24@25c; factory, held, firsts, 23c; current make, firsts, 22½c; seconds, 21@22c; packing stock, held, No. 1, 22c; current make, No. 2, 20@21c; No. 3, 18@19½c.

CHEESE.—Receipts to-day, 1,909 boxes. A little more activity Friday, and the market firm on high-grade State cheese on basis of present quotations. Some lots held for more money, but only peddling movement. More Wisconsin coming this way, but present offerings of Western cheese on the market here are moderate. State, whole milk, held, colored, specials, 16½@16¾c; white, 16¼@16½c; colored, average fancy, 16c; white, 16c; State, whole milk, fresh, colored, specials, 16c; white, 16c; colored, average fancy, 15½@15¾c; white, 15½@15¾c; State, whole milk, undergrades, 12½@15½c; daisies, best, 16½@16¾c; Wisconsin, whole milk, flats, best, 16¾c; twins, best, 16½c; daisies, best, 16¾c; State, skims, held, specials, 12½@13½c; choice, 11¼@12¼c; fresh specials, 12@12¼c; skims, fresh, choice, 10¼@11½c; skims, poor to fair, 5@10c; State, full skims or badly defective, 1@4c.

EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 4,406 cases. The market closed quiet, but there was very little surplus of desirable fresh stock on the market. Some limits have been placed on these by Western shippers, and values are nominally unchanged, with a fairly steady tone. Storage eggs are quiet at the moment, but are held with confidence at unchanged prices. Nearby eggs continue in very light supply, but the demand is small, and very few of the receipts show uniformly new-laid qualities necessary to command top quotation. Fresh gathered, extras, dozen, 43@46c; extra firsts, 41@42c; firsts, 38@40c; seconds, 35@37c; thirds and poorer, 30@34c; dirties, No. 1, 23c; No. 2 and poorer, 23@27c; checks, good to choice dry, 25c; under grade, case, $6@$7.20; refrigerator, special marks, fancy, season's charges paid, 29½@30c; firsts, season's charges paid, 28½@29c; seconds, season's charges paid, 27½@28c; seconds to firsts, on dock, 29@28½c; lower grades, 22@27c; thirdies, 22@23c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery whites, fine to fancy, 60@65c; gathered whites, fine to finest, 58@62c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby whites, fair to good, 50@56c; small or otherwise seriously defective, 42@48c; Western gathered white, 12@58c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery brown, 40@50c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 40@46c.

"The New York Times Comes Nearer to the Ideal Combination of Quality and Quantity of Circulation than any other Newspaper in the Country"

New York, October 21st, 1913.

THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In giving you our first advertisement of the season we are renewing the advertising of THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE in The Times after a careful analysis of the results obtained from the advertising in the past two years. It does not often happen that a successful campaign can be made in one paper, but it is true in this case. As far as I can see, there is no mystery in the matter at all, for the reason that The Times comes nearer to the ideal combination of quality and quantity of circulation than any other paper in the country.

During the late baseball series Mr. Hugh Fullerton used a very practical method in your paper of rating the teams and the players, with a series of figures showing their efficiency in various departments. If this were done with all the newspapers, I would give The Times a percentage of 95 on quality of circulation, 85 on quantity, 95 on susceptibility of its readers to advertising in general, 95 on the confidence of readers in what they see advertised in The Times, and 90 on the proportion of advertising and reading matter. The chance of a reader seeing an advertisement might be governed by this.

I do not believe any other paper in the country, figuring on this basis, would show so high an average. I have just figured out also that in the metropolitan district in New York there are about 200,000 people who have an income of $2,500 a year and upward. The Times, I believe, has a circulation of something over 200,000. For our particular proposition we want to reach the 200,000 people who have an income of $2,500 a year and up, and I honestly believe that The Times reaches more of them than any other paper.

One of our difficulties is to find newspapers in which it pays to advertise.

Eccentricities of the Scottish Bench.

Mr. Ure has had some eccentric predecessors on the Scottish Bench, the most eccentric of all being Lord Eskgrove, a Judge at the beginning of last century. According to his colleague, Lord Cockburn, "a more ludicrous person than Eskgrove could not exist. People seemed to have nothing to do but tell stories of this one man. To be able to give an anecdote of Eskgrove, with a proper imitation of his voice and manner, was a sort of fortune in society." Condemning a tailor to death for murdering a soldier, Lord Eskgrove remarked: "Not only did you murder him, whereby he was bereaved of life; but you did thrust, or push, or pierce, or project, or propel the lethal weapon through his regimental breeches, which were his Majesty's." Sentencing two criminals for housebreaking with violence, after detailing the way they attacked the persons of the house, Eskgrove went on: "All this you did, God preserve us just as they were sitting down to dinner!"—London Chronicle.
